Platte City and E. B. Redd, as usual, did well by this work when I was with them, for they are friends to this good cause. H. Campbell Wells and Mrs. Nannie Krause especially helping us in our time of need. Campbell is one of the board of curators of the State University, one of the first business men of Northwest Missouri, is always in the lead in giving to good works, while Sister Krause has continued the annual offering of her good husband since his death, paying it this year weeks in advance. E. B. is doing good work for the brethren and is highly appreciated, while his sister, Miss Kate, is caring for his home since the loss that comes so heavy upon every true husband in such an hour. Then, too, the day of my visit the boys and girls gave nearly $40 to the Orphans' Home, for it was Easter Sunday; no one was loser by it, but many will be bettered and happified because of it.

Ravenswood, another school worthy of imitation, sends in its offering to our work every year, though we scarcely ever go near them, as does Sweet Springs, and this quickens us to urge others to be like-minded in this holy cause.

Remember that the books must be closed May 31st, and you must "show up" before that, or be "shown up" afterwards. Which will it be?

W. E. M. Hackleman has charge of the music and wants the singers to came prepared to join him in making the song services one of the most attractive features of the convention. Urge this in your schools.

Walker and Dr. I. N. Lunsford do not often forget us; in fact, have not for years, this time sending almost their full apportionment. Thanks to all.

The work of T. A. Hedges cannot be tabulated nor made to show upon paper, but is highly appreciated by those who long to see better things in school and church work, and his going into the general field will be a loss to our state, but a great gain to many needy churches at large. Missourians, give him a hearty Godspeed.

It is good news to all that our Meigs is home again after so many years in the foreign field, and many will come to California to greet him at our 25th anniversary. His "cut" in the souvenir program is one of the best.

Will not the schools now delinquent see that it is paid in full before the close of this month, making yourselves happy, the field force happier and the treasurer to rejoice? Now for the strong pull of the year by all.

Lucullus Sanford and Emerson had made great preparation for the rally. The Baptist brethren had prepared to join us, but the rain cut us out of every service, and as it was badly needed all rejoiced, even at some cost.

The county superintendents are trying hard for complete statistics, and you can help so much and easily if you will. We want the records correct, but it is in your hands to make them so, and now let every school see that the report is made and sent to this office and the county superintendent.

Did you see the program? Many write us that it is fine, but get ready to go in person and see it carried out; it will help you and the school both.

J. N. Dalby promises his primary department at the convention; think of that. It will be worth coming a long way for the primary workers to see him at work with them in his own unique way. H. F. DAVIS.

Children's Day.

Praise God for children! Let the church rejoice in the promise of their sweet, opening lives. Wonderful fruitage, fragmant and life-giving, is to be gathered from them in the years to come. The years to come are not far away. To-morrow the children are our tall sons and daughters and the next day are trees of life on either side of the river of God's flowing grace with healing and fruit for famishing nations. We may cultivate them now, must do it, for the richest of God's purposes are waiting for them.

Children's Day! Beautiful time. Hope of the church and earnest of good to nations in darkness that know nothing of the meaning of childhood. Let us make the first day of June the most gloriously fragrant day of the series since the beginning in 1880.

From the first children's offering of $1.13 the gifts have grown to be $330,375; from the children of one family the number has increased to 3,187 schools full of children. The children delight in this ministry. They understand the heart of Christ. To encourage them is to help them to enjoy him. To discourage them is to turn them away from him with rudeness. They are quick to sympathize with their little brothers and sisters in the dark lands. Give them the opportunity and therein renew your own youth. Let their pure lives add beauty to June flowers and let their songs emulate the birds' songs. Help them to have a rich offering of dimes and dollars to lay in their dear Savior's hand for his little ones who have not yet heard his beautiful name.

You will help them prepare for the day. The exercise, Silver Bells, is the best one of the series. Its music, recitations and readings are choice and reverent and charming. The Missionary Pockets are attractive and roomy. Birthday pennies will go into the box if you will remind the children of it. Many of them will give at least a dollar and join the dollar league. Many a school will give more than the twenty-five dollars that entitles it to a place in the Silver Jubilee League. These supplies are yours for the asking of F. M. Rains, Box 884, Cincinnati. They have been offered you: perhaps you have them and are nearly ready for the day. There is time yet to prepare if you do it quick! Do it, for your sake, the children's sake and for our dear Lord's sake, who wants his arms full of sweet children of strange lands that have never heard his sweet name.

Three Things.

The splendid growth in interest on the part of our Sunday-schools in Foreign Missions is very gratifying. The steady increase from 198 schools and $750 in 1881 to 3,187 schools and nearly $40,000 in 1899 is cause for pardonable pride. What we have done is proof of what we can do; what we can do the Lord expects us to do. This is the Lord's work.

The request for $50,000 from the Sunday-schools this year is a moderate and reasonable one. It will be a burning shame if we fall below it. But there must be no suggestion of doubt about it. Convinced of our duty, let us plan to do it.

1. Not a school that has heretofore contributed should drop out this year.

2. Every school should make a larger offering this year, even though the increase be but trifling.

3. New schools must be enlisted.

These three simple rules observed and we will raise the $50,000 and feel in the spirit of celebrating a glorious jubilee.

EMPLOY a practical painter. There's no economy in buying ready-mixed paint and employing a tramp to slather it on. The experienced painter will tell you that if you want paint which lasts you must use Pure White Lead. To be sure that it is pure, see that the packages bear one of the brands named in margin.

To Students and Christian Endeavorers.

The Foreign Society is inaugurating a campaign of missionary education among the young people. The work for the present will consist in placing missionary libraries in the churches. To this end a library consisting of sixteen standard works has been arranged. The regular list price of the collection is $20, but the Foreign Society is prepared to furnish it for just one-half that amount, or $10. The set cannot be broken, and cash must accompany the order in every case. The books are handsomely and uniformly bound and contain history, biography, reports, illustrations, and in fact, everything of interest to the reader concerning modern missions. They contribute to both instruction and devotion, and give a comprehensive survey of the field and its activities. No literature so illustrates the maxim of "truth stranger than fiction" as does that of missions. It is full of the heroic and the inspiring. It is the record of God's Spirit moving over the face of the earth. Students especially are asked to inaugurate a summer campaign. There is no money in it, but great good. Any student who can find the time will be able to place libraries in his own and neighboring churches. Mr. Alva Taylor will have charge of this work and will gladly answer inquiries from Endeavorers, pastors, students or any one else who is interested. In addition to the above the three Bethany Reading Circle books on missions by Bros. McLean and Lhamon will be sent for one dollar.

Children's Day.

The first Sunday in June is Children's Day. This should be the brightest and the greatest day in the whole year in the Sunday-school.

The main object of Children's Day is to secure offerings from the Sunday-schools to carry the gospel to those who sit in darkness and in the shadow of death. In order that all the members of the schools may be enlisted, exercises are sent out. It is expected that a concert will be given in the school either on the first Sunday in June or on some week night about that time. The purpose of the concert is to interest the children in the work and thereby to secure contributions for its support.

Last year 3,167 Sunday-schools contributed on Children's Day. Their offerings aggregated nearly $40,000. This year the society is aiming to enlist at least 4,000 schools and to secure $50,000. This can easily be done if ministers and superintendents and teachers will do their part.

Every school in the land should have some fellowship with Christ in his efforts to redeem the lost world. Not only every school, but every member of every school, should help. Children should be trained from earliest infancy to give as they are able, that the Lord's cause may be advanced.

Special pains should be taken to secure members for the One-Dollar League. Every one who gives as much as one dollar or collects one dollar joins this organization and secures an appropriate souvenir from the society.

The contents of the Birthday Box should be added to the offering on Children's Day. If in addition the collections throughout the month of May are added it will materially increase the offering.

The number of churches contributing to Home Missions this year that did not last year is 83, the number contributing an increased amount over last year is 61 and those contributing the same amount is nine.

We are afraid the storm of the first Sunday in May which swept over the most of the country will injure the offering greatly.

We urge our preachers to keep the offering before the people and not allow it to suffer loss.

State Mission Notes.

The dedication at Clear Creek was a day of victory and joy. We had an all-day service with three sermons and a money-raising speech, and if you think the "fat" secretary wasn't tired—well, you are mistaken. We had one addition at night. Brother Z. Mitchell is the pastor of the church, is doing his work well and is deservedly loved by his people.

The rally at Garden City was full of interest. C. E. Hill, state superintendent of Christian Endeavor, presented that interest Monday night to the delight of all. Then came O. P. Shrout, of Kansas City, with one of his great sermons on "The Problems of the Day." Dr. B. E. Lawson came with two addresses, on "Science and the Bible" to the interest and instruction of his hearers, followed Friday night with a splendid presentation of Home Missions, by M. J. Nicoson, the series closing with two sermons by the writer Saturday night and Lord's day morning. Then came the collection for state and Home Missions and the former gifts of the church to these great interests were increased one-third. The pastor, J. H. Jones, deserves the grateful thanks of his people, which they unstintedly give him for this feast of good things which he has given to his people.

I think the example he has set could be profitably followed by a great many churches, if not by all. Call them church institutes, let them be on practical educational lines, let the theorists stay at home, put practical men to the front; men who love the church and hunger and thirst for an increase of her power for good. My home was with Brother and Sister W. R. Brosfield, "the best place in the town."

At night I was at Osceola, county seat of St. Clair County. The church here has had a varied experience. It has enjoyed the services of some of the best men in the brotherhood, and the church would flourish, then would come intervals of inaction and it would nearly die. It is an important place. The Methodists (South) Presbyterians and Baptists recognize this and contribute each year to the salary of the preacher employed out of mission funds and keep their pulpits supplied with their very best men. This makes it impossible that any but first-class men can be of value in our own congregation. The church has now in its employ Brother King Stark, of Lamonte. He held a meeting for them recently, which added 43 to the membership, and is now preaching for them once a month. The man is all right; he is first-class in every respect; they could not have a better, but visiting them only once per month, which is the best he can do, is the bad part of it. He could make the church a tremendous power if he could be here all the time. It makes my very heart ache to see the openings for the building up of a church and know that we are powerless because of an empty treasury. So many churches, yea, so many preachers, are so utterly indifferent to all this matter that they do not even answer the letters which the secretary sends. I am not a prophet, but I believe that the time is coming when such preachers will search in vain for churches foolish enough to employ them.

As I came down the Clinton branch of the F. S. & Memphis, I noted the towns between Belton and Osceola, where we have no church: Raymore, Coleman, Daugherty Hartwell and Lowry City. Here are five towns in only seventy miles' run where we have no church, where we could have one if we only had the means to put the men in the field. Can it be that our people will not see that the price of our supremacy, as a people, is eternal vigilance? Brother minister, I beg of you that you bring the matter of state missions to the knowledge of your people, press it home on their hearts and insist that they help in this good work.

Brother S. D. Dutcher, assistant [corresponding secretary for Audrain County, writes that he is preparing to make a tour of all the churches in his county in the interest of state and county missions. How many more of the county secretaries will do this? This is the secret of success; we must get to the churches in some way. I do all I can, but it is only a drop in the bucket. I would like to hear from any county secretary who will do as Brother Dutcher is doing. I want to report as many counties as possible at the Moberly convention, wherein each and every church has given to state missions. I am happy to say that with one exception every church in Kansas City has given to state missions. I am still happier to say that every church in St. Louis has given to our work this year, and some will yet increase their offerings. The Beulah Church has largely increased its offering, and its C. E. Society is th ebanner society in all the state in its contributions for the redemption of Missouri. God bless their young hearts!

Colorado Springs, May 14.—Sixteen additions yesterday; three by baptism, the others by letter. It is about as large a work in this Western country to keep the disciples in the work, as it is to enlist them.—F. N. CALVIN.

Canon City, May 12.—We began preaching here Dec. 1, 1898, and during the 18 months we have paid off all the old debts and put in new pews and made repairs. We found the church in a divided and weakened condition and disheartened. To-day all departments of church work are moving nicely and grandly on. Over 60 have been added to our fellowship since Jan. 1900, the entire church a unit. We have been called indefinitely to serve as pastor. Any of our people coming to Canon City will find a kind and Christianly people with whom to live.—D. W. CONNER.

Canon City, May 14.—Three confessions since last report. We are to baptize them at Wednesday night prayer-meeting. Our midweek prayer-meetings are well attended.—D. W. CONNER.

CALIFORNIA.

Artesia, May 11.—Since last report 16 have been added; 15 by confession.—N. B. MCGHEE, pastor.

Riverside, May 7.—Four added yesterday by baptism and three by letter. Fifty at our regular services in 11 months.—A. B. HOUZE.

Redlands, May 7.—Two confesssions yesterday, both men, one being from Methodists. Since my coming to this mission church nine months ago God has blessed us with 18 additions by confession, letter and restoration. We have paid $30 on a S. S. debt. made final payment of $400 on a splendid church lot and hope soon to build on it. Though a mission church we have slighted no missionary offering, including India famine relief. We hold no pay socials or bazars, are not in the show business, nor do we "hold up" business men to pay our debts to the Lord; yet our debts are paid, and we are beginning to see how we may be rich toward God. A most promising young man who came to us from the Holiness people leaves shortly for the North, preparatory to entering Berkeley Bible Seminary. While lost to our little church he will not be lost to the cause. Brethren pray for our cause in this large and rapidly growing town.—PAUL MCREYNOLDS, pastor.

THE VALUE OF CHARCOAL.

Few People Know How Useful it is in Preserving Health and Beauty.

Nearly everybody knows that charcoal is the safest and most efficient disinfectant and purifier in nature, but few realize its value when taken into the human system for the same cleansing purpose.

Charcoal is a remedy that the more you take of it the better, it is not a drug at all, but simply absorbs the gases and impurities always present in the stomach and intestines and carries them out of the system.

Charcoal sweetens the breath after smoking, drinking or after eating onions and other odorous vegetables.

Charcoal effectually clears and improves the complexion, it whitens the teeth and further acts as a natural and eminently safe cathartic.

It absorbs the injurious gases which collect in the stomach and bowels; it disinfects the mouth and throat from the poison of catarrh.

All druggists sell charcoal in one form or another, but probably the best charcoal and the most for the money is in Stuart's Absorbent Lozenges; they are composed of the finest powdered Willow charcoal, and other harmless antiseptics in tablet form or rather in the form of large, pleasant tasting lozenges, the charcoal being mixed with honey.

The daily use of these lozenges will soon tell in a much improved condition of the general health, better complexion, sweeter breath and purer blood, and the beauty of it is, that no possible harm can result from their continued use, but on the contrary great benefit.

A Buffalo physician, in speaking of the benefits of charcoal, says: "I advise Stuart's Absorbent Lozenges to all patients suffering from gas in the stomach and bowels, and to clear the complexion and purify the breath, mouth and throat; I also believe the liver is greatly benefited by the daily use of them; they cost but twenty-five cents a box at drug stores, and although in some sense a patent preparation. yet I believe I get more and better charcoal in Stuart's Absorbent Lozenges than in any of the ordinary charcoal tablets.

"Fortune Favors the brave." It is also favorable to those who purify their blood in the spring, by taking America's Greatest Spring Medicine, Hood's Sarsaparilla. A clear head and a healthy body are given by its use.

Constipation is cured by Hood's Pills. 25 cts.

Dreaming and Doing.

V. B. BRECHT.

There are hours winged with the soul's emprise,
When we think of the good to do—
When we see ourselves with tender eyes,
That mirror the good and true.

And we dream of words we mean to say,
Or the men we mean to be,
While over our mortal spirits play
God's lights of charity.

But out in the world our traitor lives
Are pitched in a minor key,
And we play God false, though our spirit strives
For a nobler destiny.

What then? Shall we cease to build
Though we seem to shape no spire?
Ah, no; we may strive, as God has willed,
Till our mortal bodies tire.

Till the soul at last from its goad set free
Shall vanish from mortal eyes
To its dwelling-place by the Jasper Sea
In the gardens of Paradise.

Beware of the First Drink!

When a young man in the prime of life lifts to his lips the poisonous chalice of destruction and death, and sneers and laughs at the warning words of his friends, his course to ruin and blackness, to the vortex of misery and death, is like the speed of the devastating cyclone.

To more pathetically illustrate the rapid strides of a drunkard to an untimely grave, I will relate an awful scene that took place on the shores of the Mississippi River a few years ago.

Many know of the dreadful whirlpool on the Mississippi, near Memphis, Tennessee. Its suction affects the water for several hundred yards around; and those who dare venture within its circle rarely ever escape—they are generally drawn into its funnel and perish.

On the shore opposite this whirlpool, one fine day while the birds were flitting from tree to tree and all nature seemed to be enjoying itself (in the month of August, 1879), a party of young ladies and gentlemen agreed to take a boat ride on the seemingly peaceful bosom of the Mississippi.

They were young and thoughtless, and not accustomed to the dangers of water, the young men could not apply the oars as effectually as those accustomed to the water; but they thought nothing of the danger. All nature seemed to smile; the sunbeams played upon the bosom of the water; calmness had thrown its oily wand upon the mighty waters, and they slept. The river presented a smooth, unruffled surface, the most timorous would have scarcely suspected that danger, in the most terrific form, was lurking just beneath the surface; but so it was, while the mirrored and glassy surface slept without a ripple. Just beneath the circling current formed by the suction or whirlpool, at that rate of the tide, swept round and round with fearful velocity.

The evening came; the young people assembled on the shore. The mellow moonbeams would tremble for a moment and then sleep on the calm, unagitated breast of the river. The boat was unmoored, and the party gaily entered; the boat was moved from the shore; it was soon under way; it was rapidly propelled by those at the oars. But it was soon discovered that it could skim gently over the bosom of the deep when the motion of the oars had ceased. They allowed the boat to glide gently along—they felt no danger—all was thoughtless hilarity. The motion of the boat became gradually (but to them insensibly) more rapid; they were moved by the influence of the whirlpool. The motion was rotary; they were insensibly drawn round in a huge circle with awful rapidity; they soon came round almost to to the same place from whence they started. At this moment, the only one in which it was possible for them to be saved, a number of persons on shore who knew their danger discovered them and instantly gave the alarm; they entreated those in the boat to make one desperate effort and reach the shore if possible then. When they talked of danger the party in the boat laughed at their fears and passed along without making an effort to deliver themselves from impending ruin. The boat moved on, the rapidity of the motion continually increasing, and the circle around which it was drawn by its rotary movement becoming smaller. It soon appeared a second time to those on the land. Again they manifested their anxiety for their safety, but who if saved it could only be done by their own exertions, for those on the shore, even if they launched a boat and rushed into the very jaws of peril could not save them while they were determined to remain inactive, and be carried by the accelerated velocity of the water. They still moved along in merriment, peals of laughter were often heard—sneers were the only thanks given to those who would with delight have saved them. For a time they continued to move around in their thoughtlessness.

But the time began to ebb; presently they heard the far-off roar of the tremendoas vortex below, like the wails of howling demons—it sounded like the hoarse bellowing of an earthquake, or a distant sea in a storm. By this time the boat ever and anon would quiver like an aspen leaf, and then shoot like lightning through the now troubled water. The roar of the awful abyss was the knell of death—solemnity now began to banish mirth from the countenance of those in the boat.

They half suspected that danger was near—soon they felt it. When they came again in sight of land their cries would have pierced the heart of stone. O! help! help! for mercy sake, help us! were the exclamations of despair; but alas! no human aid could reach them.

A thick black cloud, as if to add horror to the scene of distress, at this moment shrouded the heavens in darkness, forked lightning gleamed and the hoarse rebellious artillery of heaven boomed across the roaring and blackened water. The oars were plied with every nerve; they were snapped, and their fragments were hurled into the yawning abyss. The boat, now trembling, now tossed, now whirled suddenly round, now lashed by the spray, was presently thrown with violence into the jaws of death, open wide to receive it and the mortals whom it carried. Oh! think of the feelings of those on shore, when, far away upon the awful waters, by the vivid flashes of lightning a party of their friends, young and in the morning of life, could be seen hurrying to an awful fate; and at intervals could hear their heart-rending cries of despair! Thus they perished. And thus perish thousands in the vortex of dissipation, who at first sail smoothly round the verge of it, who were scarcely as they supposed within the sphere of its influence, and who would laugh at those who would warn them of their danger, and still sail round and round, drawing nearer to the awful precipice, their motion growing more rapid, until at last, when too late, they see their danger, but cannot reform, and they are plunged into the yawning chasm which opens wide to receive its victims. I ask those who are young, like myself, to lay this sketch up in the storehouse of their memory—those who thoughtlessly tamper with the hydra monster. It may perhaps save some—may save all—may it save many who read it from a drunkard's untimely death, from filling a drunkard's grave.

The Echo Song.

OLNEY BONDURANT.

Swirling, floating ev'rywhere—
Sweetest music in the air—
Born of joys that hearts o'erflow,
Joys that only birds can know,
Came like sparkling showers the notes,
Down on the hills from silver throats.

But, soon gone, the silence fell
On the hills and shady dell,
But their song in careless glee
Tuned all things anew for me,
And I penned their simple song
Of freedom from care and wrong.

Mine the words but theirs the song,
Mine the joy they'd known so long,
But the world cannot divine
The link 'twixt their song and mine,
E'en had the words I then wrote
Been perfect echoes of their note.

A Helpful Suggestion.

BY S. J. H.

There is an art in doing many of the homely duties, and we can all remember, perhaps, the tedious old-time way of cleaning silver; and it was not considered at all good housekeeping to entrust it to the servants, for there were precious heirlooms of silver handed down from many generations.

My mother used to suffer with her hands for days after cleaning the silver, because of using prepared chalk and ammonia, which roughened the hands and made them sore, but the method now is such an improvement that instead of polishing each piece separately, rubbing it for hours, it may be cleaned as effectively in a few minutes. In the busy life of the housewife of to-day, knowledge is made to take the place of labor in the intelligent household. Instead of taking each piece separately, put the whole of it in a pan kept for the purpose and cover the silver with a cleansing suds made of hot rainwater with a tablespoonful of pearline dissolved into it, and rub them around and about carefully in this suds, then take out immediately while hot and lay each piece on a soft linen cloth and rub each piece with a piece of chamois skin.

Silver should never be rubbed with flannel or cotton cloth. When not used it should be wrapped in tissue paper and not exposed to light or air, as it will tarnish it.

A good practice is to each day after using such as spoons, forks, butter knives, etc., should be put in a pan and hot water poured over them, to which pearline has been added and then wipe them off quickly with old newspapers. It is wonderful how bright it will make them and plated ware looks like the real silver. I know good housekeepers who adopt this simple method the year round, and the silver looks as if it was just bought—the knives, forks, spoons, etc., after using the papers she has a soft linen towel which she brushes them off with.

A Reverie.

R. J. TYDINGS.

A few days ago, in the early afternoon, I took a stroll over the Pennsylvania Ave. Bridge across the Anacostia River. I proceeded leisurely along southward on the eastern side of that stream, through that lovely valley of vegetable gardens, cozy dwellings, clumps of green trees and meadow-like commons. The songs of birds, rarely heard now around this city since the irrepressible and pugnacious English sparrow has about monopolized every bird habitation, attracted me to where a fringe of maples, elms and sycamores, skirting the edge of the river, cast a variegated shade over a line of skiffs or small boats which were empty and idle and chained to trees along the bank. It was an ideal May day. The sun shone bright and warm, and the sky was the bluest of blues. The south wind blew just brisk enough to cause small waves at short intervals to dash musically against the gravelly shore and the sides of the boats, rocking the latter with a motion so gentle and regular as to suggest a fitting accompaniment to the lullaby son of a mother hushing her babe to sleep. The surroundings suggested restfulness and invigoration, from the mere absence of all noise and confusion, save that emanating from nature itself. We sometimes need such quietude among nature's glories. It gives us a good season in which to contemplate the greatness, the omnipotence and wondrous works of the Creator.

I stepped into one of these empty boats and sat down lazily, intent on nothing except a half conceived desire to absorb all the ozone I could and take my time in the enjoyment of ethereal, vernal spring. After walking awhile my feet often seem feverish and uncomfortable in my shoes, and to get even more pleasure from the limpid waves, I pulled off shoes and stockings and put my bare feet down into the water, receiving a decided sense of exhilaration from it.

I had not been long thus enjoying myself in a way free and open to tramp as well as millionaire, when two rather rough-looking youths came along and hastily detached a boat near by and with one piece of an oar proceeded to try to work it further out into the water. They did not get it very far, and it may be that they did not try to do so, but they jumped and kicked around over the boat and dashed and splashed the water until there was soon a great change in its appearance from a few moment's ago. It is needless to say that I heartily wished them away, as they sadly interfered with my blissful quietude. They completely ignored me, and contined to give ample evidence of the exuberance of their animal spirits. It was not long before their vigorous actions caused the water to become badly muddied up. I looked down at my feet, which before seemed so clean, and they were becoming—well not so clean as they were. But as there is an end to all thing earthly, so after a time these youngsters tired of this sport and left my vicinity and me to my reverie.

As I sat there I thought, Is not this little incident of to-day illustrative of one phase of the life of one who is trying to follow after the great Exemplar? We turn aside from the monotonous and feverish turmoil of daily life; we are attracted by the birds, i. e., the Sunday-school children, with their bright and beaming faces, tidy dresses and sweet songs, toward the house of God; the boat—God's boat on the River of Life, anchored securely to the love and favor of the Most High by the chains of consecrated prayers, holy vows and earnest work of good men and women. We enter and find it shaded and softened in its surroundings and appointments by that reverential awe and respect so appropriate at the place appointed for the worship of Jehovah. We sit as it were in a receptive mood and are refreshed by the laving of the waters of regeneration, the pure simple gospel, the sweet songs that are sung and by the plain injunctions of our Savior which are pointed out by the preacher.

We feel that it is good to be there. We are thus strengthened and invigorated for the onward journey along life's pathway. But the youths who stirred up the water are not absent, sometimes, from the illustration, as we will see. It is when preachers indulge in speculation in their sermons and discuss doctrinal differences between the children of God, that we see the two youths appear. Very seldom it is that this method of preaching does not muddy the scriptural and religious waters. All the while the foot-sore pilgrim is needing and waiting for the pure, simple, clear and undisputed teachings of our Savior, his understanding is being clouded with confusion, if not doubt of it all! May the Source of all wisdom help our preaching brethren to keep their gospel teachings clean, pure and easily understood, that there may be indeed many who will

Pilgrims of the Air.

This charming incident occurred about twenty-eight years ago. It is, however, too delightful a picture to be turned over to the past. Welcome the birds. Spare the birds. Feathered innocence, beauty and melody should no longer be sacrificed to the Moloch of fashion.

At the time of the great fire in Chicago, some years ago, a very pretty incident happened.

A family living near the lakeshore had a large number of pet birds. They had added to their parlor a long, narrow room, with glass windows reaching from ceiling to floor, for the pleasure of these feathered friends. People often stopped to see the pretty creatures fluttering about, to hear their songs or to watch them as they bathed. At daybreak the house was full of music. It was like a concert in the wildwood.

One afternoon, the week of the fire, a cloud of fluttering wings moved wearily up the street. Presently these homeless ones caught sight of their happy cousins in the beautiful glass house. It gave them fresh courage. Some even tapped for admittance. It was a pitiful plea for rest and food from these, doubtless their kinsfolk.

The ladies of the house without delay shut off the home birds into what might be called their back parlor.

Then, opening a window, they stepped aside that the tired travelers might feel free to enter. Ready to drop from fatigue and hunger, they went in.

They could not at once eat or bathe. They lay panting, grateful for rest and safety. There were perhaps twenty of them, and nearly all canaries.

When these tender wayfarers had rested and eaten supper, the home birds—and there were nearly fifty of them—fluttered briskly in with hearty greetings. It was charming to see what cheerful, nay, even tender welcome they gave.

Fortunately, there was a goodly store of birdseed and shelter given to these plumy guests until other homes were found. This is a true story, for the somebody who writes it saw it all.—Our Little Ones.

Recipe for Peacemaking.

Our inner world shapes the outer for us. Our relations to others are constantly taking character from our disposition toward them. We foresee some difficulty with some one we have to work with, and if we cherish thoughts of peace and kindness toward them, we shall come through it without much friction. Something from the warmth of the heart warms the atmosphere, and renders it easy for us to make the crooked straight and the rough places smooth. Contrariwise, if we dwell only on the annoyances and provocations we have received or expect it is impossible to avoid a collision of feeling. We have taken the matter by the wrong handle, and can get no good of it. Quarrels and arguments alike are rooted more deeply than in circumstances. They go down to habit of mind and character.—Sunday-school Times.

Ancient Arithmetic.

Probably the oldest copybook for home lessons in arithmetic was recently unearthed in Egypt. The papyrus, which was found in excellent condition, dates from the period about 1700 B.C.; that is, about one hundred years before the time of Moses, or about 3,600 years ago. It proves that the Egyptians had a thorough knowledge of elementary mathematics almost to the extent of our own. The papyrus has a long heading. "Directions How to Attain the Knowledge of all Dark Things," etc. Numerous examples show that their principal operations with entire units and fractions were made by means of addition and multiplication. Subtractions and divisions were not known in their present form, but correct results were obtained, nevertheless.

Equations are also found in the papyrus. Among the examples given is this one: Ten measures of barley are to be divided among ten in such a manner that each subsequent person receives one-eighth of a measure less than the one before him. Another example given is: There are seven men, each one has seven cats, each cat has caught seven mice, each mouse has eaten seven grains of barley, each grain of barley would, if cultivated, have yielded seven measures of barley. How much barley has been lost in that way?

The papyrus contains calculations of area, the calculation of the area of a circle and its transformation into a square, and finally calculations of the cubic measurements of pyramids.—The College Outlook.

A Wise Mother.

S. ROSALIE SILL.

We know a woman who, while yet young, was left a widow with an only child of perhaps a dozen years of age, a boy of great promise.

The mother's first thought after the first bitter anguish of bereavement had in a measure subsided was: "How can I hold my boy?"

Everything was wisely planned. Her son must receive an education, consequently must be much away from her. She would keep the farm and have a bright, cheery home for him to return to at the close of each week.

In order to perform her arduous duties she needed greater strength of muscle, so she practiced the best methods laid down for such improvement. She must not fall behind in her reading, for then she would not be companionable for her boy, so a regular course of reading was laid out—they both reading the same works, and afterward discussing their merits and demerits—thus gaining a larger knowledge of them. The best of literature was chosen, solid and improving, with now and then something of lighter vein—yet always pure—by way of relaxation.

This was a wise resolution, the selection of the reading for her boy, for during the formation period of a boy's life books have much to do with him.

The mother always dressed with a thought as to pleasing her son, inexpensively, yet with an artistic taste, wearing her hair in a becoming mode and adorning herself with a bit of bright ribbon or delicate lace. "That is for my boy," she would say, "I want, when he thinks of me, it should be associated with something dainty and cheerful." And thus the years sped on and the son is a young man now, helping to do the world's work. Sometimes the press speaks of him as "a rising young man."

We saw the mother and son not long ago. She is fair and comely, with an elasticity and gracefulness rarely ever seen excepting in younger women by many years—for she is nearly fifty now—having a mind well stored with knowledge, for in her reading she has never fallen behind.

Does the son appreciate all the mother has done for him?

If a loyal devotion, a ready acquiesence to her lightest desire, a manly, protective care over her denotes that he thinks his mother the best and truest of all that stands for a noble womanhood, then he fully appreciates.

Continue at It.

As you go down the Rhine they show a dismantled keep on the further bank, and they tell you the history of the place. It seems invincible even in its ruins. The invading army only had one gun, but they took the castle with that one gun. Instead of directing the fire of the gun on all sides, running the fire along the parapets all day, though the gun grew hot in its fire, the gunner fired direct at one spot. Those in the castle wondered what the new tactic was, and some of them laughed too soon at the new departure. All day, boom after boom, the gun blazed at the one spot. When morning dawned the gunner was in his position again, and the muzzle swerved not an inch from the old way, and again he played at the one place, at the one point. The third day the splinters began to fly, and at last, in the afternoon, about three o'clock, after thirty hours' continuous firing at the one spot, the walls fell in a cloud of dust. Ah, they are saying: "Preacher, if you wish to be up-to-date, run your gun over all things, science and philosophy, the higher criticism, and the questions of speculation." No, I will not. I will aim till the last day at the heart of man, with the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ. Take away your cobweb spinning, take away your philosophy, devil, I will play with the one gun, that will yet play havoc on thy fortifications, and bring them to the dust; it is the Lord Jesus. Speak it out, the Lord Jesus, the God-man, the complete Savior; I ask you to come to him; I ask you to fling your heart open to him as these people of Antioch did, and let him in.

The lecture on liquid air at Chautauqua last summer aroused a great deal of interest. At the close of the lecture a great many people, essecially schoolmarms, crowded to the platform. There was imminent danger that the apparatus might be injured by the crush. A vain attempt was made to clear the platform by asking the people to withdraw. Finally, the lecturer, who had about a quart of liquid air left in his can, said he could clear the space easily. He poured the air from the can out on the platform. It ran about in every direction, and the August day seemed suddenly changed into a Dokota January. It was amusing to see the scurrying of the crowd. A new use had been discovered for liquid air.

"No," said Mr. Douglas very decidedly, "I shall stay where I am. Say what you wish to say."

"Very well. I was always mistreated in livin,' an' it's meet for me to be mistreated in dyin'," said the old woman sharply. "Let 'im stay, then. I don't keer. You're who I wants to talk to, plum pudding, so listen to a dyin' ole woman. Frank, I done you awful mean when you was little."

"I know you did, Nance, but everything's turned out all right, so there's no use to talk about that."

"But don't you know that I stole you from your pap an' mommy and left you on a furreign doorstep, and later, on another stranger's steps? An' most of the time I was gittin' money fur supportin' you. Don't you know that?"

"Of course I know it, Nance, but I'm happy, now, and am I going to be remembering what happened so long ago? All I want to remember now is that you are suffering. Where are you hurt, Nance? Have they done anything for you?"

"That's nothin' to you, child," said the other sternly. Nobody can do nothin' for me."

"Oh, yes, somebody can—God, you know. If you have been wicked you are the very one of all others that he cares about, and he would like for you to love him; it would please him more than the love of a person that had never done wrong. Just think what it would mean to him if you began to love him after all you have done; it would be like finding the lost sheep that he thought would never come back!"

"How the child talks!" exclaimed the old woman fretfully. "A perfect babe in the woods! La, me! A person would think, to hear you, that you'd already forgive me before I ast you to."

"Why, I have Nance. I forgave you long ago. When I first began to suspect that it was you who had kept me thirteen years from the love of my parents, and that you had caused my father and mother thirteen years of agony and suspense—oh, Nance, how could you? But when I began to understand it, I grew afraid I would hate you. I wanted to hate you."

"What was to hender?" asked Nance roughly. "I never ast you not to hate me."

"But Jesus asked me not to hate you. You were my enemy, and the enemy of my parents. But God told me to love my enemies. He told me if I didn't forgive you, he wouldn't forgive me. Well, it would have killed me to know I was unforgiven. So I had to forgive you. I was so afraid I couldn't at first. And I just prayed and prayed that I could forgive you. And I said: 'Oh, I can't forgive her!' And I couldn't at first. But I kept praying for a forgiving spirit, and I found out the way; it was to forget what you had done, at least not to think about it. Because I just wanted to think about what you had done and gloat over it. But I drove it from my mind. And so I came to forgive you. And the next thing was to learn how to love you; I learned that, too."

Nance laughed wildly: "You little fool! You love me." And the tears rushed to her eyes.

"That's why I'm here now," said Frank. "It's not because you are dying. I don't believe you are dying, Nance. I hope you will not. I will pray for you to get well. Nance let me pray for you. Many and many a time I have thought: 'Oh, if I could do something for Nance, to show that I love her as I should.' Now, let me do this for you."

"Listen here, Frank," said the old woman, "or Mary, for that's your name, why do you think I was on that train? I was following you to kill you!"

Frank shrank away as from a serpent. She saw the old woman's eyes fastened upon her, but there was no malice now in those dim eyes, there was something akin to remorse. And the haggard face was troubled.

"Oh, Nance! But why should you want to kill me? Did I ever do you any harm?"

"You! What harm could you do me? Of course not. But I meant to kill you. Now go away and leave me, and hate me as much as you please."

For a moment or so Frank clung close to her father, not knowing what to do; and Mr. Douglas stood as rigid as a statue. But the true knowledge came to the child's mind as she waited—the knowledge of what would please her Master. So she released her father's hand, which she had seized in terror. She bent forward as she still rested on her knees. And she put both her arms about the prostrate form. "You poor wicked Nance! And shall I pity you any less because such a dark thought was in your mind? How miserable it must have made you! What can I do to show that I have forgiven you?"

"Wait," said Nance in a smothered voice. "Look!" She drew a dagger from under the bedclothes. "Why do you think I sent for you just now? To ask your forgiveness? No! To strike you down with this when you come. Then I would of killed myself. No power on earth could of saved you; your father standing right there couldn't of saved you. Take it." Frank took the dagger and looked at it curiously.

"Strike me here!" cried the other wildly, putting her bony hand upon her breast. "Little fool take your arms away! Don't you understand I was going to murder you? Don't you know I aint fit for the vilest person on earth to come near? Well, send me to the penitentiary, or do what you please with me. I've gone crazy at last, I guess!"

"No, no, Nance," said Frank, and she was so near that she whispered her words in the other's ear, "you are coming to yourself, to your true self. When you were a little child you couldn't have thought of killing any one, but you have been bad, so wicked

—you have grown worse all the time;all the time more unlike what God expected you to be. But now you are changing back again. And oh, Nance, live and be good, and undo all you have done. And you will never feel that you have no friends if you give up your wicked friends, for I will love you. Papa will too, won't you, papa? And mamma and Mrs. Dew. Why, we are Christians, and that's what it means to be a Christian, to love our enemies and our brethren and God. It's all love, and anything that is not love is outside of God, because God is love!" And Frank kept whispering to the old woman, till the tears poured down her withered cheeks, and at last she put her arms about the little form that was bending over her, and you would have supposed, had you seen them, that they were the best of friends in the world!

"Where is your mother?" Nance asked at last. "I want to go to her. Can I? Yes! I'm not hurt a bit. I was pretending, so I could git you in my power! Mr. Douglas, take me to her. I want to tell her why I hated her and her child. She doesn't know. Nor you. It all come through a great wrong you and her committed. You ain't had all your trouble without a cause. You two caused it! And after I've told her, you can do what you please with me, but bless this child's heart! I'm fool enough to think that she does keer a little fur me, an' I'd die fur her in a minit!"

THE TWELVE SENT FORTH.*

Many events of interest occurred between the time of the last lesson and this one. Wearied with his arduous work of teaching and healing, at the close of the discourse in which Jesus gave utterance to the exquisite parable we have been studying, he bade the disciples push their boat out into the lake and row to the opposite shore. He felt sadly the need of a season of rest. Scarcely had they left the land till the Master, exhausted as he was, fell asleep in the stern of the boat, and even the storm did not disturb his repose. When, in answer to the agonizing appeal of his fearful disciples, he stilled the tempest with a word, they felt they stood in the presence of the Lord of the whole earth, and they were filled with a great fear and awe.

Reaching the Gadarene shore, on the eastern side of Galilee, Jesus wrought the miracle of healing the two desperate demoniacs, but was besought by the people to depart from their coasts, and turned sadly back again to the place whither he had come. In Capernaum he raised the little daughter of Jairus from the dead, healed the woman with the issue of blood, gave sight to two blind men and cast out the demon from the dumb man. He then visited Nazareth a second time, but was received with no more favor than at his first visit, a year or more earlier in his ministry. No violence, however, was attempted against him, for the knowledge of the mighty works he had wrought was sufficient to forbid that they should lay violent hands on him. Sadly he left Nazareth once more, their unbelief making it possible for him to work but few miracles of grace among them. This brings us to our present lesson.

Jesus made many tours through the cities and villages of Galilee, carrying joy and hope into every place where he was welcomed. He now made another of these pilgrimages, spending probably several months in going over the now familiar ground of his beloved Galilee. Sickness fled before him, and the message of the new kingdom to be established fell upon the heart of many a weary Israelite, who had, like Simeon, been waiting for the fulfillment of the nation's hope. But Jesus knew that his time was short—that the enmity of the Jerusalem scribes and Pharisees would not much longer be balked of its revenge. But a few months more could he spend in Galilee, and then he must set his face toward Judea, where he must confront the bitter foes already thirsting for his blood. He thought not of himself, however. "When he saw the multitudes, he was moved with compassion on them, because they were distressed and scattered as sheep not having a shepherd." His people were without spiritual guides. Those who ought to care for their souls were seeking their own glory, and were arrayed against the very Messiah whom it was their duty to proclaim to their nation. Israel was like a field of ripened grain, ready to be gathered unto God in a closer faith and surer peace. But the reapers were trampling the golden grain under their feet, and were about to kill the Lord of the harvest himself. The soul of the Master was strangely moved by this sight, and he enjoined on the disciples that they should pray for more laborers to enter the field and reap. But was he not about to send them forth to be such reapers? Certainly; and that is why he told them to pray for reapars. This was the surest and speediest way to put the impulse to go into their own hearts. A prayerless church will never be a missionary church. But let the church get to praying earnestly for missionaries to go forth, and there will soon be many to offer themselves for this high calling.

He had not long to wait. The twelve soon felt the resistless call to service, and offered themselves as messengers. He gave them their commission, and they went forth to carry the news of the coming kingdom into every corner of Galilee. Mark tells them that Jesus sent them out by twos. They would be the braver and more cheerful in each other's company than if alone. If one can chase a thousand, two can put ten thousand to flight. Probably Peter and his brother Andrew were companions. James and John, sons of Zebedee, would hardly choose other fellow-workers than themselves. Philip and Bartholomew, who is also called Nathanael, were close friends from the beginning, and would naturally be partners now. Thomas the twin and Matthew the publican; James the son of Alpheus, and Judas Iscariot found themselves comrades in this service. Even the companionship of the zealous Simon could not work upon the callous soul of Judas so as to drive out the demon of avarice which had found a place there. It is possible that already he had begun to cherish some thought of making merchandise of his position as treasurer of the little company of disciples

These twelve humble men the Master sent out upon their first mission after his resurrection, when the world should be the field of their activity, and all men the objects of their gracious message. For the present they are to confine their ministry to Israel. The time is too short for them to thoroughly canvass even the restricted territory in which their own people dwell, much less to visit the Gentile and Samaritan districts. The works of mercy he had wrought they were to continue, that men might know that they were truly his disciples, and that their message was the same that they had heard from Jesus' mouth. "Heal the sick, cleanse the lepers, raise the dead, cast out demons; freely ye have received, freely give." In the verses succeeding our lesson we read of the fuller instruction given his disciples by the Master. They were to tarry not for preparation. The time was short. They must go as they were, without money, store of food or raiment, trusting to the people to whom they bore the tidings of grace to supply their wants. The community or individual that denied them hospitality would thereby lose all hope of the divine favor. The disciples were to expect persecution, but were not to be discouraged, nor to be troubled beforehand as to what answer they would make to accusations. The Spirit of God would teach them what to say. If any city would not hear, they were to go to another, and thus hasten through the land, that as many as possible might hear the tidings before the final rejection of the Messiah by his nation.

How much time was occupied by the disciples in their journeyings through the country we do not know. They would probably make frequent reports to Jesus of the progress of their work, which was pursued at intervals until the time of his final departure from Galilee. We know from the account of Luke that the similar mission of the seventy, some months later than this, was crowned with much success; and we have no reason to doubt that a multitude of the people of Galilee heard with joy the preaching of the kingdom, and that the disciples relieved a multitude of sufferers by the exercise of the power bestowed upon them by the Master. We are sure that if they at all realized the magnitude of the grace of which they were the objects, in being called as disciples of the Son of God, their feet were swift to bear the tidings of the kingdom, their tongues eager to tell the story of the Messiah, their hands diligent in alleviating the distress of men. O that the church to-day might take to her heart the appeal which is a rebuke to indolence and selfishness, and a stimulus to all noble and kindly endeavor: "Freely ye have received, freely give!"

DRUNKENNESS CURED.

An eminent St. Louis physician has given a positive answer to the oft asked question, is drunkenness a disease, or is it simply a temptation that cannot be resisted by a vast number of the human race? The physician in question is Dr. Ozias Paquin, who for years has been a practicing physician in the City of St. Louis. He has answered this question by taking five of the worst drunkards that could be found and cured them of all further appetite for intoxicating drinks. The five cases were all beyond middle age and they had sunk into the deepest pit of drunkenness, with the odor of drink about them so obnoxious that it was almost impossible to stand within speaking distance. He not only cured them of all desire for intoxicating drink, but at the same time placed upon their cheek the flush of health and into their eyes the light of happiness, and took from their person the odor of whiskey. It was almost a miracle, for he had raised five cases from degradation into the sunshine of health and happiness. Dr. Paquin has cured hundreds of patients who were relapses from other treatments, and in every instance he cured these patients, and they have remained cured for months and years. It can therefore be said that the Paquin Treatment is a permanent cure, and not a temporary one, for the patient never relapses to his former condition. We know of no more humane work being done at the present time than that which Dr. Paquin is doing, and it is the duty of every reader to assist Dr. Ozias Paquin in his noble work, and if any reader has brother, sister, husband, father or friend in whose system lurks the disease of drunkenness, he should at once send their name to Dr. Paquin or see that they either visit or place themselves in communication with the Ozias Paquin Immune Co., Suite 1113 Chemical Bldg., St. Louis. The reader that does this will certainly be doing a christian act, for no matter how hopeless the case may seem, and no matter how many other treatments have unsuccessfully been tried, the method known as Ozias Paquin Treatment will perfect a cure, dispelling all desire for drink, and at the same time will place the constitution in a robust and healthy condition.

TOPIC FOR JUNE 3.

HOW TO BE A GOOD NEIGHBOR.

(Luke 10:25-37.)

Is it worth while to be a good neighbor? Yes, for contact with our fellowmen makes up at least half of life. To know how to come into touch with others; to know how to walk in one's own little circle of rights without sticking one's toes out into the neighbor's circle of rights to be trodden upon and crushed, as toes always are that trespass; to know how to rub people the right way except on rare occasions when they ought to be rubbed the wrong way; to possess that consummate tact and righteousness that knows how to say the right thing at the right moment and never to do the wrong thing at any moment; in short, to possess that highest of all possible arts known to humanity, the art of getting on well with one's fellows, with the least possible amount of friction and the greatest possible amount of helpfulness and uplift—all this is the attitude we ought to assume toward our neighbors.

There are those always on the qui vive to catch a penny, those always on the qui vive for a chance to say a bright thing to get themselves admired, those always on the qui vive for an opening toward personal advancement, and some few always on the qui vive for a chance to help somebody. It is a beautiful sight to see one thus waiting for a chance to do good. People of this sort never leave any one lying by the road to Jericho.

O, how many of the roads to Jericho there are! None of us but at some time or other has trodden the road and fallen among thieves. None of us but often treads that road and either passes the victim by on the other side or lifts him up and helps him. Which do you do?

O, no doubt most of those who pass by on the other side do so because they are too busy or too thoughtless, or preoccupied. They would not willingly leave anybody in distress; but they do not think! So many a poor victim is left. Or, perhaps, many are left by the roadside because the passers-by feel that the city, or the county, or the charity organization society ought to care for them. Scientific charity is doing a vast deal to lift up the pauper classes and set them on the animal of self-help and put them in the inn of comfortable living; but there is danger that impersonal scientific charity shall lead us to forget our individual responsibility. It is easier to give a dollar to an organization than to lend a hand and an hour. So many a poor soul yearns for the touch of a vanished hand of tenderness and the sound of a voice of compassion that is stilled. By the side of the Jericho road we dwell, you and I, Endeavorers; let us help all we can.

"There are hermit souls that live withdrawn
In the place of self-content;
There are souls, like stars, that dwell apart
In a fellowless firmament;
There are pioneer souls that blaze their paths
Where highways never ran;
But let me live by the side of the road
And be a friend to man."

An Episcopal rector's wife, the other day, in a store in Indianapolis, heard a shop girl sigh wearily, "O, I am so tired." The lady turned and looked at her, saying: "You do look tired, child. Won't you take a drive with me next Sunday afternoon? Where shall I meet you?" The poor girl looked from right to left to see whom the lady could be addressing, and finally, realizing that it was herself who was spoken to, gladly accepted the offer. There was a good neighbor, for who knows how hard that road to Jericho and who knows the thieves that beset it? That rector's wife, they say, is ever on the alert to do good.

A handsome and proud looking young matron, whom I know, well dressed, stood on the corner in a great city waiting for a car. An old Irish washerwoman, with a basket on her arm, passing by, said: "Lady, your shoe is untied." The young woman was about to retort w th a sharp answer, but the washerwoman continued without a pause: "I'll tie it for you!" And down upon her knees on dusty sidewalk she went, and tied the latch of the shoe, while a blush of shame overspread the young, proud woman's face and a new tenderness came into her heart. Which was the neighbor there? On the qui vive to do little kindnesses—this is to be a good neighbor.

Bethany Reading Courses.

MISSIONARY OPTIMISM.

By W. J. Lhamon, Director.

I do not feel just now that I can do so well by the Bethany readers in any other way as to tell them of the feeling of missionaries in regard to the success of missions. Surely, if missions are a losing game, missionaries are the ones to know it, and they are the ones that should be first discouraged. Surrounded, as most of them are, by all that is loathsome and dark and dreadful, and subjected to the enervating influences of foreign climates, missionaries might well be allowed a goodly margin for seasons of despondency. And if despondency should grow into despair of the work and its outcome, who could find fault with them? Despondency and desperation might all the more be expected during the long years of waiting while the ground is being broken and the seed is being sown, and no harvest can yet be reaped.

But the wonder is that missionaries are not despondent, and as to hopelessness—really they are the ones to whom some of us home folks must go for inspiration. It is one of the marvels of misssons that missionaries are so universally filled with dauntless courage and boundless hope. They may be as one to a thousand or as two to ten thousand, but they are invariably sure of putting these thousands and tens of thousands to flight. They may dwell in the twilight, but they will tell you it is the twilight before the d wn, and not before the night. Their light may be but a feeble torch in a great night of darkness, but they have confidence that their torch will kindle a conflagration of glory. They may be called upon to march straight forward to open graves, and know that they are doing it, but they do it like true soldiers in true battle array, praying and trusting that others will march over their graves to build churches and found schools and win souls and civilize nations. Missionaries are optimists. Out of the great gloom and darkness that surrounds them they seem to see all more clearly the light of God, just as one who goes down into a deep well may look up at noonday and see the stars of heaven.

There are reasons for this confidence and hopefulness. In the first place, it is the confidence of conviction that Christ is truth and that truth must conquer. Missionaries believe that Christ lived and died and arose, and that he is the Son of God, that he conquered sin and death, and that he must reign until he has put all enemies under his feet. They believe in the conquering Christ, because they believe in the living Christ, the sinless Christ and the inerrant Christ.

In the second place, our Protestant missionaries believe in the Bible. They are convinced that it is a winning and a conquering book. Like Max Muller, they would pile all other sacred books together on one side of their table; then they would put the Bible on the other side, all alone, as having no equal. Believing in the conquering Christ, they believe also in his conquering book. Therefore they are hopeful.

In the third place, missionaries know what Christ has done; they know that he, through his apostles, in the first century built churches that outlasted all persecution, and overcame all obstacles, and remade the ancient world, and sent the rich fruitage of their missionary enterprise down through all the centuries. Missionaries, therefore, naturally believe that what the Savior has done the Savior will do. They expect that future years will tell such a tale of present work as present years are telling of past work all over Europe and America.

In the fourth place, missionaries see as we do not the majesty and beneficence of the work already done in heathen lands. They see successful churches and schools and hospitals; they see believers multiplying more rapidly by far than populations; and, what is of no small account, they see native religions crumbling away. Therefore they are hopeful.

In the last place, missionaries look upon the accomplishments of the nineteenth century as the deep and firm foundation stones upon which in the twentieth century a most majestic building shall arise. Its invisible walls and battlements and towers are already visible to them by the eye of faith, and they press forward, consequently, to the mark of the prize of their high calling in Christ Jesus.

There is one comparison that must be suggested before we close. It is that of the apostles themselves. They were twelve against the world; but they never doubted or despaired. When threatened by the Jews they replied: "Whether it be right in the sight of God to hearken unto you rather than unto God, judge ye; for we cannot but speak the things we have seen and heard."

This unity in faith and courage between the ancient apostles and our modern ones is most noteworthy, and it should be most helpful to us all. It is the work of the Christ who, being the same yesterday, to-day and forever, produces forever the same effect in his holy ministering ones.

Indiana State Convention.

On Tuesday, May 15, the Indiana Ministerial Institute and State Missionary Convention met at Valparaiso, Ind. This is a little city of near 9,000 people, located in the northwest part of the state. The one great interest of the town is the Northern Indiana Normal College. This institution was founded by its president, H. C. Brown, twenty-seven years ago. The president is an active elder in the church here. Twenty years ago Prof. O. P. Kinsey became associated with Pres. Brown, and the two men have built up the most wonderful school of its kind in America. It matriculates from 3,000 to 3,500 students per annum, has an average attendance of over 2,000 the year round, never closes its doors for vacation and has students from every state in the Union. This Normal College has a faculty of from sixty to seventy professors and teachers, seven or eight splendid buildings, has in construction now an additional $50,000 scientific building and does all this without endowment, state aid or income from any other source except tuition from its students. Students' expenses, too, are at a minimum. This is the largest normal college in the world, and it has been built up, sustained and is being supported by the funds of its own production. Here are departments of art, music, science, commerce, pedagogy, law, pharmacy, classics, and everything necessary to fit a young man or lady for the activities of life. Our church in Valparaiso has an enrolled membership of over 1,200, and has as its pastor J. L. Brandt. They had made more than ample preparation to royally entertain the convention. As this is somewhat to one side, and possibiy from other causes, the attendance was not as large as usual. The meeting, however, was full of enthusiasm and did excellent work throughout.

The principal addresses of the institute and convention were delivered by J. A. Lord, editor of the Christian Standard, who spoke on "Faith." His addresses were a vigorous presentation of this important subject and was well and heartily received. Prof. G. P. Coler, Ann Arbor, Mich., delivered a very practical address on the "Work of the Pastor." It was one of those splendid speeches that went into the minutia of things and showed the effects of the work of the minister who looked after all the related details of his work. Pres. B. A. Jenkins, of the University of Indianapolis, delivered the educational address. It was timely and full of instruction. C. C. Rowlison and Prof. C. B. Coleman spoke on "The Value of Associated Studies." Few men realize the great importance of related facts and conditions and study things in their setting or as they are associated with other facts. This was well illustrated in the studies presented. Allan B. Philputt conducted an open parliament on "The Pastoral Relation." It was well conducted and discussed with interest and profit. "The Problem of the County Church," presented in two papers, by Prof. C. B. Coleman and J. H. McNeill, and then discussed with intense earnestness and interest, possibly produced the deepest impression on the audience. The matter was presented from every view-point and indicated that those who took part in this discussion were alive to the great value of our country churches.

The reports of the State Mission work indicated that the gospel was still the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth. Bro. T. J. Legg, state secretary, reported over 800 additions and the cause hopeful and prosperous in every district of the state. L. L. Carpenter and E. B. Scofield, both ex-secretaries of State Missions, were present and manifested a keen interest in the success of State Missions. J. H. O. Smith, J. V. Coombs and D. R. Lucas each made a stirring speech and aroused the enthusiasm of those present.

It was not until the last day, however, that the convention reached the high tide of enthusiasm and profit. The papers of J. A. Rose and James Small on "State Missions" were strong and heartily received. The address of Prof. L. M. Sniff created an enthusiasm that knew no bounds. He told the preachers that the pew wanted and needed the same old gospel that the apostles preached; that no other would satisfy present conditions. We then listened to Howard Cale on "Ministerial Relief," B. L. Smith on "Home Missions" and G. L. Wharton on the foreign field, especially India, and the meeting closed with a vigorous sermon by P. J. Rice.

CONVENTION NOTES

The refined face and white hair of L. L. Carpenter truly gave him the appearance, as he was, the father of the convention.

Allan B. Philputt, Indianapolis, made a dignified, impartial, cordial president, and the convention honored itself in his re election.

W. E. M. Hackleman acted in the double capacity of scribe and leader of song. As usual he was ever ready to aid in our praise services.

As Valparaiso is to one side of Indiana people the attendance was not so large as usual. But what was lacking in numbers was fully made up in the quality of the delegates and the earnest enthusiasm manifested on all sides.

The most noticeable and commendable feature of the whole convention came from the people of Valparaiso. In their care for our comfort, their genial hospitality and their kindness in their homes, made all feel that they were the happy and welcome guests of a grateful people.

J. L. Brandt and the great church at Valparaiso know how to organize for and take care of a convention. Every detail had been decided and all worked out perfectly. Bro. Brandt is doing a great work for this people and they dearly love him for his devotion to their welfare. He, with several others, will soon start to Europe on an extended tour.

A delightful feature of the convention was an hour's devotional service each morning with speech making in the college chapel at the Northern Indiana Normal College. The chapel services are voluntary and classes are being heard at all times, and yet 1,000 students attended these exercises. There was a great sea of faces ready to catch every word and learn every thought that came from the speakers. We never saw a more earnest and determined college of students, nor did we ever hear better or more instructive speeches. It was a great opportunity and our speakers made good use of it.

Obituaries.

BULLOCK.

W. H Bullock was born in Bristol, England, and died at his home in Manton, R. I., May 4, at the age of years, 4 months and 7 days. The church has lost a steadfast member. He was baptized in 1871 by Alenson Wilcox and was one out of 35 who obeyed the gospel at that meeting. He soon became a very earnest and devoted Disciple, also one of the grand pillars of the church, preaching at all times and places, making no charge for the same. Also entertaining all who came to him in the name of the Lord. He enlisted in the Civil War at the age of 18 for one year and when his time was out seeing his country's further need reinlisted for three years or during the war. He was in almost all the battles from Bull Run to the close. He went in as a private and came back a first lieutenant. He had charge of several expeditions and had many narrow escapes. He led the command at Malvern Hill and at various other places. He was rooted and grounded in the faith and resigned and ready to go. At his funeral the church was packed to the doors, although it was raining. Bro. T. C. Picton, of Everett, Mass., preached the funeral sermon. A. T. REMINGTON.

IRELAN.

Clementine E. Irelan, whose maiden name was Buesing, was born near Hudson, N. Y., March 4, 1839. When in his seventh year she removed with her parents to Indiana. They settled at Americus on the Wabash in Carroll Co. Eight years later they moved to Burnettsville in White Co. Here she was married Oct. 13, 1864, to Wm. Irelan. After their marriage she and her husband attended college for more than three years. First at Alliance, Ohio, and then at Indianapolis, Ind., where they graduated from the N. W. C. U., now Butler College, in the class of 1872. With the hope of regaining her failing health she and her husband and children came to Kansas in the spring of 1885. In 1889 they became residents of Eureka Springs, Ark., where they lived two years and then removed to Topeka, Kansas, which was their home at the time of her death. These are the facts of one whose life has closed to us here below. On April 19, 1900, as all nature was putting on its fresh apparel, this dear one put on the garments of righteousness and went to the home above. I knew her intimately for a number of years and sought her society many, many times —must I say from selfish motives? One went out from her presence with broader views of life, higher conceptions of right and love and mercy and truth. She lived so near her Savior at all times one could not come in contact with her without being made better. Her absorbing desire was to be of use to the world. But where the noble characteristics of her life show most beautifully was in her home. She asked the Father to spare her to her loved ones until their three children, Otto, Oren and Elma, had been prepared for their life work. This prayer was granted. Dear children, you have a blessed heritage. In a letter before me from her dear husband are these words: "She knew death was near, but her courage and faith never seemed to waver. Her trust was beautiful and strengthening." They had just moved into a new home and enjoyed it a week when "wife" and "mother" was called to a brighter home. I am sure I voice the sentiment of hundreds in thanking our Father for a home where sickness, sorrow and death can never come. To this home we commit our loved ones, knowing our loss is their eternal gain. Blessed hope!

MRS. LIBBIE F. INGELS.

Leanna, Kansas.

MORGAN.

On Thursday morning, of the 19th ult. the spirit of one of our beloved Disciples of Christ, Sister Abbie Morgan, left its house of clay and took up its abode with God. This death seems untimely to us and has cast a shadow over not only the home and church, but the entire town, for Sister Morgan was loved by all who knew her. "To know her was to love her" can be truly said of this dear one, and it was fully demonstrated by the beautiful flowers which covered the casket and presented by weeping, loving friends. Sister Morgan was formerly Miss Abbie Yantis, daughter of Bro. and Sister W. H. Yantis, of our town, for whom we deeply deplore her death. She was born December 3, 1868, and about 10 years ago was married to Bro. J. H. Morgan, of Beebee, Ark., now our railroad agent and beloved Bible-school superintendent. To them were born five children, the eldest aged eight years and the youngest an infant of a few weeks. We exclaim: "So untimely, so sudden and unexpected," but we cannot stay the hand of death, and should bow in submission to God's holy will. Sister Morgan will be missed at home and at the church, oh, so much! This local congregation has been called upon within the last 18 months to give up two of its strongest members, and we miss them so much. This beloved sister was the sunshine of her home where she reigned with queenly grace. Father, mother, husband, brother and three sisters will miss her, but none can possibly miss her like the dear little motherless children. Some of them will never know a mother's love, but there will be a vacancy in their lives which never can be filled in the flesh. Deceased had been a devoted Disciple for 12 or 14 years, and during that period proved loyal to her Master. She was full of good deeds, kind words and pleasant smiles for every one, but was never satisfied with her Christian attainment, still yearning to cheer some one, clothe some one or feed some poor unfortunate. To the dear family we would say: "Be faithful to the end and meet your loved one where troubles are no more." The funeral took place at the Church of Christ Saturday following at 2:00 P. M. The pastor led in the services, but all the pastors of the different denominations were present and contributed words of praise in behalf of our deceased sister and gave comforting words to the bereaved. Many were denied admission into the church on account of such a very large crowd. Dear Abbie, we weep for you, but you have gained where we have lost. May God bless the bereaved, is my prayer.

One who loved her dearly,

MRS. OSCAR ROGERS.

Paragould, Ark.

STONER.

Died very suddenly of congestion at her home near Decatur, Ill., on the 28th, ult., Mrs. Nannie Hathaway Stoner, in the 70th year of her age. She was the wife of Col. Thomas Stoner, well known in Central Illinois as an enterprising farmer. The deceased was born in Montgomery County, Kentucky and till her removal to Illinois lived in the near vicinity of the old Somerset meeting house. She was long a member of that congregation, was baptized in early life by Elder John Smith, who also officiated at her marriage in 1851. She was reared under the happy influences of those faithful Disciples who constituted the first church of the Restoration in Kentucky, her father, Philip Hathaway being one of the original elders. She was one of the most active and useful workers for Christ in the state of her adoption, and her influence will be sadly missed by the many who have long known and loved her. Of a large family of brothers and sisters, only one survives her, Mrs. John Aug. Williams, of Harrodsburg, Ky. She left five children, grown and established in life, all of whom seem to have inherited largely the virtues of this much beloved Christian woman. Her funeral was impressively conducted at the family residence by Elder Stephenson, of Decatur, and her remains were laid to rest in the Mt. Zion Cemetery. W.

WENTZEL.

Frederic Wentzel was born in Byron, Germany, April, 1823, and came to America when 21 years of age. At the age of 24 he was married to Miss Mary Earnest in Buffalo, New York. To them were born six children, of whom four daughters survive. In 1864, Mr. Wentzel came to Michigan, but was here only one year till his wife died. In 1864, he was married to Miss Lucy Meal, from which union six children still survive him. Years ago he joined the Lutheran Church. He was a kind father and a good husband. He leaves a wife, 10 children, 16 grandchildren and five great-grandchildren, and many friends to mourn his departure. The funeral sermon was preached by the writer to a large gathering of mourning friends.

Starving India's Pitiful Cry for Bread

What Will Christian America Do to Save the Starving Millions?

Startling Facts!

One of the Least of These

THE most pitiful cry for bread that ever fell from human lips or reached human ears comes from famine-smitten India. Many millions of human beings are in various stages of starvation, and a considerable proportion of these at death's door! The greatest catastrophe of the closing century is now being enacted, and unless help comes speedily to India's relief, a vast number of human beings must die before the next crop is harvested. Multitudes wander from their homes in search of food, and must be helped at once, if they are helped at all. Five months of famine must yet be endured. What will Christian America do while it lasts?

* * * *

The Famine Growing Worse

One missionary recently wrote: "According to the prophecies the famine is month by month increasing in severity. It has not even yet reached its worst. Rain cannot be expected until June, therefore distress will grow greater daily. After the rain comes it will be weeks before any food can be harvested. As the resources of the people fail, the number of the starving must increase. The government has a terrible problem to solve—the famine is the worst it has ever had to grapple with."

* * * *

A Noble Record

The Famine Relief steamship, "Quito," is now on the way to India, laden with 200,000 bushels of corn, the gift of Christian America to starving India, sent through THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. The "Quito" was chartered by the United States Government expressly for the work of the Fund. Christian America has never yet turned a deaf ear to the cry of human suffering, and in this calamity, greater than any yet witnessed, she is proving herself worthy the noble record of the past.

* * * *

A World Task

The relief of the famine-stricken people of India is a task for all the world. One shipload of food will accomplish much; but the greater task remains. Neither England nor any other one nation could fully meet the crisis. India's only hope is that all mankind will hear her cry and put out a helping hand. The missionaries are giving their all to the people, and daily sending out appeals to all the charitable of Christendom asking for help. If the aid of all nations is needed, surely the United States, richest of all, will be quick and glad to respond to the cry of suffering humanity.

* * * *

Looking This Way

For many years Christian missionaries have pointed the people to the Saviour, and thousands have accepted him and have been baptized in the Faith. Indeed, the cause of Christ is making wondrous progress among the dense native population of India, and now that disaster has befallen them and death is threatening them, what wonder that they are hoping for help from this country whence hail the missionaries who have told them again and again the beautiful story of one Jesus who went about doing good, who fed the multitudes, and whose followers in this prosperous country are walking in the footsteps of their Master, daily testing their lives by the standard he established, and ever asking themselves, "What would Jesus do?"

Help Them Quickly

And shall they look in vain? Shall they be disappointed? Shall we lead them to believe that our religion is mere profession? Shall we shut up the bowels of our compassion and tell them that American sympathy is for Americans only—that religion is one thing and charity quite another? Or shall we open up our hearts, our hands, our purses, and in the name of our Master whom we serve, bid them share with us the bounties of our Heavenly Father's goodness?

* * * *

Dr. Klopsch in India

As Dr. Klopsch went to Russia and Cuba with relief when plague and famine were devastating those lands, so now he has gone to India to personally supervise the distribution of the food and money forwarded through THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. On arriving in Bombay he will meet the members of the Interdenominational Committee, through whom the relief work is conducted, and will arrange with them plans for the distribution of the American corn. He will visit some of the interior districts, where the distress is most acute. His going to India is undertaken without expense to the Famine Fund.

* * * *

will support a life. Two dollars will keep a man, woman or child two months from starvation. Ten dollars will save five lives for two months.

* * * *

A Safe Investment

"He that hath pity upon the poor lendeth unto the Lord; and that which he hath given will he pay him again."

Let us each and every one make this investment, and lend to the Lord all we can possibly spare, and in due time he will repay all that we have lent him. How many lives will you undertake to save? Send us word quickly lest they perish before relief can reach them.

The Relief Ship

The United States Government, by Act of Congress, has paid transportation charges on the cargo of corn. It chartered the ship which sailed from New York on May 10. The distribution will be by the hands of the missionaries directly to the starving people. Your gift will thus go without any deduction for transmission.

* * * *

Our Duty to Native Christians

A report just received from India shows that a direct duty devolves on every Christian in responding to the appeal. Christ said that when even a cup of cold water was given in his name to any of his people, because they belonged to him, the giver would not lose his reward. Christian families, people who "belong to Christ," are starving. These have the first claim upon us. Shall they perish for lack of food? We may be quite sure they will get no help from heathen hands. In becoming Christians they have to accept ostracism, but they have thus a double claim on Christians—the claim of Christian brotherhood added to the claim of common humanity.

* * * *

Let All Join Hands

Let every village be represented. Let every Church, Sunday School, Home and Foreign Mission Society do its share. Let Sunday School Officers, Teachers and Scholars vie with each other in hastening to the rescue of this unfortunate people. Let all organize and send their offerings for India. This is the greatest opportunity of a lifetime to do good in the Master's name.

* * * *

Help or they Perish

We urge every reader of The Christian Evangelist to join the life-saving crew and to throw out to these perishing people the life-line, before it is too late. Send to us for mite boxes and collect funds. Pray that God's people everywhere may realize the importance and urgency of the case and may willingly and cheerfully give, as God has prospered them.

* * * *

How to Help

You can help by sending on your individual contribution. But, besides that, get others to give. Do not wait for some one to appoint you, but start out among your friends and neighbors, pencil and paper in hand, and see what you can raise. If you raise two dollars, you will have saved a life till the harvest. For every five dollars, you will have saved a man, wife and child till the next crop is gathered. It will be worth the effort. You cannot fail. Try it To-day.

* * * *

Ministering Women

There are in every community godly women, sympathetic and kind; consecrated women, who long to do good, as they have opportunity and to aid the poor, the suffering and the distressed. We look confidently to them for aid at this time. They can work, they can speak, they can plead, pray and give. May God call them to this mission and graciously prosper the work of their hearts and their hands.

CURRENT EVENTS.

In the report of the Industrial Commission, submitted to Congress last week, are some matters of deep concern to all. The report suggests that factories be prohibited from the employment of children under fourteen years of age and that the eight-hour system be adopted in all public work. The commission thinks that Congress might enact a law prohibiting the employment of persons under eighteen years of age in telegraph offices and upon railroads, but that in the main the regulation of labor by law belongs to the legislatures, and not to Congress. On the question of union and non-union labor the report says that the statutes of the state should be impartial. "The right to be employed and protected without belonging to a union should be preserved, it says, but every facility should be given labor to organize if it desires, and the last vestige of the notion that trade unions are a criminal conspiracy should be swept away." The commission thinks that Congress has the power, however, to prevent abuses in the use of injunctions and in the employment of private police detectives. In a general way the commission reports that conciliatory laws have been found effective, but that strict arbitration machinery rarely works well. It is recommended that labor bureaus or commissions be established in all the states. This view of the use of arbitration in the settlement of industrial troubles, however, does not comport with the report from New Zealand, where it is in force and is said to work well. But until some of the primary causes of disturbances are removed we may not expect permanency in the settlement of strikes, however brought about or accomplished.

We learn through the Reform Bureau at Washington that the House of Representatives has put an anti-saloon amendment into the Hawaiian bill, forbidding saloons, but not other liquor selling in those islands. This is a very moderate measure for the protection of the natives and the honor of our nation. It would be a great pity if it should be defeated through the indifference of the Christian and temperance people of this country. The men constituting the congressional committee having the bill in charge are Senator S. M. Cullom, of Illinois; H. C. Lodge, of Massachusettes; J. T. Morgan, of Alabama, and Congressmen Knox, of Massachusetts; J. A. Moon, of Tennessee, and R. R. Hitt, of Illinois. We are requested to ask all who are interested in this measure and who believe that this government should not assist in killing off the population of these islands through the agency of the saloon to send telegrams to that effect to their senators and congressmen connected with this committee. If you are in favor of the proposed amendment, telegraph these men to "stand by the Hawaiian anti-saloon amendment." It is hoped that a similar resolution may be offered in favor of the anti-saloon policy for the Philippines also as soon as that matter comes before Congress. It would be well that all senators and congressmen should hear from their constituents upon these temperance measures which have to do with the welfare of these people and with our own national honor.

Few scandals in the history of the government have been so humiliating to the American people as the recently discovered malfeasance in office in connection with the postal service in Cuba. Several weeks ago General Wood, the Gov.-Gen. of Cuba, was led to believe that there had been irregularities in the postal service in that country. He at once organized an investigation and inspection which has led to the uncovering of a most astounding piece of official dishonesty and corruption. It appears that Charles F. W. Neely, former Chief Financial Agent of the Post Office Department at Havana, Cuba, had, by connivance with other officials in the postal service of that island, perverted large sums of public money to his own use. Col. Burton, an Inspector-General of the United States army, says: "My investigation demonstrated that C. F. W. Neely, as Chief of the Bureau of Finance, has received the sum of $122,656.62, of which he has deposited with the Treasurer of Cuba the sum of $77,281.37, and that the balance, amounting to the sum of $45,375.25, can not be found, and that the said sum remains entirely unaccounted for." Mr. Neely who had left the island for the United States, was arrested on the information furnished by Col. Burton, but was released on bail. Later, however, when further developments showed additional fraud, involving the loss, it is said, of $400,000, Mr. Neely was rearrested, and is now in Ludlow Street jail, in the city of New York. Jos. L. Bristow, Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General, has been sent to Cuba under the instructions of the Postmaster-General to make a most thorough and painstaking investigation of this conspiracy to defraud the government. It is clear that the administration will use every possible means to bring all the guilty parties to speedy and condign punishment.

That such a scandal as the above should have occurred at the very beginning of our administration of affairs in Cuba, when we were setting about the work of relieving the Cuban people from the unjust burdens which Spanish rule had heaped upon them, and when we were proposing to show to the Cubans and to the whole civilized world the difference between the methods of the United States and those of Spain, is cause for shame and humiliation to every American citizen. Nothing short of the most thorough investigation of these frauds, and of the severest and most prompt punishment of the guilty persons, will satisfy the American people, or place our government in a proper light before the civilized world. Humiliating as this scandal is, if it shall serve as an object-lesson at the very beginning of our administration of these insular possessions to show how this government proposes to deal with those who abuse the trust which has been confided to them, it will not have occurred in vain. The incident, however, serves to emphasize the necessity of the greatest vigilance, both in the selection of honest and competent men for service in these islands, and for the most effective system of inspection of their work. That it will have this effect can scarcely be doubted. An extradition law has been passed by the House by which Mr. Neely can be returned to Cuba for trial and punishment; and the sooner this is accomplished the better it will be for the credit of this government.

That there would be some hostility to the World's Fair bill in honor of the Louisiana Purchase was expected, but not of the character and source from whence it came. The opposition which Speaker Henderson had to the bill was brought out in its most intense form by the action of the committee in deciding to report the bill back to the House without recommendation. There was an effort, it seems, to smother the bill in the committee, so that the unfriendliness of the speaker might not become known; but this was defeated and things brought about in such a way as to throw the responsibility of the defeat of the bill, if defeated, upon the speaker of the House. The special committee at a later session decided to report the bill to the House and to press for its consideration at this session of Congress. In the meantime a canvass of the House has been made by the friends of the bill and two-thirds of their names secured to a petition to the speaker to give the bill a hearing. Senator Cockrell is also at work in the senate to bring the influence of that body to bear in favor of the bill. He has introduced the World's Fair bill as an amendment to the Sunday Appropriation bill. This will bring the measure before the Senate and if approved there it will then come before the House in spite of Speaker Henderson's hostility. The limited time in which Congress is yet to be in session, and the vast number of measures to be acted upon, make the fate of the Fair bill very uncertain.

At this writing, Tuesday morning, the press reports say that Lord Roberts is within one day's march of Johannesburg and the effect on the Transvaal Government is perceptibly demoralizing. It is said that President Kruger has issued a proclamation warning all noncombatents to leave Johannesburg as it may become necessary to destroy both the town and the mines. It is said also that he is preparing to leave Pretoria. Another reports him trying to negotiate with Lord Salisbury for peace. Another that the government will be removed to the north from Pretoria and the war continued. And still another that the war will assume the guerrilla form on a large scale in the Free State. The one thing evident from these conflicting rumors is that the South African Republics are fast going to pieces and their final dissolution cannot now be very distant. The probabilities are that with the fall of Johannesburg the surrender of Pretoria will follow soon and that another week will see the end of hostilities in the South African war.

Some days ago Weltmer and Kelly, proprietors of the American School of Magnetic Healing, Nevada, Mo., were indicted for fraudulent use of the mails and all mail addressed to them ordered withheld and returned to their senders when possible and when not possible to the dead letter office. Since this embargo was placed upon Weltmer and Kelly they have secured an injunction against the order from the Post Office Department in the Appellate Court of the United States on the ground that it was arbitrary and unconstitutional. The injunction will be argued in this city June 2nd and until then the Nevada Postmaster will be compelled to hold all mail in his possession. The accumulation now amounts to many thousands of letters, the majority of which doubtless contain money or money orders in some form. The school was doing an immense business, but the Postal Department at Washington did not look favorably upon the "absent method treatment."

At Oklahoma City, on July 1-4, the second annual reunion of Roosevelt's Rough Riders will be held. Those who are unacquainted with the marvelous progress of Oklahoma will be surprised to learn that Oklahoma City is able to raise $15,000 to meet the expenses of this unique gathering. It seems but a few years ago that the first wild rush for homes was made into that territory, yet Oklahoma City now claims a population of 18,000, has lines of railway extending out in every direction, and has the largest wholesale trade of any town of its size in the United States. The railways are making very low rates to all who desire to visit Oklahoma at the time of the reunion of Roosevelt's Rough Riders, and it will be a chance to visit this wonderful country that hundreds will take advantage of. There will be provided accommodations for all who will attend and the entertainment that will be provided will repay all who do attend. The governors of several states will be present and there will be a number of the leading military organizations of the West that will take part in the program. Oklahoma is only eleven years old, as a part of the inhabited United States, and it is the most wonderful part of the country. The great fruit crop of the country will be ripe by the time of the reunion and there will be displays of the fine products of the richest agricultural country in the world. This is an opportunity to visit this "Land of Plenty" that none who have never visited Oklahoma can afford to miss.

PRESBYTERIAN GENERAL ASSEMBLY.

The General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church, which has been in session in this city for the past two weeks, is a body of able men, representing the ministry and lay elements of the church. Their business is conducted in an orderly and dignified way, proper decorum being observed at all times. The proceedings, however, are marked by discussions which sometimes evidence considerable heat as well as light. The most exciting question which has come before the body was the question of the revision of the Westminster Confession of Faith. Thirty-eight presbyteries had sent up overtures either for a revision of the Confession of Faith or for a shorter and simpler creed. These were referred to an able committee to decide what course should be taken in reference to them. The committee presented a report which, after stating the nature of the overtures and what they severally recommended, gives it as the judgment of the committee that the overtures are of such a nature and number as to justify some action on the part of the Assembly; and that "the overtures are of such a variety and suggest so many paths of process that they hardly furnish sufficient data to justify a distinct trial by any one of the plans proposed." They therefore submitted the following recommendations:

1. That a committee of fifteen (eight ministers and seven elders) be now appointed by the moderator to consider the whole matter of the restatement of the doctrines most surely believed among us, and which are substantially embodied in our Confession of Faith.

2. That this committee be enjoined diligently to pursue their inquiries, seeking light and knowledge from every available source, and to report to the next Assembly what specific action, if any, should be taken by the church.

3. That, to further the work of the committee, the presbyteries be and are hereby invited by the Assembly to take action on this subject at their approaching fall meetings, and through the Assembly's stated clerk to report said action to the committee, whether suggestive, revisional, supplemental or substitutional changes, or no changes at all.

This report precipitated a most earnest discussion. Two or three substitutes were offered, looking to side-tracking the question of creed revision, but they were voted down. To one on the outside, looking on, it was a matter of surprise that so many able and scholarly men connected with this body seem to be utterly oblivious to the degree of dissatisfaction and unrest in the Presbyterian body concerning certain articles in their Confession of Faith. One of these men said:

"A few ministers in the church have caused all this agitation. Shall the Presbyterian Church be moved by the rude sensationalism of a New York pastor [Dr. Parkhurst] or the sentimentality of a Brooklyn divine [Dr. Hillis]? Rationalism," the speaker added, "is at the root of all this agitation. Some men in the church are endeavoring to work out the mysteries of God's manifold wisdom according to reason. Theology and rationalism will not go hand in hand."

This brother had no small following in the Assembly, although,as the sequel showed, he was in the minority. It is not a new way of opposing a truth that undermines some one's old views to call it "rationalism." Presbyterians are not the only people who do that. There is such a thing as "rationalism," but it should not be confused with right reason. What this good brother calls "rationalism" is the rejection of the doctrine that God foreordained certain men to be saved and certain others to be condemned without reference to their character, but just to show His sovereign power, on the ground that it is contrary to reason and what we know of the character of God. Likewise, to denounce the doctrine of infant damnation on the same ground is also "rationalism." Now, as a matter of fact, faith in God as Father makes such doctrines untenable. This venerable brother ought to have known, too, that the rank and file of the Presbyterian Church do not believe either of these doctrines, but on the contrary, so far as they are aware that such doctrines exist in the Confession of Faith, utterly repudiate them. The real question, therefore, is whether it is worth while, whether, indeed, it is honest, to continue in the Confession of Faith articles which are not accepted by a tithe of the ministers themselves and by a very small minority of the other membership. It is to the credit of this Assembly that it has decided that some action must be taken in response to this demand for revision.

It will be noted that the course decided upon by the adoption of the report above given is a very conservative one. This committee is simply to secure an expression of sentiment from the various presbyteries of the United States, and when it is learned what the body of the church really desires, to recommend to the next General Assembly some specific course to pursue. It will take years, perhaps, to bring about the necessary changes, but if it be known that the matter is in process of adjustment, this fact in itself will quiet the apprehensions of the members of the church, as it is reasonably certain that if any action be taken at all it will be in the direction of removing the objectionable articles from the creed of the church.

The McGiffert case, which it was feared might cause some disturbance, was disposed of by a statement from Rev. Geo. W. F. Birch, who appealed the case to this Assembly, asking that, in view of the withdrawal of Prof. McGiffert and the action of the Judicial Committee, the matter be dropped.

Prominent attention was given in the Assembly to the subject of Foreign Missions, the report on this subject being presented by Dr. Charles Cuthbert Hall, of New York. The youngest of the Presbyterian Foreign Missions is the work in the Philippine Islands, where the chief obstacles to mission work were said to be ignorance and the rum traffic. Some of the recommendations from the special committee which considered the report of Foreign Missions were that churches shall make at least two offerings annually for Foreign Missions, and that the Sunday-schools be advised to make "a special offering on the Sunday nearest to the day commemorating our Lord's birth." In view of the approach of a new century it was recommended further that "it be the special aim and effort of the church to raise an offering for Foreign Missions that shall exceed in amount any previous offering." A large mass meeting on the subject of Foreign Missions was held in Odeon Hall on Thursday evening, which was addressed by several able speakers, and which was marked by great interest and enthusiasm.

IN KENTUCKY.

On a green, rounded, tree-crowned hill overlooking the beautiful, cultured town of Richmond, county seat of Madison county, Ky., sits Madison Institute with queenly grace, dispensing knowledge and refinement throughout all that region and drawing some of its students from afar. It is a school for young ladies. The principal is Miss Alice Lloyd, who is assisted by a thoroughly competent corps of teachers, filling the Chairs of Natural Science, French, Latin and German, Mathematics, English Language, Literature and Philosophy, Bible and History, with Preparatory and Primary Departments, Voice Culture, Piano, Elocution and Physical Culture, Art Department, etc. Miss Lloyd has just completed her sixth successful year with the school, though the institution has been in operation since 1856, with a slight interruption during the war.

The editor of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST was invited to deliver the baccalaureate sermon on last Lord's day. Arriving at noon Saturday, we enjoyed the pleasure of a drive through and about the town on Saturday afternoon under the guidance of Miss Lloyd. A lovelier country or more beautiful town it would be hard to find anywhere. It is a wealthy, cultured community. Driving through the beautiful cemetery on one of the hills about the town we noticed many familiar names, the ancestors whose descendants have migrated to Missouri and other Western states. Missouri is largely a newer Kentucky, with perhaps a little brisker gait.

The Christian Church at Richmond was crowded Sunday morning. The young ladies of Madison Institute occupied the central seats with the graduates, six in number, on the front seat. As we came out on the pulpit platform the genial pastor, W. R. Lloyd, informed us that the pulpit was in telephonic connection with several towns throughout the surrounding country, the people remaining at home to hear, as they knew the church building could not hold them all. Sure enough, there was a large-mouthed brass receiver on the left of the pulpit to receive and carry the songs, prayers and sermon to the regions round about. It was slightly embarrassing at first. We remarked that we had no thought of addressing all Madison County! Think of what this thing may grow into. A preacher, in gown and slippers, in his own study, discoursing to his flock in their homes, equally comfortably arrayed, through the telephone! There will have to be some scriptural revisions, too, such as "forsake not the connecting of yourself by a 'phone to your preacher's pulpit, as the manner of some is!" This is a great age. We had a delightful time at Richmond, including the entertainment by the children "On the Hill," and we shall not be surprised if we hear that Madison Institute, under the enterprising and ambitious management of Miss Lloyd, had received the endowment which its merits deserve from the wealth of the surrounding country.

LEXINGTON.

On Sunday afternoon we came to Lexington, a distance of only about 25 miles, on a direct line through the country, but we came by rail via Winchester. What a country it is, with its broad, green fields, its graceful trees, its sleek herds, its stately homes! But it is too sparsely settled. Farms are too large and homes too far apart for the best results in public schools and in industrial achievements. In the evening we delivered the baccalaureate sermon for the graduating class of Hamilton Female College. The school marched in a body, headed by the principal, Prof. Hagerman and his wife, Prof. McGarvey and the speaker for the evening, to Broadway Church, where the services were held. Our well-known brother, Mark Collis, is the pastor of this strong church. It was an inspiring audience of from 800 to 900 people which we addressed, and not the least inspiring part was the young ladies of Hamilton, with the 29 graduates in front. Perhaps a gray-bearded man, like the editor of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, may be permitted to say that there is nothing purer or sweeter on this earth, to his eyes, than pure young Christian girlhood. O, that the young manhood of our day might be worthy of it! Both at Richmond and at Lexington the young lady graduates seemed specially appreciative of the sermon and thanked us personally for its lessons.

On Monday morning there was held a joint meeting of the students of the Bible College, of the College of Arts, of the Commercial College and of Hamilton College, in Morrison Chapel, and by invitation we delivered an address, which seemed to be well received by both students and the faculties. We appreciated this opportunity of addressing so many students and the courtesy of the heads of these colleges in arranging for such a meeting. Prof. A. R. Milligan, who is acting president since the resignation of R. Lin Cave, and who presided over the joint meeting, remarked that if all the students who had been enrolled in these several colleges during the session now closing had been present there would have been more than a thousand. This makes Lexington a great educational center. By the courtesy of Pres. McGarvey and Professor Deweese of the Bible College and Profs. Loos and Fairhurst, of the College of Arts, we were shown through the Bible College building and the gymnasium—both of which have been erected since our last visit there—and through the library, museum, laboratory and recitation rooms, etc. The plant has been greatly strengthened by these additional buildings and the new dormitory. But, like our other institutions, it needs additional endowment funds to enable it to fulfill its ideals. Prof. S. M. Jefferson, of the Berkeley (Cal.) Bible Seminary, has been elected to a chair in the University, supported jointly by the Bible College and the College of Arts. Bro. J. is a strong man and will add to the strength of the school.

Hamilton College, for young ladies, has had an unusually successful year. This is the second year under the administration of Prof. Hagerman and he has reason to feel gratified at the success of the school. Associated with him in the school is Prof. Barclay, grandson of the distinguished Dr. Barclay, author of "The City of the Great King" and our first foreign missionary, and a full corps of experienced teachers. The institution has a good building, beautiful grounds and presents a most homelike appearance. Prof. Hagerman leaves soon for a visit to the Paris Exposition.

We enjoyed this visit to Kentucky not a little, and feel grateful for the courtesies extended to us by all the friends with whom we met. We formed the acquaintance, at Richmond, of F. M. Tinder, pastor at Carlisle, with whom we were greatly pleased. He was to address the Young Ladies' Christian Association there in the evening. Our fellowship with him and with Bro. Lloyd, whom we have known and esteemed for many years, and with all the charming people there and at Lexington, was all too short, but an editor's duties are imperative, and drive him along regardless of pleasant places and pressing invitations of kind friends to linger.

Returning homeward by Louisville, where we had to wait four hours for our train, we found the city decorated with bunting, and the Stars and Stripes floating everywhere. It was a reunion of old Confederate Soldiers, meeting to relight the old camp-fires, talk over the heroic struggles of the past, honor their old chieftains—living and dead—and all this under the protection of the starry banner, emblem of a united country, which is now their flag and ours! Is there any country like ours in all the world?

Hour of Prayer.

THE SIN OF WORRY.

(Matt. 6:24-34; 1 Pet. 5:6, 7.)

(Uniform Midweek Prayer-meeting Topic, June 6.)

CENTRAL TRUTH: Worry or anxiety results from a distrust in God's providential care, and hence is a moral defect.

There is no denying the fact that worry is doing more to destroy the life and happiness of people than work. One does not need to have a large experience to know how widely prevalent is the sin of worry. It prevails among professing Christians, who acknowledge the Fatherhood of God, as well as among those who make no profession of religion. It affects the condition of the mind and of the body, and largely destroys one's capacity for usefulness.

In the Scripture cited above Jesus says to his disciples: "Be not anxious for your life, what ye shall eat or what ye shall drink; nor yet for your body, what ye shall put on. Is not the life more than food and the body than raiment?" The argument is that since God gave the life and the body, will he not give the food and the raiment? To enforce this lesson of trust the great Teacher refers to the birds of the heaven: "That they sow not neither do they reap nor gather into barns; and your Heavenly Father feedeth them. Are not ye of much more value than they?"

And then as to the matter of raiment, the lilies of the field are called as witnesses: "Consider the lilies of the field, how they grow; they toil not, neither do they spin: yet I say unto you, that even Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these." The argument is that if God deals thus bountifully with the grass, which to-day is and to-morrow is burned for fuel, shall he not much more clothe his earthly children?

It is evidence of the profound wisdom of Jesus as a teacher that he thus adapts his teaching to the needs of men. What the world needed then and what it needs now is such a conception of God as universal Father as will enable men to put their trust in Him and unburden their heart of its manifold anxieties and cares. We need even yet to learn this lesson of confiding trust. This is the one feature of childhood which makes it so charming, and one which the Master had in mind when he said: "Of such is the kingdom of heaven." What, then, is the remedy for all these anxieties concerning food and drink and raiment? "Seek ye first his kingdom and his righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you." One in whom the kingdom of God exists as a supreme power, and who has attained unto the righteousness of God, can afford to free himself from anxieties concerning these subordinate matters.

It is not prudent forethought, prevision and provision, which are here condemned, but anxiety, worry, fretting, which fritter away the energies of the soul and body and unfit one for effective service. It is right to do what lies in our power to do to supply all our necessary needs, but that done we should leave the rest to God.

In the passage from Peter there is an intimation that pride, or the lack of humility, is the source of much of our anxiety or worry. "Humble yourselves, therefore, under the mighty hand of God, that he may exalt you in due time; casting all your anxiety upon him, because he careth for you." As we have said before, it is not loving one's enemies, or doing unto others as you would have them do unto you, that is the hardest commandment to obey, but this: "Casting all your anxiety upon him" we have found to be the most difficult requirement of Christ's teachings. We are convinced from experience and observation that it is impossible without the grace of humility, which the apostle here inculcates. If, like our Master, we are willing to be "of no reputation," to be misunderstood, maligned, persecuted for truth's sake; if we are willing to endure poverty, if poverty falls to our lot, then we have at once gotten rid of the chief source of worry.

Notice the reason which supports this injunction. Why should we cease to worry and cast all our anxiety upon God? "Because he careth for you." Blessed truth! Glorious experience! He knows our burdens, our weaknesses, our aspirations, our sorrows. He will not lay upon us a burden heavier than we are able to bear. He careth for us. Why, then, should we worry, seeing that infinite wisdom, infinite love and infinite power are all united in caring for us? Does not the experience of the past confirm this? Has He not cared for His people in every age of the world? Has He not cared for us in the dark and bitter experiences of our lives? Has He not provided a way of escape for us when it seemed to our short-sightedness that there was no way out of the difficulty? Why, then, should we not trust Him in the future, casting all our anxiety upon Him?

"We walk by faith, not by sight." What God doeth now we cannot always understand, but can we not trust Him even when we cannot trace Him? This is the province of faith. If our knowledge were infinite, if we could comprehend perfectly all God's plans and purposes, we would not, perhaps, require faith; we could walk by sight. But we are finite; hence we must trust God, even as a child trusts its father.

Let us each go from this prayer-meeting to-night resolving that henceforth we will more completely commit ourselves and all our anxieties to Him who careth for us, that we may the better do His work and show forth the power and beauty of His religion.

PRAYER.

Oh, God, we thank Thee that we may call Thee Father, and that we may come to Thee in prayer, realizing this relationship to Thee. May our confidence in Thee—in Thy wisdom, Thy goodness and Thy might—be such as to enable us to lay aside all worry and anxieties, to the end that we may seek Thy kingdom and Thy righteousness, and be more efficient instruments in extending Thy reign among men. May this beautiful lesson of trust, which we have learned from Thy Word, be exemplified in our lives, to the glory of Thy name, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen!

Editor's Easy Chair.

St. Louis is still undergoing the inconveniences and the disorders and losses incident to the street railway strike. The Easy Chair has been watching developments with a great deal of interest as presenting a profitable sociological study. There is a great deal of human nature brought out in a strike. Both sides realize that their ultimate success depends on public sentiment, and each states its case with a view to securing public sympathy. A series of conferences between the Transit Company and its employes were held and an agreement almost reached. There was only one unsettled point, the taking back of the old hands, and there negotiations were broken off. This illustrates how absurd a strike is. If these conferences had been held before the strike began this difficulty would not have been in the way. Why should not employers and employes confer together about their differences and seek to adjust them before, rather than during a strike, since it often happens, as in this case, that the worst difficulty in the way of a settlement arises out of the strike itself and not out of preceding conditions.

But why a strike at all? If the Master's Golden Rule could only be accepted as a practical working basis between capital and labor there never would be another strike. Those who employ labor would then look at the problem from the point of view of the laborers as well as their own, and laboring men, on the other hand, would look at the difficulties from the point of view of their employers. When each side can put itself in the other's place, and do unto others as it would be done by, the problem is solved, and so far as we can see there is no other solution of our labor troubles. Selfishness is the root of all our industrial wars, as it is the root of all our social troubles. Whatever fosters the altruistic spirit fosters peace and fraternity among men. Because Christianity does this as no other force in the world does it is the hope of the world. But how hard it is to get the people, even the church members, to understand that Christ's religion is for this world and is intended to be practiced by those who profess it!

But it will probably be some time before the Golden Rule gets ascendancy in the industrial world. In the meantime what shall be done? Are the people to be content to submit indefinitely to business paralysis, to the use of violence and intimidation on the part of organized labor or organized capital in order to carry their end? We do not think so. People will soon tire of this. If, for instance, street railway owners and their employes cannot find some way of carrying on street car traffic so as to serve the public, the public will sooner or later take the matter into its own hands and own and control and operate the street cars. This will become a public necessity unless some method is adopted by which strikes can be prevented, or if they occur, by which they can be promptly settled. It cannot be said that we have attained to a very high degree of civilization as long as we are unable to master a problem like this. The trouble has been that no very serious effort has been made by our lawmakers, state and national, to deal with this question, but it cannot much longer be postponed. If arbitration be the best method, then some form of compulsory arbitration must be adopted. This matter is vastly more important than many of the so-called issues which are now being prepared for party platforms.

Let us turn from the scenes of strife and turbulence among men to the more quiet and peaceful scenes of nature. What glorious May days are these! If not "so rare as a day in June," they are at least prophecies of June days, and have a glory and splendor all their own. How fresh and green the young l aves appear! Dame Nature has beautified all her domain with grass and leaves and flowers. The blue skies seem to breathe their benediction upon the earth. Such days as these make even an editor feel as if he would like to stroll through the leafy woods or cast his hook into the still pool of some sheltered stream and angle for the wily bass, while he is inhaling the fragrance of the wildwood. Let us try at least to catch the spirit of the season, to attune our hearts to nature, to reflect her genial smile, and to enter into the enjoyment of all the beauty and glory which she brings to us. How instinctively we turn to Nature for rest when we grow weary with care and toil! There is healing in her quiet, shady nooks for both mind and body.

Questions and Answers.

What do the terms "claptrap" and "sensationalism" mean as applied to methods of certain of our evangelists? P. D. Gray.
Coldwater, Mich.

The terms referred to are seldom applied to methods used by any of our own evangelists. Their significance, however, when used, is obvious enough. They mean that the evangelist adopts methods of advertising himself and his meeting not in harmony with good taste nor with the teaching of the Scriptures. One noted evangelist is reported to have dressed himself in a pair of red trousers and rode a donkey through the streets of one of our cities, crying out: "Come to Jesus!" That confessedly would have been pronounced claptrap and sensationalism of a very crude and vulgar type. Sometimes strange and often absurd topics are advertised as the subject for discourses, in order to attract the multitude. It is, perhaps, not always easy to draw the lines between what is entirely legitimate in attracting the attention of the people and what some would call sensationalism; but there are certain extremes so clearly in violation of good taste and the spirit of Christianity as never to be employed in any religious meeting. On the other hand, it must not be forgotten that some methods out of the ordinary are often necessary in order to secure the ears of the public, without which the public is not likely to be benefited. Legitimate advertising and making the meetings attractive to the people when they come are entirely proper and cannot be ignored by an evangelist who would reach large masses of people.

In a community there are a few members of the Christian Church, but there is no organization; there are no men qualified to act as elders or deacons, but some of the sisters are. Would it be both scriptural and proper for the members to meet and the sisters to act as elders and deacons in administering the Lord's Supper? J. Seymour Smith.
Carrollton, Ill.

It would be entirely proper in such case for the members to meet and the sisters to officiate in the observance of the Lord's Supper. It must always be remembered that organization is not essential to the existence of spiritual life and worship, but it is helpful in their proper development. In Christ Jesus there is neither male nor female. The religion of Christ deals with us, not as male and female, but as human beings, as self-conscious, responsible personalities, in which sex is only incidental. There are good reasons why men as a rule should occupy these official positions, but there is no reasen why, in the temporary absence of suitable men, women should not lead in such religious services as it may be desirable to hold.

What is there in the Bible for or against the observance of Children's Day? If you know of anything that shows it to be all right, please state it, as I desire to observe the day, and there is some objection to it. E.

There is the same Scripture for Children's Day as for the Sunday-school and the Endeavor Society and the midweek prayer-meeting, church buildings, hymn books and so on. When Christians come to know their freedom in Christ they never raise a question as to whether Children's Day or any similar occasion is specifically authorized in the Scriptures, but they ask only, Will it accomplish good? Is Children's Day a good thing for the children? Does it educate them in relation to missionary work and foster in them the missionary spirit? Do their contributions prove helpful in extending the gospel to the benighted nations? If these questions can be answered affirmatively, then every passage of Scripture which inculcates the proper training of children and the extension of Christ's kingdom among men is an indirect authorization of the observance of the day. If you have not tried it, give it a test, and see what effect it has on the children and on the church. "A good tree bringeth forth good fruit." If the fruit borne by Children's Day be good, then the tree is good and deserves to be cultivated.

Current Religious Thought.

Speaking on "Christ's Prayer for the Unity of His Disciples," last Lord's day, Dr. Hillis, of the Plymouth Church, Brooklyn, whose recent withdrawal from the Presbyterian Church attracted wide attention, thus delivered himself:

Unique men and colossal men were these disciples! Nor was their unity simply outer and mechanical. They were not driven together by exterior persecution, but were drawn together by interior affection. Their union was organic and vital.

In that hour when the disciples were met in that upper room, imagine some religious editor, or secular one, or bishop, or elder, rising up and urging some considerations that are presented every day in religious gatherings, such as: "Human nature is human nature, and organic unity is a dream! Therefore, let us agree to disagree, and each disciple found a sect and denomination of his own. Let the rule be: 'You keep away from my field and I will keep away from yours.' And once a year we will meet together and celebrate our brotherly love!" Had the denominational leader of to-day appeared in the upper room and urged these considerations and others that are said not only to excuse but to demand sects, the disciples would have looked upon the intruder as they would have looked upon Satan appearing to debauch their souls, to lure them from the path of duty, to rob them of their influence and to destroy their Master's life and work.

Alexander Campbell himself never uttered anything more antagonistic to our modern denominationalism than that, and for his utterances on this subject his name was cast out of many of the evangelical synagogues of his day. But, thank God, "The thoughts of men are widened with the process of the suns."

Bishop Vincent, filling one of the Chicago pulpits during the Methodist General Conference, in session in that city, and speaking on "Elisha," is quoted by one of the city papers as follows:

Men honor manhoood. They make obeisance to noble and divinely endowed manhood. In the heart of the Old Testament literature, at a period 2,800 years ago, we see a fine illustration of this. The pages recording Elisha's eventful career are packed with miracle. See the stories of the supply of "oil in the widow's home," the "dead child" brought to life, the "healing of the waters" of Jericho, the captain of Syria healed of his leprosy, the mountains round about Dothan filled with Syrian hosts all at once, "radiant with the horses and chariots of fire round about Elisha," and that wonderful story of the dead body of a man dropped into the grave of Elisha, and suddenly, as he touched the bones of the dead prophet, coming again to life. These are some of the wonders that belong to the Bible story of Elisha.

Why should men linger in hesitation and challenge over the record of miraculous phenomena? Do they know all the reaches and resources of nature and all the power and purposes of God? Suppose a prophet had foretold 150 years ago the wonders of the telephone and trolley, wireless telegraphy, liquid air, phonograph and of iron that floats over the sea; suppose he had said that in 1900 Niagara Falls would light a city and run machinery twenty-two miles away—who would have believed? And what of the prophet who foretells the new features of civilization in 1999? Greater wonders would all these appear than any that are recorded in the Books of the Kings.

The prophet Elijah, when he called Elisha, in significant symbolic action casts his mantle on him. It was the mantle of service. Elijah dropped his mantle to Elisha as he ascended to heaven. This was the mantle of power. The law of the kingdom is still the same. Obedient faith, humble service, spiritual vision, overcoming power. This is the hope of the church—the only hope of the church, and it is the only hope of the nation. Men of God, faithful, consecrated, spiritually sensitive, courageous and full of holy persistency.

THE SPIRITUAL SIDE OF OUR PLEA.

The Letter and the Spirit—III.

A. B. JONES.

Christianity contemplates a life of faith as well as the original, converting act of believing. "With the heart man believeth (eis) into righteousness"—into Christ, "our righteousness." But this believing heart continues with him. His faith becomes a living faith, and his life a life of faith, a life of feeling. "I have been crucified with Christ; and it is no longer I that live, but Christ liveth in me; and that life which I now live in the flesh I live in faith, the faith which is in the Son of God, who loved me and gave himself up for me." His repentance, too, is continuous, a constant penitent, feeling life. "I indeed baptize you in water (eis) into repentance"—a life of repentance, said John the Baptist—a life of continual feeling of penitential unworthiness before God. Again, Mark says: "John came, who preached in the wilderness and preached the baptism of repentance (eis) into remission of sins"—into a state and life where remission is obtained and always obtainable. And it is declared that "God granted to the Gentiles, also, repentance (eis) into life"—into a new moral state and relationship. What a splendid conception, then, that our faith and our repentance—our trust in Christ and our distrust in self—may become a life, "a life hid with Christ in God;" and that "when Christ who is our life shall be manifested, then shall we also with him be manifested in glory."

What a startling contrast these thoughts present to the cold formality of many professing Christians—many church members, church-goers. The "letter" and the "spirit" are not more manifest anywhere, their difference not more pronounced anywhere, than in the lives of Christian men—their every-day lives as seen socially, commercially, civilly or politically; and their Sunday lives, as they meet and worship in the house of the Lord. As it is the purpose in these articles to set forth the spiritual side of our plea, not only in the light of the New Testament Scriptures, but also in the light of the teachings of our fathers, this article on "The Letter and the Spirit" will be closed by some extracts from the gifted pen of our honored and lamented W. K. Pendleton, taken from the Millennial Harbinger of January, 1851:

"There is doubtless a great deal of ignorance among professors as to what constitutes a life of faith; and thousands, we fear there are, who have no higher conception of it than to think that it consists in looking back to the fact that they were, years past, baptized for the remission of sins. But this is almost as great a delusion as that which rests its hope upon the dim recollection of some far-off dream or vision of a distempered brain. There are some who seem to be, indeed, pretty well trained in the catechism on this point, and who will tell us with a great deal of flippancy that it is to believe what God says, and to do what he bids us, yet they give no evidence of a true spiritual life; they have, indeed, the form of godliness without the power thereof. . . . Their life of faith is the dry bones, the skeleton, of works; the flesh and life of the truly spiritual man are wanting. Their religion is a task, undertaken, perhaps, with a sense of duty, or it may be only a hope of reward, and prosecuted without our realizing emotion of the presence of the Spirit in the heart. There is no warmth, no fervor, no enjoyment no responsive inward experience that God is with us and in us, testifying to the consciousness that they are the children of God.

"May we not hope to be understood when we say that no man can enjoy God without knowing it; that in the true and literal sense of the term every real Christian can say: 'I know that my Redeemer liveth;' that there is with all such a testimony of experience in spiritual union and communion that is as certain knowledge to the consciousness of him who enjoys it as the knowledge which we derive by our senses from contact with material nature; that we do not more surely know that we are in contact with the objects of sense when they impress us through their appropriate organs than we do that we are in union and connection with the great spring and fountain of our spiritual life, when in prayer and devotion fervent the Spirit of God broods upon our spirits, making us feel in harmony with itself, and awaking in us kindred sympathies and emotions? Nor in saying this do we affirm anything more difficult to believe than that God does now and always hold connection with and control our nature.

"We are startled at the bold scepticism that would reduce the universe to the analogy of a clock, wound up for a six thousand years' run and then left by its Maker to the movements and regulations of its own machinery; we shrink back with a shudder at the atheistic refinement which reduces organization, motion and life to the primordial necessities of nature—the inherent and eternal laws of atomic attractions; we revolt at the idea that God is not in the universe and preserving it with a prescience that allows not even a sparrow to fall unnoticed—a power that poises in perfect harmony its vast and unnumbered parts, and a ubiquity which baffles even in imagination to conceive of the space where his presence is not always manifest; yet, whilst we are thus enlightened with respect to the material universe, how many there are who are so spiritually dark as to run into a precisely similar scepticism and atheism when the phenomena of the spiritual system are to be accounted for! Here they are willing to concede, indeed, that there is, in fact, no present God. Here they can admit that nothing exists but machinery; that in respect to our spiritual nature we are left altogether to the cold appliances of second ary means, and that there is around our inner man a material case which is impenetrable, even to the Spirit of God, and which forever isolates us from such spiritual union and communion with that Spirit as may be felt, and become as much the subject of knowledge, as the presence of the hand we love, or the vibration of the voice we revere.

"Now it is perhaps on this point more than any other in the religious experience of the day that there is a want of faith . . . It is in this that Christian experience consists, and we may add, this is the highest attainment of Christian enjoyment. But how far short of this does the dry formalist come! He may look to the catalogue of duties, counting over the works of the day, as the papist does his beads, compare his conduct with the standard to which he acknowledges it to be his duty to conform. . . . In all this there may have been a total absence of all communion with God; no spiritual interchange between the spirit of the man and the Holy Spirit; no realization of a restored union and harmony between the Creator and the creature: and an absence, altogether, of the knowledge of salvation."

These strong, lucid and eloquent utterances indicate very clearly that our fathers did not, as many of their children do, live in the mere letter of Christianity, but in the spirit as well. A restoration of original, apostolic Christianity, "in letter and in spirit," was their motto.

Report of Ecumenical Conference on Missions.

The Ecumenical Conference on Foreign Missions is over and is pronounced on every hand the greatest missionary assembly that has ever been held. It now remains to make its work permanent. That will depend to a very great degree on the report of the Conference, its character, the extent to which it is circulated and the manner in which it is used. As to the report itself, it is now in the hands of a special committee who have had large experience and who will employ trained men. The editorial end in view is to omit nothing essntial, to admit nothing nonessential. The plan includes three parts: 1. The story of the Conference; its inception, organization and conduct and its place in the history of missions; 2. The contribution of the Conference—the papers, addresses and discussions; 3. Appendices, including the complete program, the organization and roll, a list of missionary societies, a summary of missionary statistics, a carefully prepared bibliography of the best missionary books and an index.

The report will be published in two volumes of about five hundred pages each, paper, printing and binding of the best. Originally the price for the two volumes was fixed at $2.50, advance subscribers to receive it for $2.00. The funds of the Conference, however, will cover the cost of putting it on the press and will thus enable the committee to reduce the price from $2.50 to $1.50, and to advance subscribers from $2.00 to $1.00 for the two volumes. They will be ready for delivery early in the fall. Subscriptions accompanied by the money may be sent to the Publication Committee, Ecumenical Conference, 156 Fifth Avenue, New York. Checks should be made payable to Edwin M. Bliss, Chairman.

Hiram Jubilee Endowment

THE GREAT HIRAM JUBILEE ENDOWMENT MOVEMENT AND THE JUBILEE COMMENCEMENT WEEK.

"THE OLD COLLEGE ON THE HILL" WILL SOON HAVE COMPLETED FIFTY YEARS OF HISTORY. THE END OF THE FIRST HALF CENTURY IS JUST AT HAND. WONDERFUL HAS BEEN THE WORK ACCOMPLISHED.

To-day this time-honored Institution stands facing the past with a feeling of honest pride in the work it has accomplished. At the same time it looks to the future with larger hopes and brighter prospects than ever before. It is honored and respected throughout this great country for its democratic spirit, the thoroughness of its work and the high ideals and the lofty purposes it has inculcated. It has maintained an intensely intellectual atmosphere, yet one which has been warmed by generous sympathy and large heart-power. It has been an intensely religious Institution, yet there has been freedom from cant. It has ignored all false and artificial standards of manhood and womanhood, and has maintained an aristocracy of true merit. In short, it has been pre-eminently a college of the people, for the people, and has been largely supported by the people. It has been a source of power and blessing to hundreds and even thousands of earnest, struggling young men and women who have received the benefits of higher instruction within its walls. Multitudes have gone forth to the work of life immeasurably strengthened for their duties by the benefits received at Hiram who, had it not been for this Institution, would never have received the benefits of higher education. Its students and its graduates are characterized by a peculiar spirit. They are, as a rule, brave, heroic, industrious and self-sacrificing, and withal thoroughly genuine. They abominate sham, pretext and hypocrisy, and are content to face the stern realities of life and undertake its grave responsibilities solely upon their merit. Perhaps there is no Institution in America that has accomplished so much with so little expenditure of money. Such was the testimony of the lamented President Garfield shortly before his death.

THE JUBILEE ENDOWMENT.

Two years ago the Board of Trustees decided that this year would offer an occasion for an attempt to largely increase the endowment of the College. Elaborate plans were made looking to a rally of the varied Hiram forces in one supreme effort to add $250,000 to the present endowment. It was thought that the conditions were eminently favorable for a snccessful carrying out of the plans.

1. The Institution could point with pride to a phenomenally successful business management. It has held sacred the funds that had been given it for endowment purposes. It had steadily refused to run into debt, and had managed to sustain its constantly enlarging and growing work without jeopardizing the funds or property in its keeping. It was felt that this wise and judicious management ought to commend it to the favor of all the friends of education who had money to give to the cause of liberal Christian education.

2. It had shown great vitality; it had been a continually growing Institution. Even in its early academic days it had attained great popularity, and after taking on collegiate grade it had grown constantly in the scope of its work and in the favor of the people as is witnessed by the steady increase of students. To-day more than 400 students enroll annually for the regular literary work of the school.

3. It had shown itself to be the friend of ambitious young men and women. Tuition had been kept low, and living expenses have always been marvelously cheap.

4. The grade of the Institution and the standard of the work had been held up to the level of the best schools in Ohio and the Western States generally.

5. A large body of Alumni had arisen who, it was felt, would be glad to join in the supreme effort to place the Institution on a sound financial footing.

6. It was thought that the multitudes of old students, scattered through all parts of the United States, would be glad to join hands in accomplishing the adequate endowment of the College.

7. It was believed that many men and women of exceptional means would make this supreme occasion the opportunity for giving to this deserving Institution in large sums.

8. The business conditions of the country seemed to be particularly favorable for a movement of the kind.

The plans set on foot take into account all these conditions and attempt to use them for the accomplishment of the supreme purpose.

PROGRESS OF THE WORK.

Great interest has been awakened by the movement. Many are watching to see what the outcome will be. It is felt that if this movement can be made reasonably successful, it marks the beginning of larger things for all the Colleges of the Disciples. It certainly will demonstrate the fact that by persistent, systematic effort each College may rally its varied forces for the accomplishment of a definite result in the line of endowment. We have very much to encourage us. A great many have sent in their names agreeing to give something—the definite amount remains yet to be fixed in many cases. Some people of exceptional means are at least seriously considering the question. We are yet, however, compelled to say that we walk by faith and not by sight; but there is so much that is encouraging that our faith is very strong. We confidently expect to be able to make such a report at the close of our Jubilee Commencement as will rejoice the hearts of the brotherhood.

THINGS TO BE KEPT IN MIND.

A more propitious time, apparently, for the accomplishment of this work could not be selected.

2. People must move together for the accomplishment of large results, unless a few persons of great means take the work upon themselves. If we had men who could give millions to College endowment the importance of a general movement among those who must necessarily give in smaller amounts would be not nearly so great.

3. The Institution should not be made to suffer for its very virtues. If we were deeply in debt and were calling on the brotherhood for help to save the College, many would respond. Is it not still better to help place on a firm financial basis a College which never runs in debt? By all means help the Institutions that are in peril, but for a still stronger reason help the Institution that has avoided contracting debts and has thereby given grounds for confidence in its future.

4. In a concerted movement, such as the present, every man's donation has the power to multiply itself many times. Money draws money. Every man's donation is an encouragement to some other man. A gift of $10,000 may produce $50,000 under such conditions.

5. Do not wait, thinking there will be enough without you. Such an idea is fatal to the success of the movement. If you hesitate, remember there are thousands just like you who are doing the same thing. The only way to insure success in a movement of this kind is for every one to do his best and to do it quickly.

6. Remember that generous giving makes light giving in the long run. A good, liberal donation now will relieve you from repeated calls in the future. Meagre giving now means that you will be appealed to again and again, and in the long run will give more than by giving a good, round, liberal sum once for all.

THE AMOUNTS THAT THE VARIOUS LINES OF WORK OUGHT TO YIELD.

1. There ought to be four chairs endowed by individuals in the sum of $25,000 each.

2. Two special chairs should be endowed by the Alumni and by the old students in the sum of $25,000 each.

3. We ought ta secure at least five individual gifts of $10,000 each.

4. We ought to get five individual gifts in the sum of $5,000 each.

5. We ought to have twenty-five $1,000 donations.

6. We ought to secure at least $25,000 in sums ranging from $1 up to $500.

Surely, this is not an extravagant estimate of what might be reasonably expected.

JUBILEE COMMENCEMENT WEEK.

Elaborate preparations are being made for the great Jublilee Commencement, covering four days. Baccalaureate services will be held on Lord's day, June 17. These exercises will be similar in character to those of former years, and are not therefore to be considered a special feature of the Jubilee week.

Tuesday, June 19, will be given up to the undergraduates of the College. This is really the beginning of the Jubilee Exercises. Wednesday, June 20, will be Alumni Day. Thursday, June 21, will be Graduate Day, and the Jubilee Exercises will be held. Friday, June 22, will be Eclectic Institute and Old Pioneer Day. Elaborate programs have been provided for both the morning and afternoon sessions. The night sessions will be given over to the Literary Societies, with the possible exception of Thursday evening. Eminent speakers of national reputation among the Disciples will address the people at all these sessions. The spacious Tabernacle is being still further enlarged. We hope to be able to accommodate nearly if not quite 2,000 people at one sitting. And if this is insufficient, we have other large rooms where overflow meetings can be held. A detailed program of the Jubilee week will be published in the very near future.

INVITATION.

You are cordially invited to attend the Hiram College Jubilee Commencement Exercises. Free lodging in private families or the College dormitories will be provided for all who will come. Board will be provided in the College Halls and special boarding houses at a merely nominal cost. Send your name at once to O. G. Hertzog, Hiram, O., and the best accommodations that our town affords will be secured for you. Do not neglect this; we ought to have the names in advance of all who expect entertainment. Come and rejoice with us in the great victory we are asking God to give us. We feel sure that we will not be disappointed.

HOW IT LOOKS TO OTHERS.

It is a hopeful sign when the people of a great religious movement look well to the interests of higher education, as the Disciples of Christ are beginning to do. Nothing could afford greater pleasure to those who love the Lord than to see all our colleges liberally endowed; and all who can help should count it a happy privilege to support the Jubilee Endowment movement inaugurated in the interest of Hiram College. We have no better school; and there is a great treat in store for those who attend the Jubilee Commencement. It will be a great occasion and one long to be remembered. The attendance should be large, and all who can should be present. J. C. B. STIVERS.

Elyria, Ohio.

It would be a fitting celebration of the completion of fifty years of her history if Hiram College could be endowed with $250,000. That is not too large an endowment for an institution that has done and is doing so great a work. Let the friends of the College and Disciples generally rally to this great cause of education. Let them come up to Hiram in June and give their hundreds and thousands to put the grand old College upon a sound financial basis. Hiram has had a few supporters who have been able to give large amounts, but the College needs permanent funds to rely on when these friends have passed away.

E. E. CURRY.

The Jubilee Convention at Cincinnati has given a mighty impetus to the forward movements of our churches for years to come. What the beneficent influence of that convention has been and will be upon our general work, so that of the Jubilee Commencement of Hiram College may be upon the particular effort in behalf of college endowment. May we all be alive to "The Overshadowing Issue."

Minerva, Ohio. GUY HOOVER.

I regard the Hiram College efforts in behalf of a Jubilee Endowment fund as one of the most promising movements in behalf of our educational interests. This agitation can scarcely fail to result in good to Hiram College and to all other colleges of our brotherhood; for it is true of educational institutions as of people, that what is for the good of one is good for all, and when one suffers, all suffer. If the agitation shall be wisely continued, it will certainly result in a larger patronage of students and more liberal contributions of money for the support of our colleges. The great danger is that our people may be so slow in responding to these appeals that those in charge of the work cannot afford to continue the agitation they are now carrying on. I would therefore urge every friend of Hiram College to join hands with President Zollars and his coworkers in their efforts and co tribute something toward the endowment. Hiram College is worthy of our love and patronage and financial support. Shall we let her calls go unheeded? If we do we will not only discourage the friends of Hiram but also other of our colleges in their efforts in behalf of larger and better things. G. P. COLER.

Ann Arbor, Mich.

If some multi-millionaire should endow Hiram College to the extent of a quarter of million the result would not be the best; it would only be good. The superlative would be attained if the many, from among whom are to come the young men and women who shall be educated at Hiram during the coming year, should furnish the endowment. Why? Because one magnificent gift assures the future interest and support of one person—the giver: one hundred thousand gifts, aggregating a quarter of a million, will equally endow the institution and assure the future support of one hundred thousand people instead of one. Let a large number attend the Jubilee Commencement and the popular endowment is a success.

Akron, Ohio. J. G. SLATER.

Those of us whose lives have for a longer or shorter period been linked with Hiram College cannot read her history and mark her advancement without feeling proud of her career. From a comparatively little academy, rarely heard from, she has grown to a College whose influence is felt the earth around, grown from a little girl filling her home with sunshine and with song to being a matron who has sent her children out into the world to scatter the influence of their home. And to these children she is calling for aid; she has outgrown her equipment and must have relief. What shall we do? As her dear voice calls to us asking that we shall meet in the "old home," wander in the "old rooms," gather in the "dear old halls" again on her great week of Jubilee, let us respond and make the "holy hill of Hiram" glad as with the wisdom of riper years we become boys again in the month of June, 1900. D. R. MOSS.

Niles, Ohio.

Every earnest and broad-minded Disciple of Christ should take a deep interest in the Jubilee Endowment movement of Hiram College. The endowment and maintenance of colleges by the Church of Christ will be a potent factor toward the realization of the plea for the union of all Christians. The success of New Testament Christianity depends upon liberal education. The key that will unlock India, China and Japan for the introduction of the gospel is our colleges. Enthusiasm for the great Jubilee Commencement June 19th to 22nd, should be ispired.

Marietta, Ohio. SOLOMON METZLER.

Hiram's Jubilee should be an event of profound interest to every one in the brotherhood. Hiram belongs to us all. Her fellowship is nation-wide and world-wide. Her success is the success of our people, her failure our failure. She is modest. She asks a small endowment. She would crown her Jubilee with a fund that will place her on a permanent foundation. By all means let her have it and let every true friend of the great cause she represents share in it, and let us go by thousands up to her Jubilee Commencement. Hiram is worthy. She is a fountain of blessing to thousands. Multiply her usefulness a hundredfold. Make glad the hearts of her faithful President, Trustees and Faculty by your offering. Do it now. F. D. POWER.

There is no good reason why Hiram College should not be liberally endowed. On the other hand there are many good reasons why the brethren and other friends of Hiram should come forward with large donations, not because Hiram stands in need of a "rescue" movement, but because the trustees have conducted her affairs in a wise and economical manner, and have proved that they know how to handle such funds to the best possible advantage. No one need to have any fear that the endowment fund will be swallowed up by debts. Hiram needs an endowment because the demands of thetimes call for largely increased facilities for reaching the best educational results. The Disciples of Ohio, to say nothing of the increasing interest Disciples everywhere are taking in the school, ought to make Hiram College the greatest possible power for the advancement of a purer Christianity.

Cleveland, O. R. MOFFETT.

It is my solemn conviction that the adequate endowment of our Colleges is the most vital question before us to-day. The attempt to endow Hiram College by a popular movement ought to enlist the hearty support of all her friends, and all the lovers of intelligent Christianity. Hiram is one of our best and most worthy institutions. Her business affairs are carefully administered, and her fund conscientiously husbanded. This popular movement gives all an opportunity to have a part in her endowment. This year makes her fiftieth anniversary. Let us celebrate this notable event, and erect a monument in memory of the heroic sacrifice of the pioneer of education.

Boston, Mass. J. H. MOHORTER.

If we are to meet the demands of the future upon us, we must have a larger and better equipped ministry, and to secure this we must have better equipped schools, and to have better equipped schools they must have larger and better endowment. It seems to me that Hiram has struck upon a splendid plan. Since we cannot endow adequately all our Colleges at once, it appears the wisest thing to begin and endow them one by one. Since Hiram has hit upon the plan, and since this is her Jubilee Year, it is perfectly proper to begin with Hiram. There should be a hearty and generous response to her call, and a Commencement this year that shall never be forgotten.

Hagerstown, Md. P. A. CAVE.

Three reasons why all should give their best to this Jubilee work.

1. It is practical; there is nothing visionary in it. It is easily within our power to reach the quarter million mark.

2. We owe incalculable debts to the men who are working in this department of the church. Let us not cut them off from our sympathy.

3. We owe it to God. This debt must be paid or a poorly equipped ministry will greatly retard the progress of the church.

Three reasons why we should plan to attend the Jubilee Commencement.

1. It creates enthusiasm; enthusiasm is contagious.

2. We meet to come into greater sympathy with our work. Too long have we acted upon the principle that our educational institutions are owned solely by Faculty and Trustees.

3. We need to know that our own schools furnish us thorough literary training as any, and at the same time save our young men to the church, which I know from observation some schools do not.

Massillon, Ohio. F. H. SIMPSON.

I regard the Hiram Movement for the endowment of Hiram College a capital idea. It is purely democratic in its principles. To enlist fifty thousand, yea, more persons who will give a dollar or more for higher education represents the voice of the people.

$250,000 given as an endowment to Hiram College by the people is far better than the same amount by one man.

Hiram College is your college; it's my college; it's the people's college. It's a representative college for higher education. It knows no East. Its object is to develop the best there is in man. No individual can develop into the largest manhood or womanhood alone. The college is to the individual what the sun and showers are to the seed. It develops him; expands him; unfolds him; calls him out of himself. Count me as one on your list for the Jubilee Endowment, 1900. Yours fraternally,

W. A. BRUNDIGE.

I consider the Jubilee Endowment movement as one of the greatest movements among us. The educational problem should have the pre-eminence. It is fundamental to all our enterprises as a people. The supreme need among us is well-equipped men, and if we expect to have any number of well-equipped men, we must have well-equipped institutions of learning. Hiram has done a great work with its limited means, and is eminently worthy of an adequate endowment. I predict for this movement the greatest success, as the brethren will certainly see its pre-eminent importance.

AUSTIN HUNTER.

University of Chicago.

I could not find it in my heart to do less than to give what influence my words may have in favor of the "Jubilee Offering" for Hiram College. As one of the oldest and earliest students of Hiram my heart is with the College, now that it comes to its crowning after fifty years of honorable and useful life. If this effort to increase the endowment of this College up to its needs, by the gifts of many, shall succeed as I hope it will, it will be a great triumph for our beloved institution. A College which receives its endowment from one person or from a few persons, is to be congratulated, but a College that receives its endowent at the hands of a great multitude of lovers bears away easily the palm of victory. Let us crown Hiram. F. M. GREEN.

Kansas City—City Evangelization.

Nineteen hundred will no doubt be our best year in Kansas City for city missions. More of our churches are interested than ever before. Our three missions are doing aggressive work. They are in line with all our missionary work and make liberal offerings. Fifty additions since Jan. 1st. Our religious papers are finding their way into the homes. We expect to purchase ground for buildings soon, for two of our missions. A noble band of young men and women are assisting in the work from different churches. We have nine churches and three missions in Kansas City, Mo., and "there remaineth yet very much land to be possessed."

The enterprise of Kansas City's citizens in worldly affairs should be exceeded by her followers of Christ in the extension of his kingdom. Extension is the motto in all parts of our city. Hundreds of new buildings are in process of erection; within their midst we should erect churches now. "The fields are white unto the harvest." Scores of people come to the city and remain unidentified who have once been prominent workers. Here is a field for every pastor. Please write to the city pastors when one leaves your church or community, that they may be enlisted at once.

To-day the doors are open, the fields are ripe; to-morrow may be too late. We are well able to do above what has been asked of us as a people. Smith Bros. can count on every mission in this city for an offering May 6th.

FRANK L. BOWEN, City Evangelist.

Our Budget.

—June 3rd, Children's Day.

—St. Louis street car strike still on.

—The General Assembly, this city, closed Saturday, May 26th.

—The General Conference, Chicago, consecrated four new bishops Saturday, May 26th.

—Last Sunday was the fourth anniversary of the great storm in St. Louis.

—The Missouri Bible-school convention meets in California, June 11-14.

—The days of school commencements have come again. These are the days of mingled joy and sadness to many.

—The June meeting for Central New York, announced to be held in South Butler, Wayne County, has been postponed to June 15-17.

—The St. Louis Christian Advocate has applied a very direct and pertinent question to each candidate for a state office and each candidate for the House of Representatives and the Senate. It is this: "Do you favor the suppression of the liquor traffic in the state of Missouri?" We believe that no man is entitled to the vote of a Christian man in Missouri that will not answer this question in the affirmative. We believe also that the question should be applied to every candidate. While voting only for men who favor the suppression of the liquor traffic would not secure prohibition, such a cleaning up of party tickets would have a good effect; it would shorten distance between sentimental and legal prohibition. Let the question be put to all candidates in all the states.

—For some time F. M. Rains, the treasurer of the Foreign Society, has been disabled. There is no disease; he is suffering from prostration caused by overwork. It is well known that he has been a busy man for many years. After working in the mission rooms for six days it was a common thing to take a train for some place to dedicate a church. Any one who has ever been at one of those services knows what a tax they are on body and mind. As soon as the services were ended he hastened back to his desk and his duties. Besides his work he suffered from loss of sleep caused by sickness in his family. For years he did not know what it was to sleep all night without rising to minister to the afflicted. It will be a gratification to his friends and to the friends of the work to know that he is improving and is certain to get entirely well. His recovery may take some months. In his disability the friends of missions should see to it that the work does not suffer. They should rally to its support as never before. The war cry of the year should become a fact. In no other way can they do so much for his recovery. The cause is the Lord's and should not be permitted to suffer simply because one of his servants is not able to appeal in its behalf.

—In every school in the land Children's Day should be observed. This is a good thing for the children themselves; it will increase their interest in the school and in all departments of Christian work. Through the interest of the children the parents will become enlisted; the whole community will be blessed. Even if a school is small, that is no reason why it should not observe the day.

—The new house of worship recently completed at Henning, Ill., will be dedicated on Lord's day, June 3, 1900. L. L. Carpenter, of Wabash, Ind., will preach the sermon. It is hoped that many brethren from surrounding congregations will attend this dedication and enjoy with the brethren at Henning a season of great rejoicing from the presence of the Lord.

—The excursion taken annually in the interest of the Orphans' Home will occur on the 28th of June. If you should be in the city at that time arrange to enjoy the day with the brethren of St. Louis on the boat.

—Our obituary column this week contains tributes to two of our preachers who have been called to their reward, Bro. C. C. Deweese, of Cheney, Kan., and Bro. H. A. Major, of Brownwood, Texas. The loss of these two faithful servants will be greatly felt by the churches for which they were laboring and all others who knew them, but they have gained the reward for which they became the servants of Christ. May God's consoling promises and presence comfort and sustain their sorrowing families and friends.

—If you contemplate building a tabernacle in the near future you will do well to consult the advertisement in this paper on tabernacle plans by Lawrence Wright, Jefferson, Iowa.

—Word and Works, for June contains a remarkably strong proof of a substantial scientific basis underlying Prof. Hicks' weather forecasts. It is a comparison of the government's official report of precipitation for March, 1900, with Prof. Hicks' predictions for that month. The confirmation of the Professor's statements are as satisfactory as the Professor himself could have desired. The days of the greatest precipitation in the report coincide exactly with the Professor's weather chart for the month. We frequently consult his almanac and never overlook a peep into Word and Works at its arrival at our table.

—The May number of the Bulletin of the University of Missouri containing the 58th report of the curators to the Governor of the state and catalogue of the university is out and makes a book of 224 pages. The usual information concerning a university is given at length, so that one may have perfect knowledge of the advantages and efficiency of this growing institution of learning. The grasp of such an institution of learning upon the intellectual domain indicated by this book is simply marvelous. And yet we deeply regret the fact that a more liberal revenue has not been provided by the Legislature of Missouri for this institution. It seems from the curator's report that in this respect our state is far below other states about us. This ought not to be. Missouri is able to keep abreast of any state in the Union in educational interests and should not permit the publication of comparisons to her injury, and the way to prevent it is to adopt a more liberal policy toward her university.

—A. M. Haggard has been elected dean of the Bible department of Drake University, Des Moines, Iowa, and will have the assistance of Clinton Lockhart, former president of Christian University, Canton, Mo., and of three other professors. We are glad to see the Bible department of Drake committed to the doctrine of expansion and preparing for larger things.

—The Missouri Baptist Sanitarium, of this city, is becoming very popular and widely known in the West and South for its advantages and facilities for the treatment of nearly all diseases that flesh is heir to. With such excellent facilities and a very favorable location in the western part of St. Louis, we are not surprised to hear of the great success this institution is having in the care and treatment of those who seek health within its walls. Not being satisfied with the things to which they have already attained, the managers are now making repairs and improvements that will bring it up to a most excellent standard of efficiency and usefulness. We beg to call the reader's attention to the advertisement of this institution, which will be found on another page of this paper.

"Never Do Things by Halves."

Sometimes the condition of your health could be described as half-sick and half-well. You may not be ill enough to go to bed but too ill to be happy or efficient in your home or your business. Why not be wholly well? Your dragged-out, tired feeling is due to poor blood and nothing else. Make your blood rich by using Hood's Sarsaparilla. It works to perfection; there is nothing like it.

Tired Feeling — "My husband would come home from work so tired he could hardly move. He began taking Hood's Sarsaparilla and it cured him. It cured my girl's headaches." Mrs. A. J. Sprague, 57 Oak St., Fall River, Mass.

—In the will of Mrs. Eliza Perkins, who died at her home in Mishawaka, Ind., recently, the First Christian Church of that city gets $2,000, the School of the Evangelists, Kimberlin Heights, Tenn., $1,000, and after other bequests the balance, we are told, is to be divided equally between Church Extension and the Foreign Christian Missionary Society. This balance, it is believed by persons who know somewhat of her estate, will be an item of interest to the societies named. More and more are the Christian people remembering the Lord's work in the disposition of their earthly estates, and this speaks volumes for the increase of Christ's power over the lives of his disciples. In our obituary department will be found a tribute to the life of Sister Perkins, copied from the Mishawaka Enterprise. We regret that no dates were given in the clipping sent to us.

—In speaking of the appreciation of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST Sister Grace Pearl Bronaugh, of Fair Haven, Vermont, says: "It means a great deal to me in the way of spiritual benefit. . . . . We keep every number and would no more think of destroying them than of destroying a Webster's Dictionary." This expression of the value of this paper to one seeking eternal life is a matter of great satisfaction to us, for such is our mission. Our readers also know that Sister Bronaugh has contributed some of the best poems that we have published in our columns; poems that were full of the spirit of Christ and of strong faith in God. Such poems are helpful to souls hungering after the bread of life, and in the way that the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST is ministering unto Sister Bronaugh she is likewise ministering unto others.

—Was there ever a religious convention in which some one, to carry his point, did not play the demagogue? In the discussion of the subject of creed revision in the Presbyterian Assembly in this city one speaker, opposing it, exclaimed: "The old-time religion is good enough for me!" Of course the question of revising "the old-time religion" was not under discussion. It was the matter of getting rid of a highly objectionable doctrinal statement in their Confession of Faith. But what did that matter? He could "play to the gallery" and make the impression that the foundation of Zion itself was being removed!

—We are glad to learn that Brother F. M. Rains' health is improving. He expects to be back from his rest by the first of July.

—The souvenir history of "The House of Ayer" Lowell, Mass., is a unique piece of work. It is finely illustrated, printed in colors, attractive paper cover and cord binding. The most unique thing about the book is the display of the medicines prepared by this house, some of which appear in full-page cuts, while others appear only on diagonally cut pages. This souvenir is designed and printed by the J. C. Ayer Co.

—Last year in Missouri 329 Sunday-schools made offerings on Children's Day; 379 in Illinois, 353 in Indiana, 295 in Iowa, 220 in Kansas, 180 in Kentucky, 135 in Nebrasla, 357 in Ohio. The schools in the District of Columbia gave $54.25 each on an average; those in Pennsylvania, $29; those in New York, $24; those in Massachusetts, $19.40; those in Connecticut, $20.37; those in Ohio, $17.73; those in Indian Territory, $15.16; those in Kentucky, $14.97; those in Maryland, $16.39. The largest amount received from any school was received from the school connected with the First Church at Allegheny, Pa., and was for $637. The second largest amount was from the Central school, Des Moines, Iowa, and was for $550. The third largest amount was from Washington, Pa., and was for $340. Twenty-six schools raised $100 or more. Many schools that gave less than these gave more in proportion; they made greater sacrifices. An offering is not to be measured by the number of dollars it contains, but by what it cost to make it. The offerings from the smaller schools are just as precious in the sight of the Lord and just as acceptable as the few large ones received from the great schools.

—The second year the Foreign Society was in existence two Sunday-schools contributed to its treasury. These were the Sunday-schools connected with the Central Church, Cincinnati, and with the 56th Street Church, New York City. That was long before Children's Day was thought of. Children's Day was first observed in 1881. That year 198 schools gave $750. Last year 3,187 schools contributed $39.071. The whole amount received by the society from the Sunday-schools from the first is $330,375. The children have paid for homes, chapels, hospitals, schools and asylums. They have paid for the education of many children, they have supported native teachers and evangelists, they have done a great work on the mission field. About one-fourth of all the money that the Foreign Society has received from the first has come from this source.

—The Indiana Lectureship will meet at Maxinkuckee Park, Culver, Ind., Aug. 6-10. The following speakers have been secured: Prof. J. W. McGarvey, Pres. E. V. Zollars, A. W. Conner, Knox P. Taylor, J. A. Lord, A. J. Frank and J. B. Briney. Others will be secured.

—The Lincoln County (Mo.) News (Democratic) endorses the platform of the Sioux Falls People's Party Convention, with two or three exceptions, and says: "The declaration in favor of the Boers is impolitic. No party in this country has reason or right to take sides on that question, as it is interference with a matter that does not officially concern Americans." Very true. Any party in this country that cannot find enough American issues out of which to construct a platform, without importing foreign issues, is not likely to win this year. The merits of the Boer-British war is a matter about which Americans equally patriotic and equally lovers of liberty and justice, differ in judgment and hence in their sympathy. And since we cannot take part on either side, but are bound to maintain strict neutrality. Why should the parties in this country deal with it in their platforms?

—The Ministerial Institute of Southern Illinois was held with the First Christian Church in East St. Louis, last week, and while the attendance during the day sessions was not large, there was no dragging in the program nor in the discussions. The addresses were as vigorous as if given in the presence of a vast assembly. The night sessions were well attended and the people listened to able sermons, two of which were from St. Louis men and one from Bro. Harris, of Marion. The fact that East St. Louis was on the outskirts of the district doubtless explains the absence of many preachers from Southern Illinois., but there certainly could have been a better representation of the field if more interest was taken in this work. The addresses we heard from the preachers of Illinois who were present were well worth the effort to attend. There seems to be a sort of a Sahara about East and West St. Louis and the boards of the two states ought to take some steps toward irrigating and settling it. East St. Louis, like St. Louis, is a great mission field, and greatly needs cultivation.

—The total issues of the American Bible Society for the year, at home and abroad, amount to 1,406,801 copies; of these 832,497 were distributed outside of the United States—a very remarkable proportion. More than one half of the issues were manufactured at the Bible House, and of the residue a large part were printed in China, Japan, Syria and Turkey. The total issues of the society in eighty-four years amount to sixty-seven million three hundred and sixty-nine thousand three hundred and six copies.

—Young People's Paper, Elkhart, Ind, for June contains the poem: "The Lord Careth," from "My Good Poems," by Prof. A. Fairhurst. Young People's Paper is a journal of excellent tone and taste throughout.

—In a note from Mrs. Walter S. Burns, of Merchantville, N. J., she says:

The First Christian Church Sunday-school of Philadelphia, raised through the Easter envelopes $33.20 for the Benevolent Association of the Christian Church, whose headquarters is in St. Louis. Besides, they added twenty subscribers to the monthly Orphan's Cry. Only about two members of the church knew anything about such an organization for benevolent work in behalf of orphans, old people and the babies' home, before this. Outside of this substantial support, the Sunday-school was asked to give $100 on the interest of the mortgage. They pledged, through the classes, $140 and raised over $150. Is not that doing well for a school of about two hundred? I feel proud of them in their two efforts.

If this be a fair specimen of the liberality of our Eastern friends, we trust there may be no cessation of efforts to extend the principles of the Reformation through the East. The school has made a noble record.

—The convention of the fifth district of the Illinois Christian Missionary Society will be held in the Christian Church in Virden, June 5-7. The singing will be led by Guy B. Williamson of this city. The program embraces some of the living topics of the day and the convention should be one of great interest. Let there be a large attendance.

The Cause of Many Sudden Deaths.

There is a disease prevailing in this country most dangerous because so deceptive. Many sudden deaths are caused by it—heart disease, pneumonia, heart failure or apoplexy are often the result of kidney disease. If kidney trouble is allowed to advance the kidney-poisoned blood will attack the vital organs or the kidneys themselves break down and waste away cell by cell.

Bladder troubles most always result from a derangement of the kidneys and a cure is obtained quickest by a proper treatment of the kidneys. If you are feeling badly you can make no mistake by taking Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the great kidney, liver and bladder remedy.

It corrects inability to hold urine and scalding pain in passing it, and overcomes that unpleasant necessity of being compelled to go often during the day, and to get up many times during the night. The mild and the extraordinary effect of Swamp-Root is soon realized. It stands the highest for its wonderful cures of the most distressing cases.

Swamp-Root is pleasant to take and sold by all druggists in fifty-cent and one-dollar sized bottles. You may have a sample bottle of this wonderful new discovery and a book that tells all about it, both sent free by mail. Address Dr. Kilmer & Co. Binghamton, N. Y. When writing mention reading this generous offer in this paper.

—I am prepared to give a stereopticon exhibition of sixty views of the celebrated Tissott Paintings of the life of Christ. As you know, the Tissott Paintings are the finest illustration of the Christ-life ever produced. The views I am prepared to give of these paintings cover the leading features of the life of Christ and are guaranteed to be exact reproductions in color of the original Tissott Paintings. Should you like to have your Sunday-school, Edeavor Society or church see these views, together with explanatory lecture, now while they are entirely new, I shall be pleased to arrange with you for an exhibition of them in any church within reach of the city. Address W. W. Hopkins, this office.

—A new Christian Church building was dedicated in Esbon, Kansas, free from debt by Bro. Lowe, Kansas superintendent of missions. Bro. L. spent a week with the church confirming their faith. The pastor, W. R. Gill, reports two baptisms since the dedication.

—O. A. Bartholomew, pastor West End Christian Church, this city, reports the church and its activities in a healthful, growing stale. The church has recently had the addition of two men and their wives to its membership, who will add to its influence and intelligence in Christian work. The Bible-school is growing and other indications are favorable.

Personal Mention.

M. F. Harmon is now in a meeting in Hampton, Florida.

The church at Peckham, O. T., has employed Elder C. Monroe to preach for them this year.

Bruce Brown, pastor Central Christian Church, Denver, Col., uses large display cards to announce his sermon themes.

T. S. Tinsley, pastor of the Church of Christ in Owingsville, Ky., has added to his work a local church paper called The Invitation.

D. R. Dungan, pastor Mt. Cabanne Church, this city, delivers the baccalaureate sermon for Christian University, Canton, Mo., next Sunday.

Charles Reign Scoville is now in a meeting at Gainesville, Texas. The total number of additions in his Kansas City meeting was 201.

Florence Ruth Hackleman has come to take her place in the affections and household of Prof. and Mrs. W. E. M. Hackleman, Indianapolis, Ind.

Prof. O. C. Hubbell, of Fairfield, Neb., has been engaged for the third term of Fairfield School's superintendency. His daughter, L. Marie, will visit friends in Ohio this summer.

Mrs. Ella P. McConnell delivered the baccalaureate sermon for the High School of Mineral Ridge, Ohio, to an immense audience, in the Presbyterian Church of that city.

The Christian Courier announces the marriage of James Norvel Crutcher and Miss Eva Railey in the Christian Church in Belton, Mo., May 13th. Bro. Crutcher is the pastor of the church in Paris, Texas.

The baccalaureate sermon for the public schools of Florence, Colorado, was preached by Daniel Trundle to a large audience in the Methodist Church. The baccalaureate sermon was highly complimented by the journal of that city.

Jesse Teagarden preached the baccalaureate sermon at Merna, Neb., May 12th and the memorial sermon at Ansley, May 27th. Bro. Teagarden has recently removed from Broken Bow to Ansley, Neb., and reports the work at Ansley in a good condition.

The Buffalo (N. Y.) Courier, May 21st, contains the brief of a sermon preached by J. P. Lichtenberger, pastor of the Jefferson St. Church of Christ in that city, in the Sumner Place Methodist Church. The sermon was a strong, clear statement of the position and work of the Disciples of Christ in the religious world.

A. R. Hunt reports the church at Savannah, Mo., free from debt and enjoying its freedom. He preached the baccalaureate sermon for the high school of that city May 20th. Bro. Hunt will spend his vacation in a protracted meeting in Hamburg, Iowa, to begin about Aug. 1st. The church board has accepted a substitute to supply the pulpit during his absence.

E. E Cowperthwaite and wife, of Eldorado, Kan., were recently given a most enjoyable surprise at their home in that city. Their friends from all parts of the city joined in a most hearty gathering and after appropriate services presented them with a beautiful silk quilt. The expression of esteem deeply impressed the hearts of their pastor and his wife, and all were gladdened by the occasion.

Roy Caldwell, who has recently been called to the pastorate of the Christian Church of Perry, Iowa, was formally ordained to the ministry Monday evening, May 14th. Dr. I. N. McCash, of Des Moines, delivered the principal address, while J. M. Hoffmann, of Boone, gave the charge to the church. The pastors of the other churches of the town took a part in the services. Bro. Caldwell goes to Perry from very successful pastorates at Madrid and Woodward. His work at Perry opens up most hopefully. Large and appreciative audiences have attended his meetings and there were three additions by letter at last Sunday evening's service.

Carey E. Morgan.

An excellent likeness of Carey E. Morgan, A. M., appears on the first page of this issue. Mr. Morgan is one of the most brilliant members of the middle generation of ministers. Indiana claims him as her son, and Butler College is happy to number him among her alumni. Like many of our well-known ministers he stepped from the schoolroom into the pulpit.

C. E. Morgan began his ministry in 1886, in the churches of Arcadia and Atlanta, Ind. After serving his apprenticeship in these churches he accepted the pastorate at Wabash, Ind., where he labored most successfully for seven years, when he accepted a call to Minneapolis, Minn. During his stay of nearly six years in the "Flour City," he succeeded in gaining for the church a position and recognition it had not previously enjoyed. He took his place in the front ranks of the most excellent ministry of the Northern metropolis. The plea of the Disciples is practically unknown in the great Northwest. Mr. Morgan's work and influence was of incalculable value to our cause, not only in the "Twin Cities," but also throughout the "Gopher State."

While in Minneapolis he was a member of the faculty and one of the officers of the Northwestern Christian College, situated at Excelsior, an hour's ride from the city. He labored with others heroically to put this institution upon a firm foundation, but the building was entirely destroyed by fire some three years ago and has never been rebuilt.

In the summer of '99 Mr. Morgan received a call from the Seventh Street Church in historic Richmond, Va. This is one of the strongest and best congregations in the entire brotherhood. He began his pastorate here under most auspicious circumstances last September. Carey E. Morgan is one of the most friendly, congenial and versatile men one will met. It is not too much to forecast for him many years of profitable service in the Master's vineyard. He is an honor to the brotherhood and makes friends for the Christ, his church and himself wherever he goos. The subject of this sketch is still a young man, being on the sunnyside of forty. PERCY LEACH.

A Book for Summer Reading.

Perhaps the handsomest volume ever issued from the press of the Christian Publishing Company, and certainly the most interesting, is "Wheeling Through Europe," by Winfred Ernest Garrison, with illustrations by the author. It is a book for the summer season. Those who cannot make a trip to Europe will enjoy, during the long summer days, following one who has made the journey on his wheel, taking notes of the peculiarities of the country and of the people as they work in the fields, as they are found in the wayside inn, or engaged in their several occupations. The book is divided into two parts. One contains a description of the author's travels through Great Britain, in which he takes us into "The Heart of England;" "Through Shakespere's England;" "Through London and Kent;" "The South Coast;" "King Arthur's Country;" "From the Severn to the Dee;" "From Gladstoneville to Wordsworthshire;" "Through English Lakes and Scottish Lowlands;" with "A Circuit of the Highlands," and along "The East Side of England."

The second part gives an account of travels on the Continent, under such titles as "On Traveling for Pleasure;" "Things Dutch;" "Up the Rhine;" "The Black Forest;" "A Week in the Alps;" "Another Week in the Alps;" "A Corner of Northern Italy;" "In and Around Naples;" "From Naples to Rome;" "Florence and Venice;" "Through Austrian Tyrol;" "Munich and Nuremburg;" "Some German Roads and Towns." The author does not follow the beaten highways in his travels, nor does he in his style of letter-writing. When one has finished the reading of these chapters of travel he will feel that he has a fair knowledge of the countries and places visited, and knows something of the peoples and their customs.

Many read the author's letters as they appeared in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST with great interest, and they have been elaborated and revised, with considerable new material added, as they appear in the book. The book will have a special interest for two classes of people: First, those who contemplate making a trip to Europe and wish to profit by the experience of an observant traveler; second, those who feel that it will be impossible for them ever to make such a trip, and who wish to avail themselves of such knowledge of the countries of Europe as is afforded in these descriptive letters of travel. The publishers have put the book at the popular price of $1.00. It contains 263 pages, with illustrations. Address Christian Pub. Co.

Subscriptions to Paris Fund.

The following sums have been pledged for the purpose of sending Bro. Z. T. Sweeney to Paris, to hire a hall and preach the gospel and distribute literature during the progress of the Exposition in that city. Nearly all these sums have been subscribed in response to a circular letter sent out by the Standard Pub. Co. which, in addition to its own liberal subscription, has made a special effort to bring the enterprise to success. The amount should be swelled to $4,000 if possible, and it should be done at once. If others wish to help on this good work they would better address Z. T. Sweeney, at Columbus, or Standard Pub. Co., at once, as the matter should be closed up this week:

The Compton Heights Church, of this city, is moving steadily forward. At the beginning of this year I suggested as a mark for us to work to that we strive to "reduce the debt on our property by the amount of $1,000 and add 100 new names to our membership roll." The financial part will be more than provided for, and we have reason to believe that we will at least reach and perhaps go beyond the mark set for growth in membership. The work is moving on nicely and we are quite hopeful.

I have the privilege of a month's vacation during the summer, which time I would like to spend, not in rest, but in a change of work. I could hold one or two protracted meetings. Any church in a small town or country district that would like my services for such work may address me at 2721 St. Vincent Ave., this city. Will not be hard to satisfy as to terms.

Arkansas State Mission Notes.

Brother Kincaid is making heroic efforts to advance the cause in Hot Springs. He has engaged Bro. Romig to conduct a meeting there next fall. He will have to be assisted financially to support the meeting.

The little church at Hot Springs has raised as much money, according to financial ability, during the year, as any church known to the writer. We would like to raise $200 to support the meeting, devoting the surplus, if any, to work in Caddo Gap district.

Any one willing to assist in that work, write T. N. Kincaid, Hot Springs.

The work at Pine Bluff is growing in interest.

Taragould has a good church of 150 members, an excellent Sunday-school of 80, average attendance, a very large young people's meeting. There have been about one hundred accessions during the past 15 months.

Bro. R. O. Rogers has preached for them during this time and has done excellent work. Bro. Morgan is superintendent of the Sunday-school. It is one of the best in the state.

The state meeting will soon be here. Good time expected. Remember June 5-7.

Correspondence.

Chicago Letter.

A gratifying incident of the budding spring is the annual opening of the municipal garden patches under the oversight of the Bureau of Associated Charities. This year the city has appropriated $300 for the purchase of seeds. The ground is plowed and harrowed and then assigned to the tenants in one-fourth-acre lots, all ready for planting. The West Side gardens contain forty acres and the South Side tracts about an equal number. In the allottment preference is given to those who have the best record for the last year. This sensible charity has been in operation four years on the South Side and three years on the West Side. The only pity is that it cannot be more extensively employed and scores of acres lying idle in city lots held out of use by speculators brought to minister to human need. A further pity is that the incident does not open the eyes of the people to the fact that our present land-tenure system is wrong in principle and cruel and deadly in operation.

Evangelist H. B. Gibbud, who hails from farther East, is in the city conducting a personal workers' class for three weeks, at the First Baptist Church. His meetings are held Monday, Tuesday, Thursday and Friday, the series opening Monday, May 21st. He is highly spoken of and his work is sure to be fruitful. The Y. P. S. C. E. Union is to be commended for taking up such a work. Every pulpit needs, sadly needs, the reinforcement of a band of drilled personal workers. As Pressense observes in his History of the Apostolic Age: "Conversions in masses like these [Pentecost, etc.] do not recur in the second period of the church. The proselytes are many, but they are made one by one through the personal efforts of St. Paul The longer he remains in any place the more important is the church there formed. Results seem proportioned in their magnitude to the amount of direct personal effort." This is a feature of primitive Christianity that characterized Methodism in its beginnings—a feature which we should steadfastly struggle to reproduce.

The merry war between the labor unions and the contractors is still on. The unions are bringing evidence before the grand jury by which they hope to secure indictments against material men for illegal combines. It is refreshing to note a disposition to use the ordinary channels of law rather than blind, brute force. The wholesale plumbing supply houses have been most complained of, though the brick men come in for a fair share of accusation. There have been charges, with more or less evidence to give them color, of blackmail by the labor union "business agents," and the entire situation is deplorable. Every sensible person will echo the statement by Prof. Graham Taylor: "Between the 'fight-it-out' policy and the appeal to reason the public conscience will, when intelligently informed of the issue, not take long to render a decision." Some men think it will take Chicago years to recover from the loss entailed by the withdrawal of capital from enterprises here, because of the chronic labor disturbances.

The Conference of the Methodist Church, now in session, closing this week, is an epoch-making assembly. The organic law of the church has been greatly changed. Laymen have at last been granted equal privileges with the ministers, women have been admitted to the church councils, and now the time limit has been removed. All this seems to be in harmony with the spirit of the times. The old church is becoming democratic. While the vote was being taken on the abolition of the time limit a part of the scenery on the back of the stage fell with a crash; whereat Dr. S. P. Cadman, of New York, exclaimed: "Don't be excited, brethren, it's only the downfall of the time limit!" One good old sister who sat near your reporter at one of the sessions remarked: "We are on the eve of a great reform; the leaven is working everywhere." Indications are pretty clear that it is, not the "eve" of a reform, but the morning of the day of reform, much needed and long hoped for.

The second quarterly rally of the Chicago Christian Missionary Society was held in Kimball Hall May 13th. It was a spirited meeting. When we consider the miles of city that lie about us here, waiting to be evangelized, and then count our resources, it must be admitted that there is much faith even to talk about it. J. W. Allen spoke thoughtfully and eloquently. He said: "The nineteenth century has been building cities; it will be the work of the twentieth century to evangelize them. . . . There are three great constructive forces in society—the home, the school and the church. In the cities the home force is reduced to the minimum; the school has little moral and spiritual influence: hence, the great burden falls on the church. . . . The life of the church must be intense. The people of Chicago do not care for cold buckwheat cakes: they must be hot—very hot!"

W. B. Taylor spoke with enthusiasm and discrimination, and stirred every heart. He then appealed for members for the Church Building Syndicate and enrolled twenty-five more, making the club over ninety. These people pledge themselves to pay five dollars every time a mission church is erected in the city, the money to go into a permanent loan fund.

Mrs. E. W. Darst came to the city on the 21st inst. to ship their household goods to Midland, Texas, where she and her husband will labor with the church for a year at least. . . . J. H. O. Smith has gone on a leave of absence for the summer. After a meeting in Kentucky he and his wife will visit the Pacific Coast. . . The Monroe Street and the West Side Churches are much encouraged over the success of their building enterprises. . . . The First Church now numbers 199; over $40 contributed to Home Missions.

West Side Christian Church.

At the time of the financial panic of 1893 the West Side Christian Church, Chicago, had begun the erection of a house of worship on Jackson Boulevard. The business failures and depressions of that and succeeding years prevented the completion of the building beyond the first story, and the congregation struggled along under the burden of a debt. However, last November it was determined to complete the structure. Bro. Bruce Brown (then pastor) labored unweariedly in the cause, $3,200 was pledged, and contractors and workmen secured. Soon, however, obstacles began to appear. At the first of the year Bro. Brown resigned to accept the pastorate of the Central Christian Church in Denver. Soon afterward the great strike was declared and work on the building ceased. For weeks the piles of brick and stone lay untouched and the ragged, uneven walls threatened the safety of the structure. Meantime, the strike also cast its gloomy blight over church members in every line of business. The outlook seemed discouraging.

In spite of these unfortunate circumstances Bro. E. B. Reynolds, Sunday-school superintendent, determined to raise $3,000, needed to push forward the work of the building. Day and night he labored in the cause. Visiting many people in the community who are not members of the church he was encouraged, not only to hear from them of the high standing of the church in the neighborhood, but also to receive substantial contributions from them. On the 13th of May he presented the matter to the congregation, calling for pledges, with the faith that the $3,000 would be offered. The result shows how God answers prayer. The pledges made (almost all of which were in small sums) finally aggregated $5,000, $2,000 more than was expected, and making a total pledge of $8,200 since last November; all this in addition to keeping up the regular expenses of the church. It is worthy of note that in this $5,000 there is not one pledge from a church society, which leaves the societies free to carry on their special lines of activity, and also permits their members to give their offerings personally instead of giving a portion through societies.

The congregation now sees its way to complete and seat the church, which will be one one of the most conveniently arranged buildings of the kind in Chicago, as well as the largest and best church owned by our brotherhood in the city.

Although the strike is still on, the contractors have secured non-union workmen, and with police protection have resumed work, which is now being steadily carried forward.

An interesting fact in connection with the building is that Bro. J. W. Allen, who for thirteen years was pastor of the church and under whose ministry the building was begun, has been with the congregation since the 1st of March, and will have the joy of dedicating to the worship of God a building that represents so much of his life's most earnest labor. S. J. CHAPMAN, Treas.

His Wife Insisted

And he thought he'd humor her, no doubt. The result shows that a man rarely loses by following his wife's advice. Those who suffer from obstinate cough, bronchitis, weak lungs and ailments in general which tend to consumption, will find speedy relief and perfect cure in the use of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. It cures ninety-eight per cent. of those who give it a fair and faithful trial. It purifies the blood, heals the lungs and builds up the body with firm flesh instead of flabby fat. The "Discovery" contains no alcohol, neither opium, cocaine, nor other narcotics.

"Only for Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery I think I would be in my grave to-day," writes Mr. Moses Miles, of Hilliard, Uinta Co., Wyoming. "I had asthma so bad I could not sleep at night and was compelled to give up work. It affected my lungs so that I coughed all the time, both day and night. My friends all thought I had consumption. My wife had taken Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, and it had helped her so much she insisted on my trying his 'Golden Medical Discovery'—which I did. I have taken four bottles and am now a well man, weighing 185 pounds, thanks to Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. B. B. Tyler's Letter.

Springfield has a population of probably sixty thousand. It is beautifully situated on the east bank of the Connecticut River. Evidences of wealth and culture abound. The town is the metropolis of Western Massachusetts, and is the purchasing center for one hundred and fifty thousand people within a radius of ten miles. Springfield was settled in 1635 by persons from the Massachusetts Bay colony. Here is a United States Armory. A large number of skilled workmen are engaged in the manufacture of the Krag-Jorgensen rifle. This city is a great place for the manufacture of firearms. Much interest is felt in the cause of education. The free schools of Springfield are of a superior character. The high-school building is very handsome, the finest for the purpose that I have seen, and is said to be splendidly equipped. The public library has more than 109,000 volumes. The art collection is one of the most valuable in the country. The Springfield Republican is one of the best edited papers in the United States; and it is as mean as it is able! I have failed to find in its columns a single good word for the Government of the United States. A man reading this paper and believing its statements would receive the impression that the Spanish Monarchy is superior in all important respects to the North American Republic. There is the usual number of churches in a place of this size; but the houses of worship are unusually fine. There is an excellent Young Men's Christian Association. It is doing good work—especially among railroad men. Religious meetings are held once a week in the shops at the noon hour. These are well attended and the men are attentive. Private schools are numerous. There is a French Protestant college in Springfield. This is also the home of the Bible Normal College, an institution for the preparation of young men and young women for Sunday-school work, for the work of city missions, for the training of foreign missionaries and for the training of pastors' helpers. The Bible Normal College owns its own buildings, which cost, with land and furniture, about $90,000. It is well equipped for its important work. The purpose of its managers is to send out workers who understand both the Bible and the best methods of dealing with those who are to be taught and helped. It is not a theological seminary; but is a school for training Christian workers. The Rev. David Allen Reed is president. By him the school was founded in 1885. He called it the School for Christian Workers. The present name was given it in 1897. He believes that the teachers will hold a prominent place in the progress of Christianity in the not remote future. The Bible Normal College seeks to restore to its proper place in the church the teacher and the teaching function. One of the ways of working is for those who receive training to find employment as operatives in mills and factories, that the knowledge of Jesus our Lord may be brought to those who are ignorant of his saving grace. The president read a letter to me written by a young woman who is employed in a cotton mill in Lowell. Apparently, she is there as are the other girls, i. e., to earn a living; but she is there really to save her sisters. In the mill in which she is employed there are three thousand girls. This is, however, but one of five mills in the city of Lowell. There must be from twelve to fifteen thousand of these girls. Many of them are French Canadians and do not understand English. Their only places of entertainment are a cheap theatre and dance halls. The Bible Normal College trains workers for such places and for this character of service. Is there not in this enterprise the spirit of apostolic Christianity?

"The First Church of Christ" in Springfield is the oldest church in Western Massachusetts. It is of the Congregational order. The "Christian Church" in New England is sometimes called "The Old Christian Order," and "The Christian Connexion." There is but little in common between "the Christian Church," in New England, and the Disciples of Christ. In numbers "the Christian Church" is not increasing. So respectable an authority as "The Century Dictionary" speaks of the members of "the Christian Church" as "Unitarian Baptists." There is something in the facts here stated that ought to be helpful to those who are especially anxious about the name.

There is a place in Springfield where those worship who desire and are determined to be simply Christians. It is sometimes called "The White Chapel," and is No. 767 South Main Street. You will feel that you are at the right place when you see over the door the words:

CHURCH OF CHRIST.

The following motto is on the bulletin board:

IN FAITH UNITY.
IN OPINIONS LIBERTY.
IN ALL THINGS CHARITY.

This is one of the most attractive little places that you ever entered. The number of names together of these Disciples of Christ is fifty-four. How they get along excites surprise. This little church seems not to be in trouble as are the other churches in the city. It is, for one thing, free from debt. The chapel is paid for. The members seem to "love one another with pure hearts fervently." This work began probably four years ago in Dr. Detchon's house. He and his wife and S. M. Hunt met on the Lord's day to remember Jesus in the breaking of bread. After the church was organized Dr. Detchon acted as pastor until his death, about two years ago. E. C. Davis is now pastor. Bro. Davis was baptized by J. H. Garrison, in Boston, a little more than fifteen years ago. He is a graduate of Hiram College. I cannot think of a man better suited to our work, in Springfield, than Bro. E. C. Davis. His wife comes of an old Congregational family. She is a thorough Disciple and is, to her husband, in his difficult work, a real helper. The brethren believe in and love those noble young people. May their days in this beautiful city be prolonged, and may the benediction of Heaven be on them continually.

The value of the printing press in our work is not generally appreciated by us. S. M. Hunt is, in his place, our most important man in New England. The reading of Isaac Errett's tract entitled OUR POSITION brought him to us. A few words will tell the story and be our argument for a more liberal use of the printed page. Bro. Hunt is a traveling man. At the time to which reference is here made he was not satisfied in his church relations. A newspaper announcement took him to a hall in which a Disciple of Christ was preaching. He knew nothing of us. He did not understand the notice in the paper or he would not have attended the meeting. As soon as he arrived at the place he saw that he had made a mistake; but he remained a short time and studied the little company as it came together. He did not remain to hear the sermon. As he left the place he picked up a tract. The next day on the train, having neglected to buy a morning paper, he took this tract out of his pocket and read it. He was delighted. He said to himself: "This is what I want." He did not know where to find a company of the people whose position was so admirably set forth in the tract. One day he saw in a Boston paper an announcement which excited his interest. He said: "This must be a meeting of the people spoken of in the tract." George Darsie was preaching in Boston at the time. S. M. Hunt at once wrote to him. A correspondence followed. The result was that this eager, honest, earnest inquirer became a member of the church at that time meeting on Shawmut Avenue and Madison Street, Boston; now on St. James Street in Roxbury Bro. Hunt is a good business man. He at once began to use his business ability for the promotion of New Testament Christianity in New England. He does not preach; he simply practices. S. M. Hunt is a lay bishop. Do you know what this is? He has, in an important sense, the care of all the congregations of Disciples of Christ in New England. But few men combine so happily the devotional, the emotional, and the practical in the Christian life.

A house of worship in Everett, Mass., will be dedicated to the cause of primitive Christianity next Lord's day. Some account of the Disciples in Everett will be given next week. B. B. T.

Kansas City Letter.

The meeting at the Sixth Street and Prospect Avenue Church is worthy to be called a great meeting. Evangelists Scoville and Wilson have been with us five weeks and nearly 200 have been added already to our fellowship. Great audiences have gathered from the very initial service and the interest has been continuous; at times intense. The church is being revived, men and women are being turned to the Lord. The Man of Galilee is being honored. The eyes of the city have been upon the meeting and its success is impressively felt.

It is worth our while, surely, to study a work like this and to discover, if we may, the causes of this triumph, for, to be sure, it did not "just happen."

To begin, there was preparation. For three months the meeting had been announced. The committees had their respective work outlined to them and were, with but few exceptions, ready for it. The church was keyed up to great expectancy. In every way possible the meeting was kept before the people. The pastor preached several sermons on the coming meeting and was ably seconded in his work by the official board and other agencies of the church. The preparation was, of course, not all that it should have been—this would mean a perfect church—but it was more thorough and comprehensive than churches usually make. Sunday-school, Christian Endeavorers, C. W. B. M. auxiliary workers, deacons, elders and pastor might have done more, but something they did at least to prepare for a great work.

Not only was there preparation, but opportunity. The field is large, the harvest great. The church numbered, before the meeting began, almost 1,000 souls and the multitudes, allied with so great a number, the outside constituency of the church made large reaping a sure expectancy. The Sunday-school had an average attendance of over 400, and from this source many beautiful and valuable accessions might be looked for. The church was in perfect harmony, stood second in point of numbers among the Protestant churches of the city, was alive in all departments of its work and was in itself an invitation to the outside world. The only force to be reckoned against, save always inertia, was a conservatism as to methods born of its history. The church has not been built up through revival services—during the present pastorate of seven and one-half years, in which nearly 1,000 had been added, only three meetings having been held and those not of long duration—naturally was a trifle more distrustful of the efficacy of revival meetings than a church whose every breath of zeal had been kindled by evangelistic campaigns. But this conservatism was not unyielding and the work was heartily undertaken.

And finally, though certainly not of least importance, was the contribution made by the workers who came to us, Brothers Wilson and Scoville. Mr. Wilson did his work well. As a conductor of music he is an unqualified success and as a soloist has few superiors. To the work of this brother and the spirited song service thereby made possible much of the success of the meeting is due.

Chas. Reign Scoville, preacher of the gospel, demands more than a passing word. Though a young man he is already in the very front rank of our evangelists and has, deservedly, a national and enviable reputation. In the East, West, North and South he has labored, and everywhere successfully. Such large and uniform success must be based upon solid worth. These great meetings are not accidental. There is something, there is much, in the man. He is worth looking at, worth studying. During the meeting if a half hundred preachers came in to study the man and his methods, what would they say of the man, of his methods? Opinions would doubtless differ. Some would ascribe his success to this, others to that. All though I am sure they would agree with this: that here is a man who knows his work and who is in his realm a master—yes, master.

He knows men. His sermons, plain, simple, often homely, are directed to men on the plane of their actual thought and life. The preacher is never on the mountain top or in the clouds. His feet are firmly planted on the earth. He lives where men live. He speaks their language. He knows their weakness and their needs. His sermons fit into their present conditions. Into a real sympathy with them the evangelist has entered and this knowlege and this sympathy are realized and appreciated.

He knows methods. In this he is a past master. Probably no other workman in this particular field has so wide a range. He understands the value of variety. He does not stale by routine. His is the enlivening quality of versatility. He takes a quiet pleasure in mild surprises. He revels in the unexpected. No single day's work can forecast another. You never feel that you can interpret his to-morrow. In large and judicious use of all advertising expedients his work is notable. In every legitimate way he seeks and secures attention. Here is one who believes that no light should be quenched by the bushel, nor timidity be voiceless. He has the gospel. In his heart he realizes that the world needs this gospel and ways many are sought to bring men to a knowledge of this need. He would do anything, all things, in Christ, to bring men to hear the Word. And then he would preach the Word. He knows men. He knows methods. He knows more—the Bible. He knows it. He preaches it—the whole Bible. Our position is never in the background. The whole truth in Jesus is felt and preached, and even in love.

Such a man can do only a great work. Good will be done. Churches will be built up in the Christ-life. New channels of Christian endeavor will be cut out. New inspirations will be felt. Christ will be glorified. Men will be saved.

The church at Sixth Street and Prospect Avenue rejoices in the coming of our bother and his sweet singer. We heartily commend them everywhere to the faithful.

West Creighton Ave. Church of Christ.

Our work is growing in every department, and we think now that our property is saved. There is a bright future in store for our cause in the city of Fort Wayne. While the debt is still very heavy for our membership, yet by hard work and economy, the work can be carried on to a successful issue.

The C. W. B. M. has lent us a helping hand this year. Were it not for their help it would be absolutely impossible for us to remain with the church, owing to the great sacrifice we have had to make during the past two years. God bless the women in their noble work.

Yet, I do not know that we should count it a sacrifice, but rather a joy, since God has so propitiously blessed us, in that he has given us so glorious a triumph. When we began there were only a very few who thought it possible to raise a sufficient amount to save the property, but that few prayed, worked and sacrificed, and others, seeing their efforts, joined them, so that on the 10th of April all fear of losing the property was dispelled by transferring the last $3,000 mortgage from the Tri State Association to the Church Extension. The saving of the property is due to the united efforts on the part of the Extension, state, district, church and C. W. B. M. I am sure that the coming years will vindicate the wisdom of their uniting to save the West Creighton Ave. Church to our cause. I have to report for the month of April 10 additions; seven by baptism, three by letter.

Fire in a Church!

Late on the evening of Thursday, May 9th, 1900, a fire was discovered in the Richmond Ave. Church of Christ, Buffalo, N. Y. Worse than that, it proved to have been of incendiary origin; and worst of all, the incendiary turned out to be a woman!

To begin at the beginning: For something like thirteen years the church had been groaning under the burden of a mortgage given for the purpose of assisting in the building of its edifice. The amount of the original mortgage was $5,000, an amount which, by means of rapidly accruing interest, finally reached a total of nearly $8,000.

Early in the present year the Rev. Lloyd Darsie, then pastor of the church, but now settled as the successor of the Rev. John Sweeney, over the church in Paris, Ky., was suddenly inspired to make an effort looking to the removal of this burden from the activities of the church. His plan was to divide the membership into groups, subjecting each to a judicious assessment, after carefully considering the financial ability of its individual constituents. The idea was heartily endorsed by the official board as well as by many others in the church to whom it was made known, with the result that the amount necessary for the cancelation of the obnoxious mortgage was raised in an incredibly short time and with a readiness that was most remarkable.

On the evening named the other three churches of Christ in Buffalo—each one being a daughter of Richmond Avenue—united with the mother church in a service which included the burning of the mortgage, with its accompanying bond. The preliminary meeting, devoted to prayer, praise and testimony, was led by Rev. Brother Lichtenberger, of the Jefferson Street Church, and was participated in by members of the different churches represented. At nine o'clock the leader gave place to Brother A. B. Kellogg, of the Richmond Avenue Church, who thus became master of ceremonies. A paper prepared by the trustees and rehearsing the history of the mortgage was read by Miss Adelaide Graybiel, after which Mrs. James Tillinghast, who was the largest contributor to the fund, was invited to become the instrument in the destruction of the mortgage. The now useless paper, with the bond, were first torn into shreads by a brother whose ruthless expression showed that his whole heart was in his work, the fragments being consigned to a censor standing upon an improvised altar; whereupon Mrs. Tillinghast tripped gaily to the platform and, lighting a match, communicated its flame to the waiting pile. As soon as the flames had partially died away the leader requested the congregation to rise and unite in the long meter doxology, after which a prayer of thanksgiving was offered by Rev. Anson G. Chester. The congregation being again seated, the history of the payment of the mortgage was read by Brother Geo. H. Dunston. This was followed by the reading of letters from most of the pastors who have served the Richmond Avenue Church: F. M. Kibby, O. G. Hertzog, G. L Wharton, J. G. Waggoner, F. W. Norton, Mrs. Bessie Trible (wife of a pastor now dead), Rev. Z. T. Sweeney, a warm and valued friend of the church, and "last but not least," as the leader said, "Brother Lloyd Darsie." The services were interspersed with suitable music by the choir of the church, and the occasion was in every way enjoyable.

It is generally conceded that Brother A. B. Kellogg had more to do in bringing about the result herewith reported than any other individual member of the church. It therefore seemed fitting that the membership by a rising vote should testify their appreciation of his devoted and indefatigable service. This having been done, Miss Adelaide Graybiel came to the front bearing an immense bouquet of roses which she presented to the surprised and modest brother, having first varnished him with eulogy until his ample face shone again.

Among those present on this glad occasion was Miss Mary Graybiel, our missionary at Mahoba, India.

It is an interesting fact that Brother G. L. Wharton contributed the first dollar to the church building fund and the last dollar toward the payment of the mortgage.

We hope that the fire thus kindled in the Richmond Avenue Church will prove to be prophetic, and that its reflex influence will serve to warm all our hearts into an enthusiasm which will lead to holier living and heartier work.

The Streator Colony.

Streator Colony is located in Scott County, Ark., near the head waters of the Poteau River. This valley is several miles wide and not subject to overflow. The soil is good and well adapted to general farming, stock and fruit-growing. The railroad now in process of construction, one-half or more of the grading done, passes within six miles of the Streator Colony. When this road is put in operation new enterprises and activities will follow in rapid succession. It will open a market at once for the fine timber and mineral products of this part of the state, and will also improve the market for the products of the farm. I spent one week in the neighborhood of Streator Colony, spoken of in this paper before. A little band of our brotherhood in company, with Bro. W. A. Streator, came and settled in this beautiful valley about three years ago; all of very limited means, but have pleasant homes and are out of debt. They invite our people to come and possess the land and help build a house where they can worship under "their own vine and fig tree." Those who wish to be informed in regard to the facts in reference to homes, schools, church privileges will not mistake if they consult Bro. W. A. Streator. Come to Mena or write to M. B. Legate.

History of Hiram College.

Hiram College closes fifty years of its history with its next commencement. The occasion is to be marked, among other things, by a history of Hiram College, embracing that of the Eclectic Institute, which was its predecessor. Prof. A. C. Pierson has been selected as the historian, and the committee of publication is composed of Prof. B. S. Dean, E. B. Wakefield and A. C. Pierson. The book is to include the proceeeings of the Jubilee Week, and also a complete register of teachers and alumni. It will make a volume of about three hundred pages, and will be well illustrated with half-tones of Hiram presidents, buildings and scenery, and will be published in the best mechanical style. The book will be ready for delivery about the middle of the summer. The The price to advanced subscribers will be $1.00; after publication, $1.25. As the edition will be liite d, those who wish the work should notify the committee at once.

Butler College Catalogue.

The publication of the catalogue of Butler College and Bible College for the coming year, which we have received from Irvington, Ind., shows a notable advance in the work of these well-known institutions. The Bible College enters upon the third year of its existence as a separate school, with a record of assured usefulness and with bright prospects for a larger work. Under the efficient supervision of Dean Jabez Hall the attendance has steadily increased frow the first, and new courses of instruction are offered every year. Attractive and complete courses in the Old and New Testament, in Homiletics and Pastoral Theology, in Sociology and in Church History are announced in the present catalogue. We note with pleasure that the study of missions has received a recognized place in the curriculum. The careful study of missions in our colleges is certain to make missionary pastors and efficient workers in the foreign field.

The announcement of Bulter College itself reveals several interesting features. A Teachers' College Study Department has been added for the benefit chiefly of the school-teachers of Indianapolis. It was largely attended last year and will be a permanent part of the work hereafter. A six weeks' summer school is announced for July and August of this year. We have seen few announcements of summer work more attractive and complete than this one. The Music and Art Schools show a marked increase in the number of students and of cou'ses offered. Altogether the college seems to have had a prosperous year. The attendance registered was 340.

The faculty and departments of instruction continue with few changes for this year. Prof. W. E. Garrison has resigned the chair of History to accept a position on the staff of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. His place is taken by Mr. C. B. Coleman, a graduate of Yale and the University of Chicago. The teaching force is strenghened by the call of Professor McKee to the chair of Old Testament Language and Literature. The other departments are held as follows: Pres. Scot Butler, Latin; G. B. Brown, Greek; T. C. How, German; H. L. Brunner, Biology and Geology; J. D. Forrest, Sociology and Economics; E. S. Ames, Philosophy and Pedagogy; W. J. Karslake, Chemistry; Jabez Hall, Homiletics and Pastoral Theology; B. A. Jenkins, New Testament; S. A. Harber, Mathematics; W. D. Howe, English; E. U. Abbott, Romance Language; U. F. Kelly, Physical Culture. C.

Central Christian College.

The board of curators of Central Christian College wishes to call your attention to the fact that, although our college has passed through many adversities, we are now happy to report that our entire floating indebtedness has been paid, leaving us free from debt except a mortgage of $4,000, which is partly provided for.

Under the administration of President Z. Moore, peace and good will have prevailed during the past two years. Bro. Moore will be succeeded by J. W. Ellis, A. M., Ph. D., LL D., one of the most prominent educators of the state. He is well known to our brotherhood and needs no commendation from us. He will be supported by a strong faculty who are specialists in their departments.

This institution has already established a reputation for soundness in the faith, and has always maintained a high standard of morality and culture among the students. The board of curators and citizens of Albany confidently expect a large increase in the attendance for next year, and to this end they kindly request your patronage and co-operation.

Thorough courses are offered in Science, Classice, Sacred Literature, Commercial Science, Shorthand and Typewriting, Journalism and Typography, Music and Art.

A prominent feature of this college is its strong Bible Course. For further information address John W. Ellis, president, Plattsburg, Missouri (for the present). But after July 1st, address him at Albany, Missouri.

Contrast.

There are many striking contrasts in life. In this communication I desire to call attention to one that made a deep impression on me. In soliciting for orphan children, I called on———in the town of———for financial support. The family claims to be members of the Christian Church and are said to be worth a million dollars. This was my second call; both times I was rudely turned away empty-handed.

This is one si'e; now for the other: I visited the Camden Point Female Orphan School, a short time ago, with no thought of asking them to help the orphans. Bro. Riall said he thought they would be glad to contribute something. I objected on the ground that it was calling on orphans to keep orphans. He insisted, and I consented. The result was an offering of $11.25, made willingly, gladly and cheerfully.

Those who have an interest in this work are glad to support it and to hear of it. Those who do little or nothing are disposed to turn away and even think that the solicitor's presentation of this work amounts to a "ding-donging" and an effort to extort money and pledges.

I hereby give notice that I want no money unless it can be contributed willingly and with a sincere desire to help orphan children and aged Disciples. Brethren, when I call, if you can't do this, say, "No" and that will end the matter.

J. D. DILLARD.

Tabernacle Plans...

Just the Thing for Protracted Meetings.

Those wishing to erect tabernacles should send to Evangelist Lawrence Wright, of Jefferson, Iowa, for plans and specifications. He has had a wide experience in tabernacle building. Last year his plans were called for from all parts of the U S. and Canada. Since then he has revised and improved them, and is now prepared to offer to the brotherhood the best thing ever put out in that line. The draft shows every stick of timber used in the building and just where it belongs. The drafts are for tabernacles seating from two hundred (200) to one thousand (1000). They show the location of every seat in the tabernacle, the width of the aisles, the location and size of the platform. The draft also shows just how the seats are made.

The draft and specifications are so complete that any one can use them—no need of a carpenter. For full particulars, address (enclosing stamp for reply)

Missouri Bible-school Notes.

All aboard for California and our silver anniversary; but send in your names to C. C. Hill or you may get left.

Boydsville, of Callaway, met its apportionment in full this year. Every one of H. J. Corwin's schools, this year, go on the roll of honor. How about your schools, fellow-ministers?

We regret that souvenir programs can not be sent free gratis to all, but one will go to each of the schools and to the ministers, the others to be given out at the convention to enrolled delegates, the remainder to be sold at 10c. each, or $1 per dozen, postage paid, to help us meet the expense, and when gone, no others at any price. Write early.

Mt. Cabanne is suffering from measles, in the Orphans' Home section, but the good work goes on under men like W. W. Dowling, Wm. Nifong and F. M. Call just the same whether many or few be present, and that's what makes success. They pay their apportionment in full for this year and will send a good delegation to California—Barclay Meador is chairman of the committee on delegation—and it would be wise for other schools to do likewise.

The Missouri Pacific, always generous to us, gives one fare for the round trip, selling tickets on the 11th and 12th, and from all their lines in Missouri, and we hope others will do likewise. Ask your county or city papers to make a note of it for you; they will do so gladly.

Five ladies at Oak Grove, Calloway, have sent in their award of merit card, and to them will go a souvenir and a memento; thanks to Emma Windsor.

Blue Springs will continue to help us while the present forces are to the front there, just as others could if they would, with no excuses to put.

The girls at Emden do not forget us, nor the field force, but fill their cards and send them in by Superintendent A. A. Martin, while Amazonia remits their apportionment in full, as Mrs. Aretta Fleming said they would.

Will not all help us complete our files with any copies of the B. S. minutes for the years between '88 and '95, or before '83? Will pay for them gladly.

Banners awarded this year on school reports sent in, none others. Hear? If you have lost the blank will cheerfully furnish others, but send in report.

The Endeavorers must see that their day, Monday noon to Tuesday noon, is thoroughly announced in all meetings of their societies and that delegations are made up of persons sure to go, D. V. Entertainment free, but send in names.

Nashville, O. W. Jones, minister, is with us as usual, and is one of the South Missouri schools always in all the good works of the Christ.

To many of our stronger giving friends this is another warning that we "can not make fish of one and flesh of another" this year, so that if the pledge is not paid by May 31 I must put you down as delinquent, though I may regret it as much as or more than any one else. Your fault, not mine.

In answer to the many inquiries, we put into papers just who would be in the souvenirs, also how all could possess them, but to send one to each applicant so far, would cost too much of the money contributed for the work.

This is the last opportunity to urge you to meet your apportionment before the end of the month, and it will be so much easier and more satisfactory every way if you will. Please do not neglect one moment longer. H. F. DAVIS.

Oklahoma Ministerial Institute.

The Ministerial Institute of the Christian Church of Oklahoma was held at Norman, May 15, 16 and 17.

The institute was called to order promptly at 3:30 P. M., Tuesday, May 15, by W. A. Humphrey, chairman.

Devotional services were conducted by C. W. Van Dolah.

The program was somewhat revised, and a general discussion was had on institute work, opened by A. B. Carpenter, of Chandler.

Wednesday morning the devotional service was conducted by W. A. Wherry, of Norman, after which H. R. Walling, of Medford, discussed "Problems Before the Country Church," followed by Bro. Marshall, of Oklahoma City, on "Problems Before the City Church."

These two brethren led the institute into a very helpful consideration of the many problems before our churches.

Evangelist D. D. Boyle, of Topeka, Kan., who is at present assisting W. A. Wherry and the church at Norman in a special revival meeting, gave the institute instruction on "How to Get Ready and Hold a Revival Meeting."

Wednesday afternoon the devotional service was followed by a general discussion on the relation of the preacher to the auxiliaries of the church, after which Bro. J. H. Garrison, editor of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, St. Louis, Mo., gave an excellent address on "The Message for the Ministry of To-day."

After a short recess C. W. Van Dolah, of Shawnee, read a paper on "The True Expansion."

Thursday morning the institute made a very pleasant visit to the Territorial University, which is located here. Returning to the church, various matters were discussed looking to the interest of the church in Oklahoma.

For the protection of the churches against unworthy men it was decided to select a committee on ministerial standing, which was done, consisting of W. A. Humphrey, Guthrie, chairman; J. H. Allen, Tecumseh; John Franning, Norman; W. B. Frank, Chandler; G. H. Hutchins, Perry; J. T. Ogle, Guthrie.

A. B. Carpenter read an excellent paper on "How to Secure a Model Prayer-meeting."

W. A. Humphrey told "How to Render Territorial Organization More Effective."

The devotional service of the afternoon was followed by another splendid lecture by Bro. J. H. Garrison, on "The Trend of Modern Religious Thought."

The committee on resolutions submitted the following report, which was adopted:

1st. That our thanks be expressed to the people of Norman, who have so freely received us into their homes as their guests, and shared their comforts with us.

2nd. That we most heartily recognize in the Territorial University a most important factor in the intellectual development of the people of the territory, and that for its success we commend it to our young men and women with patriotic pride.

3rd. That we express our thanks to Bros. Garrison and Boyle for their presence and help.

4th. That the institute heartily concurs in the majority report of the temperance committee of the M. E. General Conference, now in session, and that it also heartily endorses the Anti-saloon League and every other reputable means to stamp out the liquor traffic.

The report of the committee on nominations was heard and adopted, and at 2:30 P. M. the institute came to an end.

We hope to have a larger attendance at the next institute, that the ministers of Oklahoma may come into closer touch with one another.

Ohio Christian Missionary Convention.

On May 21-24 the Ohio Christian Missionary Society met at Mansfield, Ohio. Mansfield is a little city of 20,000 people, located in the northern central part of the state. The congregation here has an excellent house of worship, with a membership of 550. They seem to be an active, aggressive people and did everything they could to care for the convention and make all feel at home.

The convention was a large one, near 500 delegates being enrolled. Among them were 125 preachers of the gospel and not a few of the leading business men of the state. The personnel of the convention was magnificent. There was at least a score of men of national reputation. Among these were such men as Chas. L. Loos, A. McLean, R. Moffett, F.M.Green, B. L. Smith, F. D. Power, W. J. Lhamon, E. V. Zollars, J. H. Fillmore, G. L. Wharton, John E. Pounds, Geo. A. Miller, A. M. Harvuot, and in addition to these the great rank and file of earnest, devoted, cultured men in the ministry of the gospel made it truly a great convention. But it was not simply a convention of preachers. Among the delegates could be seen quite a number of excellent Christian business men. Such men as Dr. H. Gerould, Abram Teachout, Lathrop Cooley, Delassus Mercer, Robt. Place, Samuel Mercer, A. R. Teachout, Robt. Miller and quite a number of others who seemed greatly interested in the success of the cause of Christ. These men are greatly needed and add strength to our conventions.

S. H. Bartlett, state secretary, rendered a very commendable report of work done by the Ohio churches. It was by far the largest in liberality ever presented at any state convention. There were 35 different men employed in the state who labored 5,479 days. These had 653 conversions to Christ and 232 other additions. But the best part of the report was in the large contributions for the different missionary organizations of the brotherhood. These contributions were as follows:

Contributed for State Missions	$13,734
" " Home Missions	20,477
" to the Christian Woman's Board	16,725
" for Foreign Missions	25,920
" " State Work C. W. B. M.	1,745
Total for all missions	$78,601

This is $1.12 per member from Ohio for missions—a little more than twice the average per member in the whole brotherhood. Other states will certainly be stimulated by this report from Ohio. This is S. H. Bartlett's first year as state secretary, and he has proven a most efficient man in every respect. During the last thirty years Ohio has had but two secretaries, R. Moffett and Alanson Wilcox, and Bro. Bartlett has proven a worthy successor to these efficient men. He enjoys his work and the convention was happy over the splendid results.

Our ladies of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions had an excellent day. These Christian women are among the most cultured, most capable and active of any state. As stated, the auxiliaries of Ohio raised for the state and national boards, $18,470. Ohio sisters are in the lead in this good work. Miss Mary A. Lyons, the state secretary, presented a systematic report of an excellent year's work. The 5,000 sisters in the auxilliaries of Ohio are full of the missionary spirit and truly consecrated to Christ. The addresses of the ladies were remarkable for three things—the vigorous truths they contained, the chaste, classic language in which they were delivered and the Christlike spirit they breathed. How could it be otherwise when such ladies as Mrs. Jessie Brown Pounds, Mrs. A. R. Teachout, Mrs. M. F. Miles, Mrs. Minnie Russell, Helen F. Barnes and several returned missionaries were among those who addressed the convention. The addresses in the Ohio Christian Missionary Society were delivered by men of experience and mature years. The truths they presented were incarnate and they spoke with force and brought conviction to their hearers. If our time and space would permit we would cheerfully give a description of each address, as they deserve. This, of course, we cannot do. We will say, however, that W. J. Lhamon, delivered six addresses on Bible themes which greatly pleased the audience. Some of his thoughts were a little new to a part of the audience, but all were deeply interested and instructed. We were sorry that we were compelled to leave and did not hear F. D. Power, Prof. C. L. Loos and Pres. E. V. Zollars.

CONVENTION NOTES.

Benj. L. Smith makes an ideal president.

A. L. Fillmore led the song service and did it well.

W. T. Sellers sells books. He is the agent of the Christian Publishing Co., and all were pleased by his kind treatment.

J. J. Cahill, recording secretary, attended strictly to business.

The next convention goes to Akron, Ohio, and in two years it will likely go to Columbus.

Miss Lois A. White, ex-secretary of the C. W. B. M., is again a Buckeye and indicated by her presence that her heart was as warm in the mission work as formerly.

When the death of Dean H. W. Everest, Des Moines, Ia., was announced the convention paused to remember this good man and his work. Resolutions of sympathy were also expressed in behalf of A. J. Marvin, Wm. Bowler and J. Z. Tyler, all of Cleveland, O., who were prevented from attending the convention on account of illness.

L. G. Bateman, pastor at Mansfield, and the congregation he serves were active and did their utmost in caring for so large a gathering. All seemed to be good-natured and happy and well pleased with the kindness shown them.

Number of new churches contributing, 145.

Number churches contributing an increased amount, 81.

Number of churches contributing a smaller amount, 57.

Number of churches contributing the same amount, 9.

An announcement of the offering shows as follows:

Churches remitting this year that did not last year (two weeks), 228.

Churches remitting an increased amount over last year (two weeks), 142.

Churches remitting a less amount than last year (two weeks), 81

Churches remitting the same amount as last year (two weeks), 18.

The encouraging thing about the offering is the large number of new churches contributing; the discouraging thing is that the offering is less this year than last year at this time. This means that we will be compelled to reduce the appropriations of some of our missionaries and call some of the missionaries home unless the church shall redeem this work from loss.

The hopeful thing about the offering is that a large number of the churches are holding back the offering until they can bring it up to an adequate amount.

We plead with our brethren that they will give us the means to answer favorably some of the two hundred appeals lying on our table awaiting full result of the May offering.

COLORADO.

Colorado Springs, May 22.—I have just baptized three ladies. This makes 19 additions to the First Chursh here at the regular services in two weeks; 28 since April 1.—F. N. CALVIN.

KENTUCKY.

Dover, May 22.—Two additions Sunday evening; one by confession, one by statement. Twenty-one additions since the beginning of the year; 17 of which were by baptism. Work done by home forces.—R. L. CARTWRIGHT.

VIRGINIA.

Bedford City, May 23.—We are in the midst of a fine tent meeting here with Evangelist J. O. Shelburne. There is not a Church of Christ in the county of which this is the county seat. We are trying to establish the cause here; large attendance and fine interest. Evangelist desiring a singer and good tent can address me here for date.—C. M. HUGHES, gospel singer.

FLORIDA.

Jacksonville, May 18.—One addition at our prayer-meeting service last night. The month of May has brought to us quite a number of accessions, and all heads of families but one, and all coming at the church's regular protracted meeting which begins with Jan. 1, and ends with Dec. 31 of every year.—T. H. BLENUS, pastor of Adams St. Christian Church.

OKLAHOMA.

Edmond, May 24.—Thirty-six added in a meeting at this place.—VERNON J. ROSE.

Medford, May 22.—Last Lord's day at my regular appointment at Sand Creek we had nine additions. The work in Oklahoma is greatly on the advance. Now with free homes and good crops we ought to do great things for Christ.—E. B. HUFF.

NORTH CAROLINA.

Asheville, May 17.—Two confessions and one by statement at the old Refuge Church near Asheville on Sunday May 6. They will have a baptizing service and observe Children's Day on the first Sunday in June. Our venerated Bro. Berry is back in this country after an absence of 30 years and he is preaching at many of our mountain churches.—T. M. MYERS.

TEXAS.

Waxahaxie, May 17.—After closing our meeting in Ft. Worth, I began here last Lord's day with the pastor, A. E. Ewell. The outlook is very promising for a great meeting. I expect to remain in Texas until after the state meeting in June. I am on program in several Chatauqua assemblies beginning in July. My address will be Ft. Worth, Texas, until July.—C. E. MILLARD, singing evangelist.

ARKANSAS.

Pine Bluff.—Our Camden meeting continued 12 days. Six were added to their small company, and the church is greatly encouraged. The Baptists, led by their preacher, came in full force on their prayer-meeting night. The Methodist preacher and his people heard and enjoyed our meeting also. Next month I am to aid Bro. Breeden at Fordyce, his other point. This last place had fallen into the hands of the sect that reads the Firm Foundation, and we hope for its complete recovery.—S. W. CRUTCHER.

IDAHO.

Moscow, May 21.—On May 18 I closed a thirteen days' meeting at Viola, Idaho. The church has been without a preacher for some time there and things were in bad condition. The brethren have begun with a determination to build up the Master's cause. It is a large and promising field but a very difficult one. We had six addittions. Some six other points equally promising are calling for a meeting in this part of the state. The church at Moscow, with which I labor, prospers. We have had five additions during the three months just past.—J. W. WILTHAMPER.

TENNESSEE.

Nashville, May 18.—W. E. Ellis, of Nashville, Tenn., held a meeting of 10 days for this church, closing on May 16. The result was 21 additions to the church; 16 of this number were baptized. The church and the community were highly pleased with the earnest and lucid manner in which he presented the plan of salvation. Bro. Ellis is a most excellent colaborer in a series of meetings. We are glad to report the Clarksville Church in peace and prosperity. The state meeting will be held here in October. Visitors from other states will be cordially entertained.—T. D. GARVIN.

INDIANA.

Bedford, May 19.—A. Martin, of Muncie, has just given us two fine lectures, on "Before and After the Wedding" and "The Philosophy of the World's Progress." The writer was glad to have his old pastor in his home, and our people greatly enjoyed his lectures.—JAMES SMALL.

Fort Wayne, May 22.—There were two additions to the West Jefferson Street Church last Sunday and the Sunday previous, making 11 since I took the work here. Our great debt of $13,000 is pressing us sorely and we are working to raise $5,000 cash within the next three weeks, which if done will secure us.—E. W. ALLEN.

KANSAS.

Lawrence, May 17.—Bro. L. I. Ridenour and Prof. Givens commenced a meeting with the North Lawrence Church, April 29, 1900, and up to date have received nine confessions and two by letter. The church has been much helped by the meeting. Bro. Ridenour is a strong gospel preacher and Bro. Givens a sweet gospel singer. Many from the denominations came to listen. Both for the singing and the preaching we heartily recommend Bros. Ridenour and Givens to any church needing a meeting.—H. L. WILLIS, pastor.

Goffs, May 21.—We had two added by statement on Easter Sunday. Been members, but for 30 years they have not been identified with any congregation. May 20, one added. Work moving along nicely.—L. H. BARNUM.

NEBRASKA.

Fairfield, May 23.—One confession at Deweese from M. E. Church. Sister Griffith organized a C. W. B. M. Society at Oxbow one week ago, also one at Deweese last Lord's day. Her visit did us good. All departments of the work moves along nicely.—E. W. YOCUM.

Arapahoe.—The work moves on encouragingly. Three additions Sunday, making 16 since February, at the regular services. Sunday-school came up to 80, raised our apportionment for Foreign and Home Missions, sent a collection to Ashley Johnson, Kimberlin Heights, Tenn., will observe Children's Day. The writer preached the baccalaureate sermon before the graduating class of Arapahoe High School Sunday night. Mrs. M. M. Cossette, missionary to Wie Hien, North China, a sister of the writer, stopped off on her way to the land of her adoption and addressed a large and appreciative audience on her 30 years' experience as a missionary among the Chinese.—E. G. MERRILL.

ILLINOIS.

Charleston, May 21.—Two added here yesterday. Five since last report.—F. W. BURNHAM.

Watseka, May 21.—Another confession and baptism here since last report. G. W. Muckley will be with us next Lord's day.—BENJ. S. FERRALL.

DuQuoin, May 22.—Two baptisms here last Lord's day and three at Elkville at the afternoon services. I delivered the baccalaureate sermon last Lord's day morning at the union services to the high school graduates. Our school is preparing for Children's Day. We expect to make our apportionment. All lines of work in good condition.—W. H. KERNS.

Ashley, May 22.—We had three additions at Gaston Grove the third Lord's day in May. All of our time is taken up and the churches where we are at work in the best of working order. Would have been glad to have been able to attend the ministerial meeting at East St. Louis, but could not; but my heart is with the brethren in the work of the Lord, so brethren, if I did fail to be with you in person my prayer to God was to strengthen the ministry and give us more of the right kind of preachers.—F. M. MORGAN.

Kinmundy, May 22.—Sunday, May 20th, we closed a three weeks' meeting at Cairo, Ill., where W. G. McColley ministers, and who did the preaching through that meeting. For some time the work there has been at a low ebb. Bro. McColley went there last winter, and by his deep interest in the cause of Christ and his untiring efforts, he has again got the work moving. Our meeting there resulted in 17 being added to the church. With this added strength and a general revival of interest, the work there is hopeful. Bro. McColley and I begin a short meeting here to-night. I can engage with pastor or evangelist for the latter part of June or July. Address me 915 Aubert Ave., St. Louis, Mo.—GUY B. WILLIAMSON, singing evangelist.

IOWA.

Mount Pleasant, May 23.—Last Lord's day there were three by confession and baptism and one from the M. E. Church. Under the watch care and earnest labor of Bro. Coons the Master's cause is progressing very encouragingly.—R. R. GRANT.

Keokuk, May 18.—H. R. Trickett, of Bloomfield, will delight his old and beloved friends at Golden's Point, Ill., on Sunday, the 27th, by preaching morning and evening. We had two more confessions here at our last regular meeting. Raised $5 for India's famine fund.—W. W. RUMSEY.

Corning, May 21.—Two additions here yesterday, the 20th, man and wife, 72 and 73 years of age; an impressive sight, indeed, to see them come.—W. B. CREWDSON.

St. Charles, May 16.—Have had five additions since taking charge of the work at Ottumwa.—D. F. SELLARDS.

Des Moines, May 23.—Three accessions at Deep River last Lord's day; one from the M. P.s and two by confession. Three from the M. E.s at Indianapolis since last report.—CHAS. D. HOUGHAM.

Tama.—We have an Endeavor Society, recently organized, of 22 active members. We took up the offering for Home Missions a week ago yesterday, which amounted to over $12. That is good for this church. And we will also observe Children's Day, the first Lord's day in June. The children are anxious for it. We will help make the house-to-house visitation this week and hope for good results.—F. T. DAVIS.

MISSOURI.

Bonne Terre.—One confession at prayer-meeting recently.—H. ALBERT.

Springfield, May 21.—We had three accessions at the Washington Ave. Church yesterday.—F. S. HALTOM, pastor.

Carthage, May 18.—Three added at Jasper last Sunday. Two from other communions and one by baptism.—M. S. JOHNSON.

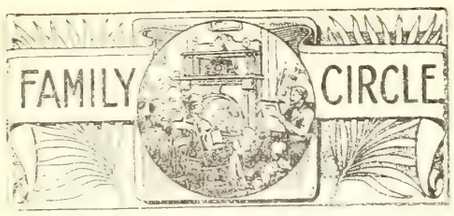
Keokuk, Iowa, May 25.—Bro. E. J. Lampton is to begin a protracted meeting at Elsberry on June 4th. I baptized four young persons at Elsberry on Sunday last.—W. W. RUMSEY.

Steedman, May 21.—Chas. E. Dunlap, late a student at School of Evangelists, Kimberlin Heights, Tenn., is preaching here, with good prospect of organizing a congregation of Disciples.—J. H. ALLEN, singer.

Kirksville, May 24.—There were six additions to the church here last Sunday and four Sunday before. We are going to enlarge our church house at a cost of $5,000 this summer.—H. A. NORTHCUTT.

Kansas City, May 22.—Am on my way to visit, for a few days, my brother, J. C Coggins, at Independence, Kan. Our missionary collection at Odessa, May 13th, was the largest in the history of the church. One confession Wednesday evening at prayer-meeting. One by letter Sunday morning. Work improving.—J. W. COGGINS.

Jefferson City, May 23.—W. F. Richardson held a short meeting for us, beginning May 8th. It was intended to continue to the 25th inst., but the exercises of the public school commencement occupied nearly the entire week, beginning on Sunday the 20th with the baccalaureate sermon, and we thought it best to close last Friday. There were four confessions. The church was greatly quickened in spiritual things, and aroused to a sense of duty and responsibility not felt before. The outlook for the church has not been so hopeful for mane years. Last Sunday the Bible-school reached one hundred and eight, the largest in its history. All departments of work are improving. Our great need is a more convenient meeting house; ours is the poorest in the city. If the brotherhood of the state would lend us once more a helping hand in building a new house, or remodeling the present one, the problem of our cause in the Capital City would be solved. We have had some valuable accessions in the last year, notably W. T. Carrington, Supt. of Public Instruction, and his estimable wife, W. F. Grant and wife, "Mary Wisdom Grant," formerly of the Central, St. Louis, L. W. Hall and wife. All of these are active and efficient, and the church has already felt the force of their influence. Sister Grant will prove especially helpful in the Bible-school and Christian Endeavor work. Bro. Richardson promises to return in the fall and continue the work so well begun. All of the people were greatly pleased with him and profoundly impressed by his preaching. No man has in so short a time created such religious interest in this city, and it was very unfortunate that our meeting had to close. I believe we shall have a great meeting in the fall.—J. P. PINKERTON.



In the Cool of the Day.

AARON PRINCE ATEN.

Paradise rang with its multiplied joys,
That eastward in Eden the Lord had made.
Nothing but beauty, and nought that annoys
Ever had into its joyfulness strayed.

In the deep aisles of the flowers and trees
Ever and often Jehovah had walked.
Sweetly refreshing, the odorous breeze
Blew while the finite to Infinite talked.

Darkness one day drove from Eden the light;
Sadness walked into the dwelling of Bliss;
Shame threw her mantle of crimson and blight
Over the forms that all beauty would kiss.

Came in the cool of the day to the earth,
Lord of the heavens communing with man,
Even as one of a heavenly birth
Made by the force of an infinite plan.

Hiding in terror and tremor and tears,
Image of God in his likeness of life,
Heard the dark doom of the oncoming years,
Heard the swift sentence with sorrowings rife.

Out from all joy in the cool of the day,
Into the night with its poisonous breath,
Tear-stained they pass to their wandering way,
Led by the hand of the Angel of Death.

Kansas Christian College.

Romeo, or Obadiah.

BY ALICE CURTICE MOYER.

As a young girl I could not believe that a rose by another name would smell as sweet. The names of persons meant a great deal to me, and in many cases my likes and dislikes were entirely governed by them. I possessed a decided mania for naming babies, but when this privilege was not granted me I consoled myself by mentioning a few favorites to the mother in the hope that my half-way suggestion might be considered, and when my one married sister christened her baby Hiram instead of Clarence, as I desired her, I actually wept. My own name was quite enough to disgrace the family, I declared, without any help from sister, and yet I always listened with pleasure to the story of how I came by it, and Kate, my dear old nurse, thoroughly enjoyed relating the circumstances to me.

"Your mother was a layin' there lookin' as swate as a shnowdhrop," she would say, "and by her side was a little pink crature, as fat and dimpled a baby as ever was borron, and she said—your mother, I mane—said she:

'"Kate, I'm a goin to name the baby afther yez."'

'"There, now, Missis, an' you don't mane it," sez I.

'"But I do Kate,' said your mother—the dear swate lady—'yez hov bin that good to me I want to show my appreciation. Yez hov bin a faithful servant, Kate,' and that is how it came about, Miss, and that little pink crayture was yerself."

Now I was very fond of nurse, and had her parents but have christened her something more desirable I should have been proud of being her namesake, but just plain "Kate" I considered most plebian.

"My daughter," dear mother would often say, "it is not the name which we should consider, but the person bearing it. It is in your power to make Kate the loveliest of names. Now, for instance, there is your Aunt Huldah—"

"Who is perfectly lovely, but would be ten times more so if her name were—"

"And your Uncle Jonah—"

"Who would be absolutely perfect if only—"

"And your Cousin Jake—"

"Who would be the nicest cousin living if only I could have chosen his name," I would declare, and would then fall to wondering what name I would have given this favorite cousin of mine if I had had the privilege of so doing.

When I was nineteen I had a suitor whom my parents considered in every way eligible, but he chanced to bear the name of John, and I could not even tolerate him. John, James, Henry, etc., which I now consider most desirable, I then looked upon with disdain. "Fit only for coachmen," I scornfully declared.

"My dear," said mother, "don't look at the name, but—"

"Now mother, dear, I know all you would say," declared I, "and I acknowledge all of John's good traits; but there's his name."

"Don't look at the name, but—" was as far as mother could usually go before I would laughingly interrupt with some argument of my own.

Two years passed and I had added several approved names to my lists—one for each sex—when I was invited to visit at my uncle's country home, The Oaks. Cousin Sue (I scorned to say Susan) wrote me a lively, girlish letter, containing so many plans for my amusement and for our mutual enjoyment that I was filled with delight at the prospect. There was a postscript to that letter too—what girl's letter is complete without one?—in which she mentioned, quite by accident, of course, that George, the gentleman to whom she was engaged and who was visiting at The Oaks, had brought with him an old college friend. "Such a scholarly sort of man," wrote Sue. "Not nearly so handsome as my George, but still very nice-looking." "Such adoration!" thought I, laughing. '"Very nice-looking, but not nearly so handsome as my George.' How like a girl in love. For my part I could never see anything extraordinary in George Armstrong, though he is well enough in his way. George is not a romantic name, either,' I mused, 'although preferable to many others. But,' I concluded, 'if Sue is satisfied, and she evidently is I presume I ought to be."'

I belive I can safely say that I did not think of George's friend once after reading Sue's letter, and not until I reached Uncle Jonah's and had been introduced to Mr. Burbanks—a scholarly looking gentleman—did I remember Sue's postscript. But in the days that followed I wondered how I could ever have forgotten it and how I could ever have laughed at Sue for her adoration of her lover, for I had come to realize that I had met my soul's mate—the only man I could ever love.

I did not know his christian name, but I felt sure it was something grand. George, uncle and Cousin Jake called him Burbanks, while Sue and aunt called him Mr. Burbanks. I secretly called him "Romeo" and had thought of him so much by that name that I had unconsciously come to feel and to believe that thus he had really been christened, and when one day I listened to the old, old story which is ever new, with all the love of my hitherto untouched heart, I gave a sacred promise to my hero, my prince among men, and during that indescribable moment when the world existed but for us, we were broke in upon by a voice calling:

"Obadiah! Obadiah Burbanks! where are you?" and George Armstrong came round the corner of the grape arbor, at the entrance of which we stood.

I remember that he stopped short at sight of us and began an apology, and for aught I know finished, for the name he had spoken paralyzed me.

I sprang from the arms of him whom I had thought of as Romeo. "Congratulate me, George, he began, Kate has promised—

But I heard no more.

Darting to the house and up to my own room, I secured the door and threw myself into a chair, only to rise and walk the floor.

Romeo! Obadiah! Romeo! Obadiah! ran through my brain over and over again.

What should I do? What could I do? Romeo or Obadiah, I loved Mr. Burbanks. But oh, what a name! What a name!

And to think that I had found fault with such names as John, James and Henry. O, that Oba—no! I couldn't say it. But O! that his name were one of those.

Sue came to the door, but I would not let her in and begged her to make excuses for me. I really had a severe headache because of my wrought-up state and felt too ill to come down to dinner. A desire for sympathy, however, caused me to put my lips to to the keyhole as Sue turned to go and moan:

"O, Sue! Isn't it dreadful?"

HEART DISEASE.

Some Facts Regarding the Rapid Increase of Heart Troubles.

Heart trouble, at least among the Americans, is certainly increasing, and while this may be largely due to the excitement and worry of American business life, it is more often the result of weak stomachs, of poor digestion.

Real organic disease is incurable; but not one case in a hundred of heart trouble is organic.

The close relation between heart trouble and poor digestion is because both organs are controlled by the same great nerves, the Sympathetic and the Pneumogastric.

In another way also the heart is affected by the form of poor digestion, which causes gas and fermentation from half digested food. There is a feeling of oppression and heaviness in the chest caused by pressure of the distended stomach on the heart and lungs, interfering with their action; hence arises palpitation and short breath.

Poor digestion poisons the blood, makes it thin and watery, which irritates and weakens the heart.

The most sensible treatment for heart trouble is to improve the digestion and to insure the prompt assimilation of food.

This can be done by the regular use after meals of some safe, pleasant and effective digestive preparation, like Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, which may be found in drug stores, and which contains valuable, harmless digestive elements in a pleasant, convenient form.

It is safe to say that the regular, persistent use of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets at meal time will cure any form of stomach trouble except cancer of the stomach.

I thought the whole world surely knew of it and was surprised when my cousin asked:

"Isn't what dreadful?"

"His na ne," I wailed, and then I was sure I heard Sue snicker.

Finally I sat down to write to mother. She had never yet failed to soothe and advise me in my perplexities, and instinctively I turned to her now in my trouble, not realizing how foolish I was and how ridiculous. The trouble at the time seemed a real sorrow. I was just ready to pour out my woes on a sheet of paper when there came to my mind that which mother had so often said to me:

"Don't look at the name, my daughter, but—" I could almost hear her voice. I did not need to go farther, but sprang up and confronted my reflection in the mirror.

"Kate Moorill," I said, "I'm ashamed of you. Obadiah or Romeo, he is the same. His name cannot change him. Still—"

And here I began to think how nice it would have been if only—

It was a bitter fight between a foolish fancy which I had cherished for years and a sensible conclusion to which I had just arrived, and—the latter won.

A few moments later I was dressed and on my way down to the parlor. A shout of laughter from Jake, whom I met on the stairs, convinced me that he had rightly guessed the nature of my indisposition. As soon as he could get his breath he began to say that they—he and George—knew that if I heard Mr. Burbanks' christian name right at first Sue's plan would never be realized, so they waited until they thought matters had gone far enough to—

I suddenly realized that no other name would have fitted this fun-loving cousin half so well as "Jake," and ran past him before he could finish his sentence, but he called down after me:

"He knows the secret now and is waiting for you in the parlor. I was just on my way to tell you."

I was tempted to turn back, but the door opened and I was drawn inside.

I looked up, and the eyes that met mine were so full of mirth that I joined with my Romeo in a hearty laugh.

"But it does seem that one of us should have a nice name," said I at last.

"We both have," declared he. "Kate is such a good, sensible name—"

"Then I don't deserve it."

"And—" not noticing the interruption, "Obadiah, as I've just told you, is a sort of family relic and has, for generations, been handed down in the Burbanks family from father to son. I'm very proud of it and would not exchange it for any other, not even Romeo," and we laughed again.

As I write these last lines my eldest son, Obadiah, my twin boys, James and John, and my tiny daughter, Kate, come in a body, saying that the carriage is ready, papa is waiting and we are all going out for a drive.

The Advantage of Permanency.

Since the SINGER sewing-machine was first invented, more than four hundred different makes of sewing-machine have come and gone. Now it is a well known fact that sewing-machines wear out in parts; if such parts cannot be duplicated, the whole machine is no longer of any value to its owner.

All SINGER parts are absolutely interchangeable. Exact duplicates of each and every part are always and instantly obtainable at SINGER salesrooms in every city in the World; this makes the SINGER everlasting.

WHAT A CONTRAST WITH THE ANONYMOUS MACHINES SOLD BY IRRESPONSIBLE DEALERS.

Many a woman has experienced the annoying loss of some small part from one of these machines and has then found that the dealer had no duplicate or that the manufacturers had gone out of business and she must get out of her dilemma as best she could.

HALF-A-CENTURY'S PRODUCT.

During the last half-century nearly Seventeen Million SINGER Sewing-Machines have been made and sold. This tremendous product would make one gigantic machine head that would reach from the SINGER factory at Elizabeth, N. J., to the factory at Kilbowie, Scotland. Its base would be about three thousand miles long and twelve hundred miles wide. The top of its needle-bar would be fifteen hundred miles above the earth.

A Decoration Day Incident.

BY S. ROSALIE SILL.

It was the day previous to the decorating of the soldiers' graves, and Madaline Rushton was walking within the little cemetery of Parkville, still mourning for her lover, who had gone out to the war of the rebellion a brave youth, his heart filled with ardor for his country's good.

Philip Ashton had never returned, neither had Miss Rushton heard from him since the battle of the Wilderness.

Madaline Rushton had always held bitterness within her heart since those far-away, terrible days. She was bent and white-headed now, but she had never forgiven the rebels.

As she was walking down one of the secluded walks on the outskirts of the inclosure she raised her eyes and they fell upon the sunken, neglected grave of a rebel soldier who had come North and died years and years before.

Some way the throb of pity stirred her heart. What had come over her? She had never felt that way before. Had he, too, left his loved ones never to return to them? Did some one watch and wait as she had done? Then Madaline Rushton went and knelt by that lonely grave, passing her hands gently over the pebbles and weeds, while the long pent-up bitterness oozed from out her heart.

It was a new experience to the woman—this relenting—yet it was sweet. She looked upward and the heavens seemed to have taken on a more etherial blue, and there was a softer glow within the atmosphere. Was this because she had buried the old hatred? "Then let it forever be so," she said to herself. It seemed as though she saw Philip Ashton looking down at her from the blue depths above, with an approving countenance. The winds whispered in soft lullabies and everything breathed of peace.

The next day one woman whispered to another: "Did you see how differently Madaline Rushton looked to-day?"

"Yes, I noticed it. I saw, too, that she carried a beautifully made cross and crown and laid them on that rebel soldier's grave. What does it mean?"

"I am sure I cannot tell."

"Blessed are the merciful, for they shall obtain mercy." said a white-haired man in passing.

Madaline had heard and said: "Those words are true. God has granted me peace because I have grown merciful."

A high-school girl said to her father the other night:

"I've got a sentence here I'd like to have you punctuate. You know something about punctuation, don't you?

"A little," said her cautious parent, as he took the slip of paper she handed him. This is what he read: "A five-dollar bill flew around the corner." He studied it carefully. "Well," he finally said, "I would simply put period after it like this."

"I wouldn't," said the high-school girl "I'd make a dash after it!"—Cleveland Plain dealer.

His Own.

BY NELLA M'GAVACK.

God knoweth his own, and he holds their hands
And leadeth them on through the weary way,
O'er the mountain heights or the burning sands,
Till they enter the gates of the Endless Day.
God holdeth our hands, oh! the comfort sweet,
And close to our own tread the nail-pierced feet;
Yes, close to our own, whatever betide,
Tread the nail-pierced feet of the Crucified.

God knoweth his own and he loves them well,
Though he leads them in paths that are hard and drear;
Will he love them still if their hearts rebel,
And shrink from the journey in dread and fear?
Aye, into our sad, weary hearts he sends
The comforting voice of the Friend of friends;
And his eyes meet ours so tender and true,
From under that brow where the thorns pierced through.

God knoweth his own, but do we know Him?
Do we seek him, find him and with him abide?
Do our hearts with the sweetest of joys o'erbrim
When "under His wings" so safely we hide?
Oh, life with its myriad pains and fears
Is e'en at the most but a few swift years;
Then our hands shall clasp at the great white throne
And we'll know our God as he knows his own.

"Fishers of Men."

All words of Christ have an infinite meaning in them, and this is why they are always springing up in us as wells of everlasting life. Christ taught the common people in plain, every-day language which they easily understood, but the divine wisdom even in those words which seem easy and of little importance, keeps them alive and forever new with the eternal wisdom of God. Concerning his words he said: "My words are spirit and they are life." And this must be true, because he was the Son of God. And we know that he was the Son of God because of the mighty words he said as much by the mighty deeds he did. Coming to the words of the lesson: "Follow me and I will make you fishers of men," at first glance we find nothing that specially interests us. But he who said: "Strive to enter in," can give us manna in the wilderness of our dullness and the water of life from the rocky hardness of our hearts whenever we come to him for help and blessing. The words of the lesson were easily understood in their primary meaning by these fishermen of Galilee. But how tremendous were their meaning in the lives of these men and how vast has been their results in the history of the world. The lives of those men had been full of toil and anxiety and care as fishermen, but how little and insignificant all this was. how quickly it passed away and faded out of their lives when they entered on the infinitely more noble work of being "fishers of men." It is true, they toiled as fishermen after this, but the burden of anxiety was gone. That which had been to them the main object of life now became merely incidental to the eternal purpose for which they now lived. And afterwards Jesus could say to them: "Be not anxious for the things of the morrow," and they could understand the divine wisdom of his words. And what a wonderful lesson there is for our thoughtful learning in the fact that these men in their own strength failed when the darkness and shadow and doubt came upon them after their Master was crucified and he was no longer with them. Then their great purpose died within them and Peter said, as if in recklessness, "I go fishing," and the answer of the others in the same spirit was: "We also go with thee." And how, when the Master, speaking to Peter as the leader, asked searchingly: "Lovest thou me more than these?"—these things of the earth, these old anxieties, these old cares. How full of agony and reproach and love is the answer: "Thou knowest that I love thee." And how passionate with love is the climax: "Thou knowest all things; thou knowest that I love thee!" And Peter spoke for the rest and for us all. And how comforting is the assurance that nevermore shall the battle be fought alone, for he gave them and us the pledge of his love: "Lo, I am with you always, even unto the end!" S. E. S.

Little Journeys to the Homes of Prominent Painters.

BY ELBERT HUBBARD.

(G. P. Putnam Sons, New York.)

This is one of a series of "Little Journeys" to the homes of American authors, famous women, American statesmen, etc. The author takes us to the homes and haunts of these great figures in the world of art, including Michael Angelo, Rembrandt, Rubens, Anthony Van Dyck, Millet, Reynolds, etc., and a right cheery companion, too, is Mr. Hubbard, for he introduces us to these eminent artists in such an easy and graceful manner that we feel we know them; and he portrays them in such a vivid and striking manner that we shall not forget them soon. The sketches are brief but comprehensive; now a bit of biography, now a comment on the artist's work, now a view of the times in which he lived and of the court and church for which he painted; then the men and women, his fellow artists, and kings and queens who moved in that time.

There is a vein of humor which enlivens these pages, and the bright, racy style hurries us along on the "little journeys," and we follow each artist in his struggles, achievements and failures with an increasing interest. Besides some of these painters are the most fascinating as well as the most important figures in the world's history, and we cannot affords to not know them. So one always thanks a man who will successfully introduce him into the home of an eminent artist, poet or statesman, or who will lead him into the presence of a great man. There are many incidental comments and criticisms on art in general which are valuable, and then the byway discussions on each artist's peculiarities are interesting and instructive. This is an excellent book for summer reading, for it touches lightly and shows up brightly these lives. It is also valuable for any one contemplating a visit to art galleries or a trip abroad.

The Advance Society.

J. BRECKENRIDGE ELLIS.

Mabel Bridgewater, Renfrow, Okla.: "I am sorry to say I have not kept the five Advance Society rules. I am going to try harder next time. I would like to see the Red Box Clew printed in book form. I would like to have a society here. Do you make our badges? If you do, I would like to have one." (I am sorry to say I am not very skillful with my needle, therefore I have restrained my inclination to go into the badge business.) Charlie Mountain, West Liberty, Ia.: "My mother and I have kept the rules. We think the Red Box Clew just fine. I think Frank will marry Ronald, and that Vega will recover her hearing. I have improved in my health like everything. I must close for this time. P. S.—I have just got over the mumps." Nora Taylor, Manton, Cal.: "I kept the rules three months lacking a week; I got a headache and missed some. I began the next month and kept it up for three months. School was out then and the blackberries ripe, so I had to pick them; that kept me so busy till school began again. Then I began taking music lessons. At our C. E. social we had speaking, singing, some conundrums and a supper. I enjoyed it very much. My oldest sister is going to the Chico Normal. She is taking a four years' course. She is trying to be a school-teacher. I think she will succeed." (I wish her success. It is great fun to be a school-teacher. I am trying to be one myself.) "We have five more weeks of school; we have to make up for the time we missed on account of so many having the measles."

Vera Davenport, Perry, Okla.: "I am trying to start a society here, but it seems as though every one has too much to do. I am 11. I had some girls at my house to play, and mamma gave me a little book to keep my diary of the Av. S. in. I find it easy to keep the rules, and have time to play and study too." Julia Cox, Cox, Mo.: "I think the Red Box Clew gets more interesting all the time. I will tell you about a narrow escape. There was a little girl at the pond where some men were putting up ice. She had a hoe trying to get a piece of ice and she fell in the pond. They would not have known she had fallen in, but as she slipped she said, 'Oh, papa!' And her papa turned and saw her. The ice was slanting and he was afraid he would fall in himself, trying to get her out. As she was sinking the second time he caught hold of her dress and brought her out. This little girl was my cousin." (It is much safer to buy your ice from the ice wagon than to go after it with hoes.) D. H. McIntire, Avalon, Mo.: "I would have written some time ago if mamma had not been sick. I have read Uncle Tom's Cabin and John Halifax for the second time. I am reading, in the way of poetry, Tennyson; and I am reading History of the World, and like it exceedingly well. A quotation:

> 'God the great, the high, the holy,
> Loves to dwell with spirits lowly;
> He to them will be a tower,
> In temptation's sternest hour.'

Our mamma died and now I have none."

Bertha M. Beesley, Moselle, Mo.: "I have five more names for the society: George and Thomas Barber, Chas. Hancock, Maude Beesley and Rev. A. E. Carson. I am glad Frank Douglas found her parents. I wish you would not tell us so much about the continued story, but would write more about the Advance Society. The next time you have anything to say about Moselle, don't put it Moshelle, or Mosella, but MOSELLE."

Jas. R. Bryant, Liberty, Mo.: "Myself and friend would like to have the Red Box Clew if it is to be published in book form. She and I want one apiece if not to high. We think we can sell a few to friends if we can obtain them." Elmer C. Rinehart, Ridgeway, Mo.: "My birthday is Dec. 21st. I have one pet and that is a pig. I think the Red Box Clew is almost as good as George Weston and the Robber."

Kathleen Crouch, Lindley, Mo.: "Favorite books—Little Women, Pilgrim's Progress, Five Little Peppers. I am 11 and I have read a hundred books, but I never read a novel that I know of." ('Spect you would have known it if you had run across one; you can generally tell 'em on sight.) "I am going to begin to-day to keep the rules. I was very sick all winter, and as soon as I was well enough, papa and mamma sent me to Lindley to visit my aunt and get well. When I reach home I mean to get up a little band of friends and have them join the Advance Society, too." (There is nothing like visiting your aunt when you are not very well. That used to be my remedy. Aunts feel that they are not responsible for the way you turn out, and that you will not be with them very long, so you can do about as you please, just so you keep out of the parlor. Of course I was never an aunt, myself but I imagine that is about how they feel. And it's fun.) Gerald Dever, Hume, Ill.: "We are much interested in the Red Box Clew and the Young Man from Middlefield. Teacher read Uncle Tom's Cabin to us, and at home we read Jessica's First Prayer, a sweet story by Hesba Stretton. I am not quite through with Pilgrim's Progress. Mattie Benefiel (age 5) and I sent a dollar each to the Orphans' Home, St. Louis, at the Easter offering." Maude Kelley, Beardsley, Minn., sends this quotation:

> "You may break, you may shatter the vase if you will,
> But the scent of the rose will hang round it still."

The Red Box Clew will end week after next. Then what will we do? Let's have more letters. What are you doing, how are you playing?—write about it. Tell about the societies you have organized. Be sure and name the history you have read in making your reports. Don't forget it! Remember—no name, no Honor List! This week we have three new names on our Honor List; all for the sixth report, the highest that has been reached: Gerald and Mrs. Dever, Hume, Ill., and Delight M. Shafer, Decatur, Texas.

DEATH OF JOHN THE BAPTIST.*

While Jesus and his disciples were busy preaching the gospel of the coming kingdom and healing the multitudinous maladies of the people the fame of their wonderful doings had spread throughout the whole land of Palestine. It was slow in reaching the ears of the half heathen tetrarch, Herod Antipas, who was too much engrossed with his ambitious schemes for political power and his pursuit of licentious pleasures to pay much attention to stories of a wandering religious teacher, whose message was a simple appeal for righteousness of life. Although Herod held his court in Tiberias, but a few miles south of Capernaum, on the Sea of Galilee, the conversation of his royal retinue would be of other matters than those which were stirring the hearts of the common people. Whatever rumors of Jesus' miracles reached them were brushed aside as of no importance. But the time had come when Herod must take some note of the Nazarene. More wonderful and more numerous became the stories of his mighty works, while his disciples were now going to and fro throughout the land, imitating his works of healing and drawing the attention of the whole nation to their Master and his teachings. When the king at last received definite information of the work Jesus was doing, his cowardly heart failed him and he was terrified. With the superstition so characteristic of the grosser forms of infidelity, the man who had murdered the brave servant of God now declared that the victim of his unholy wrath had arisen from the dead, and was working these mighty acts as his vindication. Thus did his guilty conscience make of him a coward, and the spectre of the dead prophet haunted all his dreams by night and his thoughts by day.

The story of the death of John the Baptist is a most graphic and pathetic one. We have already seen John in the prison at Machærus, the strong castle on the rugged hills east of the Dead Sea, whence he had sent two of his followers to the Master, in a season of perplexity and doubt. Their return set at rest all his doubts, and he now rested in the sweet consciousness that his mission had been fulfilled, and the Messiah indeed introduced to Israel. But he still languished in his dungeon. He was too brave a man to remain free, as his bold denunciation of the sin of Herod could not be tolerated without danger to the authority of that wicked ruler. Son of Herod the Great, he inherited all the baseness of spirit without the courage and skill in war for which his father was noted. He had married the daughter of Aretas, an Arabian king whose territories bordered on Herod's at the castle of Machærus. During a visit to Rome, while a guest in the home of his half-brother, Herod Philip, he had fallen a victim to the wiles of his brother's beautiful and unprincipled wife, Herodias, a niece to both her husband and her lover. On his return to Palestine she followed him, after he had divorced his lawful wife, who returned to her father's house. For this base conduct Herod paid dearly in many ways. Herodias became a snare to him, and by her selfishness and unbridled ambition brought him at last to utter ruin.

Into the palace of this adulterous king and queen came the prophet of the wilderness. Josephus says that John the Baptist was thrown into prison because Herod feared the crowds that gathered to hear him would be led by him into an insurrection. The evangelists tell us that his imprisonment was due to his rebuke of the sinful connection existing between Herod and Herodias. Both may be true. To tolerate such public condemnation of royalty would in itself encourage insurrection, and the only way to prevent riot might seem to be to silence the voice that nothing could bribe to be still. The only argument of a guilty soul is violence, and the only answer to the stern message of John: "It is not lawful for thee to have thy brother's wife," was to put the brave messenger where he could be no longer heard.

Herod was not wholly bad. Some remnants of conscience remained in him, for "Herod feared John, knowing that he was a righteous man and a holy, and kept him safe." Jesus needed a friend at court. He had there an enemy relentless and cruel as the tiger toward his prey. Herodias thirsted for blood, and was impatient with the tolerance of Herod for this rude reprover of their lust. "Hell hath no fury like a woman scorned;" and the insult to this dissolute woman, in whose veins ran the blood of a race of kings, could be wiped out only by the prophet's own blood. She watched eagerly, yet craftily, for opportunity to glut her vengeance. Meanwhile, Herod would not consent to further punishment of John than to keep him in prison. He knew that the populace honored him as a divine messenger, and that to kill him might bring serious consequences to his authority in the province. Not only so, but Herod often sought the presence of John, and heard him with much pleasure, except at such times as the prophet would recur to the shameful conduct which dishonored the court and nation. One version says of Herod: "He did many things" in response to the preaching of John. But alas! the "one thing needful" he refused to do. He wept and prayed, it may be; lightened some of the public burdens; righted many of the wrongs under which the people of his province suffered. But his darling sin he could not, would not, abandon.

Herodias found her opportunity at last, and it came by way of the intemperance of the king, that way so crowded with evils for our race. On his birthday Herod made a great banquet for his chief officers and nobles. While they were inflamed with wine, the queen sent into their presence her beautiful daughter, Salome, who danced before them, in the sensuous dance of the Orient, until her beauty, grace and free display of physical charms drew applause from the company, and the rash promise of Herod to grant her any request she might make of him, even to the half of his kingdom. Taught by her infamous mother, she immediately demanded the head of the Baptist, in a charger, one of the large silver dishes upon which the food had been served. Horrified by the request, and perceiving that he had been duped by the cunning queen, Herod would have denied the request. But perhaps it was a relief to him after all to be able to carry out the deed he had wished he might do, under the sanction of his oath, as though such a base oath were not better violated than kept. He sent to the prison and had the head of John delivered to the damsel, and she brought the horrible, gory gift to her mother. What a mother, to use her daughter for so infamous an end! But she was long since lost to shame and it is likely that her eyes flashed with joy and triumph when they devoured the hated features that now rested in death. We are told that when the head of Cicero was brought to Fulvia, the widow of Clodius and the wife of Antony, she drove her hair-pin again and again into the tongue which had denounced the iniquities of both her husbands; and it is probable that Herodias was capable of as great enormities.

So Herod had sinned again against his conscience, and henceforth there is no halt in his downward course. Trembling with terror at the first tidings of the wonderful life of Jesus, in whom he seemed to see once more the spirit of the brave Baptist, he becomes in a little time so calloused that when he finally meets the Master in Jerusalem, on the night of his arrest and trial, he has no other use for him than to seek an hour's entertainment, in which object, when he is balked, he turns the guileless sufferer over to his soldiers to be mocked.

John's disciples crave the poor privilege of burying the headless body of their master, and that office tenderly performed, Matthew tells us that "they went and told Jesus." Yes, the sky was very dark over their heads, and earth was very lonely to their spirits now that their loved leader was gone. But they found the secret of all comfort. They went and told Jesus! "Ah, blessed road, whereon thousands upon thousands have followed them since! It is the right road, whatever be the trouble; but the most of all when the waves and billows of doubt are breaking over the mind—when it looks as if Providence had let go the rudder and as if there were no love at the heart of the universe; when the Son of God appears to have abandoned his own cause, and even to have given occasion to doubt his very existence, then carry the trouble to no one else, but go and tell Jesus."

*Lesson for June 10—Mark 6:14-29. Parallel passages—Matt. 14:1-12; Luke 9:7-9.

DRUNKENNESS CURED.

An eminent St. Louis physician has given a positive answer to the oft asked question, is drunkenness a disease, or is it simply a temptation that cannot be resisted by a vast number of the human race? The physician in question is Dr. Ozias Paquin, who for years has been a practicing physician in the City of St. Louis. He has answered this question by taking five of the worst drunkards that could be found and cured them of all further appetite for intoxicating drinks. The five cases were all beyond middle age and they had sunk into the deepest pit of drunkenness, with the odor of drink about them so obnoxious that it was almost impossible to stand within speaking distance. He not only cured them of all desire for intoxicating drink, but at the same time placed upon their cheek the flush of health, and into their eyes the light of happiness, and took from their person the odor of whiskey. It was almost a miracle, for he had raised five cases from degradation into the sunshine of health and happiness. Dr. Paquin has cured hundreds of patients who were relapses from other treatments, and in every instance he cured these patients, and they have remained cured for months and years. It can therefore be said that the Paquin Treatment is a permanent cure, and not a temporary one, for the patient never relapses to his former condition. We know of no more humane work being done at the present time than that which Dr. Paquin is doing, and it is the duty of every reader to assist Dr. Ozias Paquin in his noble work, and if any reader has brother, sister, husband, father or friend in whose system lurks the disease of drunkenness, he should at once send their name to Dr. Paquin or see that they either visit or place themselves in communication with the Ozias Paquin Immune Co., Suite 1113 Chemical Bldg., St. Louis. The reader that does this will certainly be doing a christian act, for no matter how hopeless the case may seem, and no matter how many other treatments have unsuccessfully been tried, the method known as Ozias Paquin Treatment will perfect a cure, dispelling all desire for drink, and at the same time will place the constitution in a robust and healthy condition.

TOPIC FOR JUNE 10.

LIVES THAT LIFT.

(Luke 13:20, 21.)

The purpose of leaven is to lift, to make light, to fill with air-spaces. Why should not lives as well as bread be lifted, made light, filled with spirit? The words spirit and air are, in most languages, the same. "The spirit breatheth where it listeth." That sentence shows how spirit and breath are related. The life that is filled with spirit, filled with truest and best health, is fullest of life; it is lifted, leavened.

Physicians tell us we do not breathe deeply enough. We, so many of us, breathe in little gasps, two or three inches down in our lungs. The lower cells, deep down, are not used; therefore they die, wither, atrophy and consumption results. What is needed is air. We should fill our lungs full, now and then, and save the cells alive.

Now the only death worth fearing is the death of atrophy, of unuse. It is an idle brain that is the devil's workshop, just as it is an idle lung-cell that is disease's workshop. The thing to do is to fill the life full of the expulsive power of a great affection, full of the love of God and of service for him, full of spirit, leaven, breath, air, so noxious soul-diseases will be driven out. Lives that lift, then, must be lives that are busy doing good things and meditating high, airy things.

Lives that lift others must first elevate themselves. As water cannot rise higher than its source, neither can one life raise others higher than itself. Just as water-logged timbers, that cannot float, will never bear the weight of a man in the sea, neither will a life that does not itself rise to the surface uphold others. Just as a balloon that is not filled full, but is collapsed, can never soar and bear its car into the sky, so can a life that is not itself inspired, breathed into, never carry others aloft. Lives that lift must first be exalted lives. The work of uplifting men and women is always a work of pulling up from below, and never a pushing up above our heads.

Every life that is exalted is always, by its own inherent force, and often without conscious effort, drawing others up. "I, if I be lifted up," said Jesus, "will draw all men unto me." So, never has there been a life exalted by sacrifice and self-forgetfulness but has drawn all men nearer to the skies. It is not an irksome task. It is the natural process. Self-improvement for the sake of general improvement, self-uplifting to the end of social exaltation—this is the same grand old process that has been forever swinging our world nearer to the Light. Unconscious of their own influence, oftentimes, exalted lives lead others aloft. It was a blind, helpless man, yet a high uplifted mind that sang—

"They also serve who only stand and wait."

And the higher the life the greater its surprise, oftentimes, at its own uplifting power. "When you first begin to preach," said Phillips Brooks, "you wonder why everybody doesn't come to hear you. Later on you wonder why anybody does."

It is a noble motto, that of the Epworth League: "Look up, lift up." With eyes turned always up to God, and with the hands reached always down to save, that is the true attitude of the Christian. Nor is either one of these two things possible without the other. Aspiration and prayerfulness on the one hand, exertion and helpfulness on the other.

"Heaven's gate is shut to him who comes alone.
Save, then, a soul, and it shall save thine own."

All over London there are scattered the little lunchrooms of the "Ærated Bread Company," lunchrooms that are crowded by those who are well fed at a marvelously low rate. Ærated bread, I take it, is simply bread full of air, light, leavened, wholesome. These A B C dining rooms, as they are called, are a blessing to the poor, and to all patrons, although a source of profit to the owners. It may be a very homely illustration, yet in every community in this world there ought to be ærated bread companies—those who dispense life to men, life light and wholesome, and full of spirit. Is your Endeavor Society such?

CONDITIONS OF CHRISTIAN GROWTH.

By F. D. Power, Director.

(In two Articles—Article I).

Growth is a characteristic of all life. It is natural. It is a vital act. The child grows without being instructed to grow, the roses grow without being commanded to grow; the Christian grows without taking thought how he may add one cubit to his growth. The child, the rose, the Christian only need the conditions in order to grow, and these conditions are all supplied. The conditions of growth and the inward principle of growth being both provided by nature, all that man has to do is to apply one to the other and do nothing that may dwarf himself, or pervert his nature, to suffer himself to grow.

The great purpose of the Christian institution is the reformation of the world. To the principalities and powers in heavenly places the manifold wisdom of God is to be made known by the church. The establishment, edification and growth of the church, therefore, must be abundantly provided by its Founder. The apostles treat of the church under the figure of a building, a house, a temple, a habitation of God. The terms "edify" and "edification" in reference to the building of an edifice are often used by them to set forth the advancement, enlargement, improvement and adornment of the church. Of this building Jesus Christ is the chief corner stone, the living stone, elect, precious, tried and sure; believers in Christ united together in one body upon this one foundation laid in Zion are "living stones, built up in a spiritual house," constituting the household of God, or the household of faith. The vast importance of the church as a body, united and developed in its associated capacity, is seen there. The apostles do not deal with disconnected individuals, striving after personal edification. The doctrine of Christ, the writings of his inspired apostles, the ordinances of the Lord's house, the consolations of the Spirit—all in their largest measure refer to brethren walking together in unity, to disciples joined in one body as fellow-members one of another, holding fellowship in the institutions of the gospel and partaking as one body of the abundant provision made in the infinite wisdom and grace of their great Head for their comfort, edification and conquest. It is a great mistake that separate from the church the means of grace and growth in divine life may be fully realized and enjoyed.

As the head of the body, as the foundation of the structure, the great source of all spiritual life and progress is Christ. "I am the vine, ye are the branches. As the branch cannot bear fruit of itself, except it abide in the vine, no more can ye, except ye abide in me" (John 15:1-4). In his splendid anatomical figure Paul tells us that "speaking the truth in love we grow up into him, which is the Head, even Christ, from whom all the body, fitly framed and knit together through that which every joint supplieth according to the working in due measure of each several part, maketh increase of the body unto the building up of itself in love" (Eph. 4:15). "Grow in grace and in the knowledge of Christ" (1 Pet. 3:18.)

The first essential of growth, then, is a knowledge of Christ and his Word. The Holy Scriptures, of which Christ is the central figure, simple and unadulterated, are able to make us wise unto salvation, contain all things necessary to faith and godliness and are profitable for teaching, reproof, correction, discipline in righteousness, that the man of God may be complete, furnished thoroughly unto every good work. As light in the darkness of ignorance, superstition and sin; as the power of God unto salvation to every one that believes; as the water of life to satisfy the thirst of the soul; as the bread of heaven to feed the spiritual nature; as the sword of the Spirit to cut away all false growths and overcome all resistance; as the storehouse of all things needed in the development of souls along the lines of the only perfect life the world has ever known, the Word of God is revealed to us. At the windows of the Scripture God pours into the soul the radiance of his Spirit, and through the doorway of his Word he sends the manna that nourishes his needy children.

To answer its great purpose, however, the Word of truth must be rightly divided. Distinction must be made between the dispensation of Moses and that of Christ; the teaching of the prophets and the doctrine of the apostles; the will of God with regard to the Jews and the will of God with respect to us. The chronicles of the Old Testament do not answer the question: "What must I do to be saved?" nor does the Apocalypse unfold the organization and office of the church. The Acts of the Apostles reveals the character of conversion, and the Epistles set forth the duties of subjects of the King.

It must be so administered, also, as to give to each his portion in due season. There is milk for babes and meat for strong men. There is instruction for the unbeliever: "Repent and be baptized, every one of you." There is instruction for the believing penitent: "Arise and be baptized and wash away your sins." There is instruction for the obedient, penitent believer: "Add to faith, virtue; and to virtue, knowledge; and to knowledge, temperance; to temperance, patience; and to patience, godliness; and to godliness, brotherly kindness; and to brotherly kindness, love" (2 Pet. 1:5). Suitable food there is at the gospel feast for all that hunger.

Furthermore, it must be given pure. The Bible, the whole Bible and nothing but the Bible is the divine pabulum. A false, perverted or imperfect growth must come from the adulteration of this teaching with the commandments of men. Truth is the very soul of God, and that men may be godlike they must have truth in its purity, without any mixture of error. "As new-born babes, desire the unadulterated milk of the Word, that ye may grow thereby" (1 Pet. 2:2).

Here are the fountains of divine wisdom. Most excellent of all God's gifts for the edification of his people is the gift of his Word. Among green pastures and beside still waters the Shepherd leads his flock. Like a tree planted by the rivers of water which bringeth forth his fruit in his season and whose leaf never withers is the man whose delight is the law of the Lord. In such a garden, rooted in the soil by divine grace, watered with the dews of divine love and trained by the skill of a divine hand, the growth of the church day and night, summer and winter, must be beautiful and glorious and fruitful. Without these means of grace there must be leanness, famine and blight which no human means can remedy (Psa. 1).

BOOK NOTES.

The authorized Life of Dwight L. Moody, which has been prepared in accordance with his expressed wish by his son, Wm. R. Moody, is published this week from the press of Fleming H. Revell Company, advance orders alone requiring a first edition of 150,000 copies. The book is being printed in Chicago and New York, and not less than five large printing establishments and a half dozen binderies have been engaged in connection with this work.

Rev. Jacob Chamberlain, M. D., D. D., the time-honored missionary to India, who is one of the most prominent of the delegates of the Ecumenical Conference recently held in New York, has just completed a new volume of his inimitable sketches of life and work in the Telugus of India entitled "The Cobra's Den," which is to be published at once by Fleming H. Revell Company.

The Fleming H. Revell Company announce for early publication a complete and authoritative account of mission work along the Congo River in Africa entitled "Pioneering on the Congo," by Rev. W. Holman Bentley, who writes from a twenty-one years' experience in this country. This work will be in two large volumes, copiously illustrated from sketches, photographs, etc. They will also publish shortly a unique work by Rev. S. N. Zwemer, F. R. G. S., entitled "Arabia the Cradle of Islam," which gives a full and readable description of the "neglected peninsula." It is a work for which there has long been a demand.

We are passing out of that age in which things are thought of only in relation to the individual. We are learning rapidly in these latter days that things must be thought of in relation to society as well as to the individual. Especially is this true as to our public schools. And a clearer presentation of this broader view of what and how our schools should teach we have not seen than in a book recently from the press of the University of Chicago, by John Dewey, professor of pedagogy in the University, entitled "The School and Society." It deals with practical education in a direct and philosophical manner. It is a book of 130 pages embodying the substance of three lectures on the subject given by the professor to an audience of parents and others in the University Elementary School in April, 1899.

Maxinkuckee Assembly.

The Maxinkuckee Assembly has leased twenty-six acres of ground on Lake Maxinkuckee, in Marshall County, Ind., which is known as Maxinkuckee Park, which is within one-fourth mile of Culver, Ind., a city of fifteen hundred people.

Maxinkuckee Park fronts on the lake and is noted for its fine shadetrees and its excellent view of the beautiful lake, which is noted for its crystal waters, its fine fishing and its good duck hunting. The lake is fifteen miles in circumference and its banks are dotted with cottages and hotels—about three hundred in number. There are two large lake steamers, many sailboats and rowboats, which are quite an attraction to all who visit the Park. The Vandalia road runs by the Park and has put in a landing in front of the Park gate. It will put in additional improvements before the Assembly meeting, which is to be from July 28th to August 13th of this year.

A good program will be given this year. Men and women of state and national reputation will speak. Good music, both vocal and instrumental, will be furnished.

Maxinkuckee Park is 35 miles due north of Logansport, 33 miles south of South Bend, 100 miles from Chicago and 125 miles from Indianapolis. It is surrounded by railroads and is in easy reach of all the many trunk lines of railway that cross Northern Indiana.

The home office of the Assembly will be 712 Majestic Building, Indianapolis, Ind. Capital stock is now on sale at par value, which is ($10) ten dollars per share. Persons desiring to subscribe for stock, or desiring to lease lots and to erect cottages, should address the home office as above. W. E. M. HACKLEMAN, Sec.

Arkansas Mission Work.

During the last four years the mission work of Arkansas has helped in the support of seventeen preachers (an averrge of eight for the past two years). There have been not less than 756 baptisms, 1,220 other additions. Total 1,976. Churches organized, or reorganized where work had ceased, 33; Sunday-schools, 35; houses built, or in process of building, more than 30; Christian Endeavor Societies, 12; C. W. B. M.s, nine; money raised for missions, building, paying church debts, etc., $39,000. Double our state funds and it will quadruple results.

One dollar given to Arkansas missions will enlist ten dollars in active Christian work. There are more than a dozen county seats where a little encouragement for a while would result in a house and a self-supporting church.. Other towns of importance furnish equally promising opportunities.

The C. W. B. M. are cultivating following fields: United States, representing North, South, East and West. Among these is Arkansas. She receives $250 per year from the National Board, besides help from the auxiliaries of the state.

The General Board appropriates money directly to 28 state boards besides the work done in city evangelization, etc. Among the states helped, both through the state board and otherwise, is Arkansas. Whatever has been accomplished has been reached through the help of the co-operating churches in the state, the General Board and the C. W. B. M. E. C. BROWNING, Cor. Sec.

The Acme.... Smelting and Refining Company

Offers to Investors for a Short Time Unequaled Advantages.

IT IS A WELL-KNOWN FACT

That a custom smelter, properly equipped and operated, is the most certain source of revenue in the mining business

ITS SUCCESS

Is not contingent upon the output of any one mine or group of mines, but draws its support from a large number of mines in the district where it is located. There are 100 producing and paying mines within a convenient distance of our smelter site and at least 200 more would be developed if there was a custom smelter conveniently located to which ore could be shipped for treatment.

A CUSTOM SMELTER

Bears the same relation to mining that a grist mill does to an agricultural district, with the profits greatly in favor of a custom smelter. The usual net profits of a custom smelter are about $3.00 per ton.

WE HAVE GIVEN YEARS

Of careful study to our plans and know that we are warranted in our undertaking—the erection of a custom smelting plant. Risks which exist in all ordinary mining operations have been carefully eliminated from our plans. We have water, fluxes, an inexhaustible supply of ore and a clear field.

WE CONTRACT NO DEBTS. OUR MOTTO IS: CASH or NOTHING.

A CUSTOM SMELTER HAS THESE ADVANTAGES OVER ALL KINDS OF COMMERCIAL BUSINESS:

1. The product of a smelter invariably sells for cash.
2. The ore smelted is ample security for the expense of smelting.
3. Profits are always large, often reaching 50 per cent. annually on the par value of the stock.
4. Charges for smelting are always collected before the "matte" or refined ore is delivered from the smelter.
5. A custom smelter has no bad debts.
6. A gold smelter's out-put never fluctuates in value.
7. A gold smelter is absolutely independent of any financial stringency, business stagnation, political disturbance, or other calamity which jeopardizes all ordinary classes of investments.

Our Board of Directors is a Guarantee of Safety to all Investors.

—It is composed of

HON. C. C. COLE, Late Chief Justice of Iowa.
HON. WEBSTER STREET, Chief Justice of Arizona.
HON. EMIL GANZ, President of the National Bank of Arizona.
H. M. CHAPMAN. Secretary of Phoenix and Maricopa County Board of Trade.
N. C. WILSON, Rarge and Successful Merchant.
CALVIN OGBURN, Evangelist.
T. T. POWERS, LL.B.

AMONG OUR STOCKHOLDERS are U S. Senators and Members of Congress, Ex-Governors, High Naval Officers, College Presidents.

YOU ASSUME NO RISK

When investing in the stock of the Acme Smelting and Refining Company.

1. All the conditions are favorable for the erection and operation of a custom smelter.
2. The Board of Directors are all men of high moral and business standing.
3. The officers are all required to furnish bond.

The par value of the stock is $1.00 per share.

For a short time we are offering a limited amount of stock at 50 cents a share—one-half payable in cash, and balance in five equal monthly installments, or where the entire amount is paid in one payment 45 cents a share. Stock is issued full paid and non-assessable. Most respectfully,

Obituaries.

DEWEESE.

It is with sadness that we recount the recent death of Bro. C. C. Deweese, who left the pastorate of the Christian Church in Cheney, Kan., on Tuesday, May 8, 1900, for his reward. Bro. Deweese was born in Eureka, Ill., Sept. 17, 1833. It wus here that he completed his education, and it was his home until 1865. Here he was married in 1844 to Miss Maggie E. Davenport. Was ordained by the church in Eureka about the year 1858. He evangelized in Illinois until 1865, when he moved to Kansas. At this time he had considerable wealth, but the first years in Kansas were spent in preaching in destitute places, receiving little or no compensation for his labors. For five years he labored receiving nothing save a present of five dollars. This sort of work was necessarily a drain upon his means. His ambition was to follow closely in the footsteps of his Master, regardless of pay. In this first marriage were born four children, one dying in infancy in Illinois, the other three living to maturity, Bro. W. D., the pastor of the church at Kankakee, Ill., and Mrs. Anna E. Boone, living at Eureka, Kan., his wife and daughter Alice, who died at Willow Valley, Kan., in 1879, are sleeping in the cemetery at Eureka, Kan. His ministry was in the following places: Osage Mission, Columbus, Eureka, Peabody, Eldorado, Harper and Jewel City, Kan.; Shurdan and North English, Ia.; then back again to Kansas, at Galesburg, Bethany, Cherry Vale and Cheney. Bro. Deweese was again married in the fall of 1880, to Miss Lucy S. Mahan, of Indiana, to whom were born three children, two daughters and a son, now living with the mother in Cheney. Bro. Deweese was sixty-seven years of age at the time of his death, having been an humble, consecrated follower of our Lord and a public minister of the gospel for nearly fifty years. Few men have done more in a quiet, faithful service for as little material reward than did he. A service was conducted from the Christian Church in Cheney, by the writer, assisted by Brethren C. A. Finch and G. T. Black, on Thursday morning, May the 10th, and the remains were taken to Eureka, Kan., for interment, and a service was held there by Bro. J. D. Forsyth, the pastor, and his body laid to rest to await the first resurrection.

FUNK.

Susanna Funk was born Jan. 12, 1814, at Beaver Creek, Md. Came to Illinois in 1846 and lived for many years with her sister, Mrs. Samuel Bovey, since whose death she has resided with her nieces. She was never married. A sister, Mrs. Rohrer, of Polo, Ill., and a large circle of nieces and nephews survive to perpetuate a fond rembembrance of her sweet and gentle life. Was for many years a faithful member of the Christian Church. Died at Grand Detour, May 13, 1900. The writer conducted the services. Text, Psa. 116:15.

HALCOMB.

Mrs. Iva L. Halcomb, nee Curtright, born Jan. 15, 1875, died May 6, 1900, aged 25 years, three months and 21 days. Sister Halcomb was the daughter of Samuel Curtright and was born in Monroe County, Mo., where she lived with her parents on a farm until she was married to D. B. Halcomb, June 23, 1898. She made the good confession and was baptized by the writer Aug. 8, 1892, and was faithful to her Savior until called to his "upper fold." Along her path through life she left blessed memories to linger in the hearts of loved ones. Her brief married life with a most devoted husband was a specially bright one and closed when the future looked most promising and when she could see most to live for—a little babe having come to gladden her mother-heart, whose life would need a mother's guiding hand and tender love. Her life-day closed with a golden sunset. Before she fell asleep she said that "Christ had called her" and gave her babe a name and told those who should have the care of it to raise it to be a Christian, so that it could meet her in heaven. She said many other beautiful things and her closing hours were filled with bright hopes. She died in Kansas City, Mo., and her remains were buried in Garden City, Mo., where a funeral service was conducted by J. H. Jones, pastor of the church there. Her Christian mother preceded her to the spirit-world to welcome her home, about five years ago, and she leaves to mourn their bereavement in her departure, besides her husband and little babe, three brothers, five sisters, her aged father and a host of relatives and friends. Sister Iva was a devoted Christian, a true friend, an affectionate sister, a dutiful daughter and a loving and faithful wife.

MAJOR.

On the morning of the 10th I was shocked by receiving a telegram asking me to meet the body of Henry A. Major at the train and prepare for burial. Bro. Major was born in Lafayette county, Mo., Oct. 26, 1858. He obeyed the gospel under the preaching of Bro. C. A. Hendricks at old Bethany Church in Saline country, Mo. After becoming a Christian he entered Woodland College under Bro. Alexander Procter. After spending two years in college he married and retired to his father-in-law's farm where he lived until the grim monster, Death, entered his home and took away his young wife, leaving one little boy to travel with him the lonely journey of life. After losing his wife, Bro. Major entered the College of the Bible at Lexington, Ky., where he remained until 1892. Leaving college he came to Texas, where he has since lived a busy life. He was pastor of the church in Bowie for near two years, where he did a great work. He held pastorates at other important points, where he made hosts of friends and led many to the Lamb of God. While having charge of the church at Bowie Bro. Major met and married sister Lulu Robertson, who has been truly a helpmeet to him and has been an ideal preacher's wife, sharing his joys and sorrows. Their union has been blessed with two bright little children. Bro. Major's last work was at Brownwood, where he has erected the best monument that could be raised over a preacher—a work that will stand for ages. Bro. Major was enterprising, enthusiastic, a lover of all that is good and pure. To say he was a good man is to speak mildly of his virtues. The church at Brownwood has lost a valuable servant, the work has lost a friend, his family has lost one of the most devoted husbands and the children an indulgent father. The funeral services were held in the Christian Church in Bowie by the writer in the presence of a large audience of frlends and brethren. Bro. Major was resigned to the will of God. When he was placed on the operator's table he remarked: "Oh God, thy will be done." In fact, this was his aim in life, so much so that it becomes almost if not althgether the language of the poet—

"Lord, I submit, complete thy gracious will,
For if thou slay me I will trust thee still.
Oh, be my will swallowed up in thine,
That I may do thy will in doing mine."

PERKINS.

Mishawaka, Ind., has this week been bereft of another excellent and highly respected old citizen, in the person of Mrs. Eliza Perkins, relict of the late Palmer C. Perkins, founder of the Perkins Windmill Company. Her death occurred on Sunday morning last at the family home, 505 West Second street, in the 80th year of her age. Eliza Starbuck was born in Chestertown, N. Y., Jan. 17, 1821. July 24, 1845, she was united in marriage to P. C. Perkins, whose death occurred in this city Feb. 15, 1896. Mr. and Mrs. Perkins resided in New York until 1861, when they moved to Clayton, Mich., locating in Mishawaka in 1865. Like her husband, Mrs. Perkins was a devout Christian and an earnest worker in all church and charitable affairs. No children blessed their union, but many a poor orphan or deserving youth had reason to remember their benevolence. Verily, their good works will follow them. The deceased was the last of a family of seven and is survived by three nieces, six nephews, all on the Starbuck side of the family, three sisters-in-law, and a host of sorrowing friends. The funeral was held from the residence at 3:30 o'clock Tuesday afternoon, Rev. Wallace C. Payne, of Evanston, Ill., who received his education for the ministry through the means and kindness of the deceased, officiating, assisted by Rev. W. W. Denham. Among relatives present from abroad were Mrs. George Starbuck, of Glen Falls, N. Y., Mr. and Mrs. W. T. Perkins, of Rensselaer, Ind., and Mrs. Cecilia Perkins, of Morris, Ill.—Mishawaka Enterprise.

REAVIS.

Miss Ida M. Reavis fell asleep in Jesus, in Canton, Mo., on Sunday afternoon April 29, aged 24 years, after several months of bodily affliction. She leaves three brothers (all preachers of the gospel) and one sister and many friends to mourn the earth-loss. She leaves a life record well filled with noble deeds, and "to know her was to love her." She had lived a constant Christian life from childhood, counting her looked-for departure her gain if it be God's will that she should go. So we turn our eyes from the sad earth-loss to her eternal gain.

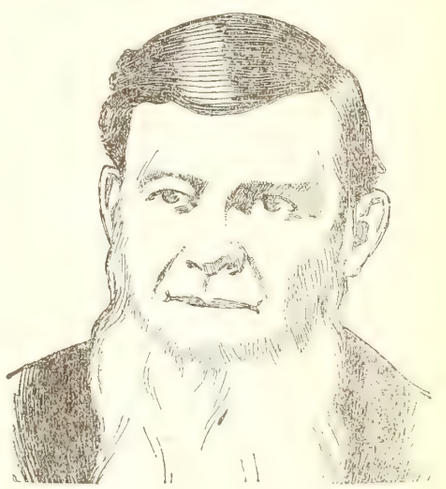
CANCER INCREASING

This Disease Has Quadrupled itself in the last Forty Years.

This is made manifest by the increased number of persons applying to Dr. Bye, of Kansas City Mo., for his Combination Oil Treatment to cure this disease. His oils have a national reputation. Prior to their discovery, the burning plaster or surgical operation was the only hope, but they gave only temporary relief. His method makes it possible for every one that is suffering from this disease to receive a permanent cure, without causing pain. Read below what one of his patients, a minister, has to say about it.



January, 26, 1900.

Dr. Bye, Kansas City, Mo.:

Dear Friend and Bro.—I write to thank you for saving my life. I am now seventy-six years old; have had cancer for over twenty years. For the last six years it has been very bad; it was on my nose and under my right eye. Many physic ans treated me. I was treated last by an old doctor who claimed to cure cancer, but I got worse. My nose was nearly eaten off. I was afraid to wipe my nose for fear I would wipe the end of it off. My nose and face had swollen so that I could not see. My sufferings were so intense that I was compelled to go to bed, as I thought I would die in despair. Some friend sent me the "Religious Herald," published in Richmond, Va., and Rev. H. H. Butler, who lives near me, and has visited me and given me much spiritual comfort during my sufferings gave me your book, "The Message of Hope," saying that while there was life there was hope. He wrote to you for me. You sent the oils and I used them and began to improve immediately, and it was not long before my nose began to heal nicely. The great sore under my eye healed and I am now well. Glory, glory to God! I am now living, and those terrible sores are gone. I can't find language to express my gratitude to you, dear Dr. Bye, for what you have done for me. I wish everybody suffering knew of your Oil Cure. God bless you. Yours in grateful remembrance,

JESSE BALLARD, Suffolk, Va.

DR. PRICE'S cream BAKING POWDER

no alum, lime or ammonia.

No acid but that from grapes —which is pure, pleasant and healthful—enters into Dr. Price's Baking Powder.

Fruit acids are accounted by hygienists the most important of the elements of the food of man, and of these the acid of the grape is most prominent.

Dr. Price's Cream Baking Powder is not only the most efficient and perfect of leavening agents, but owing to its constituents is likewise promotive of health.

NOTE.—There are many cheap baking powders made of alum. Liebig, the celebrated chemist, says that alum disorders the stomach and causes acidity and dyspepsia.

Indiana Convention.

The Missionary Society of the churches of Christ in Indiana met at Valparaiso, May 17, 18. Addresses were delivered by Prof. J. V. Coombs, Prof. C. B. Coleman, Rev. J. H. McNeill, Pres. B. A. Jenkins, Rev. E. B. Scofield, Rev. James Small, Atty. Howard Cale, Pres. L. M. Sniff, Sec. B. L. Smith, Rev. G. L. Wharton and Rev. P. J. Rice.

Splendid reports were given by T. J. Legg, J. M. Canfield, T. J. Shuey and other evangelists of the districts.

The secretory's report showed that $1,474.61 had been received by the state board and used in the state work. The various districts, fourteen n number, have raised several thousaud dollars for district work. The second district raised the argest amount, viz., $1,487.57.

The following officers were elected: A. B. Philputt, Indianapolis, president; E. L. Frazier, Marion, vice-president; Atty. W. S. Moffett, Irington, treasurer; W. E. Hackleman, Indianapolis, secretary; directors, D. W. E. Collane, Flora; W. T. Wells, Huntington; O. E. Kelley, Clinton; S. W. Brown, Edinburg; Geo. Darsie, Jr., Connersville.

It was thought best that the board of directors should be composed of representatives from the different districts, and the nominating committee observed this in electing the five members who will serve until 1903.

The following resolution was adopted: Resolved, That all moneys raised for state and district work be sent directly to the state secretary to be apportioned by the state board."

This resolution is in harmony with a resolution passed in all the district conventions which have just closed. Therefore send all money for state and district work to the undersigned and not your district secretary. This is the plan adopted and carried on successfully in other states.

Book Notes.

"Concordance of Bible Topics" is a new work, by Cortes Jackson. The design of this work is to assist in a systematic and careful study of the Bible by having the more important passages relating to a given topic or subject, both in the Old and New Testaments, arranged under one head, thus enabling the reader or student to find these passages relating to the topic under consideration without looking over page after page of large concordances. It is a most valuable aid to all students of the Bible. It is a neatly printed, cloth-bound volume of 197 pages, and will be sent to any address for 75 cents, postpaid.

"There ain't goin' ter be no core," said one urchin to another, when asked for the core of the apple he was eating. "During the winter months we looked forward and planned for a number of things we would do during the summer, "when the dull season comes." But it seems that "there ain't goin' ter be no" dull season in our book department. Summer has come, but we are as busy as bees and glad of it.

Several sets of the Standard Dictionary have been sold, but we have a few more left. Those who have bought the work are delighted with their bargain. N. J. Aylsworth, Auburn, N. Y., writes us that he is more than pleased. Remember that we are selling the full morocco or russia —take your choice—at thirteen dollars, which is just half the regular price. The Standard Dictionary is the best and completest lexicon of our language ever published. The preparation of the book cost the publishers $960,000 before a single copy was sold.

We are happy to note the kind of books our people are buying and reading. Alexander Campbell's works are having a run. Hundreds of copies of his works have gone out during the past few weeks. Our offer of Campbell's Complete Works for eight dollars has "caught on," as well it might. "Missionary Addresses," by A. McLean, is going rapidly. About seventy-five copies a week is the rate at which we are selling "Christian Science Dissected." There are many orders for the works of H. W. Everest, who has just passed away. We have been compelled to withdraw our offer of Abbott's "Life of Beecher," as our stock is exhausted.

Perhaps you want something in a lighter vein, for summer reading. Let us recommend "Wheeling Through Europe," by W. E. Garrison. Mechanically, it is the handsomest thing we have published. It is a most entertaining account of the author's experiences on a bicycle in Great Britain, France, Belgium, Holland, Germany, Switzerland, Austria and Italy, illustrated from photagraphs taken by the author. Sent postpaid for one dollar.

CURRENT EVENTS.

Gov.-Gen. Davis has submitted a report concerning the administration of affairs in Porto Rico, which shows a different state of affairs there than that which has been found to exist in the Postal Service in Cuba. It is probable that the revelations in Cuba led to a request for a report from the Governor-General of Porto Rico as to the condition of things in this island. Gen. Davis reports that no officer in that island has received any other quarters than those he was entitled to receive; that no rent has been paid for any building occupied as quarters by army officers in Porto Rico, except for such officers as could not be accommodated in public quarters, and in those cases the rent paid was, in every instance, limited in amount to that allowed such officers by law and regulations. All the quarters occupied by officers in Porto Rico have been cleaned and repaired by the quartermasters of the department, so as to put them in good sanitary condition. No sum whatever has been expended for horses, mules, harness, vehicles or other equipages for any officer in Porto Rico, or for any who have been in Porto Rico, other than the usual and customary outfitting for such officers, the same as has been allowed from time immemorial in the United States. All officers in Porto Rico furnish their own servants and no payments therefor have been made from any funds in the United States or insular. No sum has been paid from any public fund for supplies used by any officer now in Porto Rico, or who has been situated here, so far as is known to the General. In a word, there seems to be a clean, honest and economical administration of affairs in Porto Rico; just what this government has a right to expect, and what it must insist upon in the other islands which have come under its control.

It is to be regretted that the dissolving war clouds in South Africa and the Philippine Islands are reappearing in other parts of the earth. At present the relation between Russia and Japan is almost at the breaking point, while that between Russia and England, and France and England, is not of the most assuring kind. These nations are watching each other with a jealous eye lest one secure an advantage in some strategic movement, and at times it looks as if the striking of a match or the firing of a gun would cause the storm to break; but at each critical moment some turn of affairs occurs that dissolves or postpones the catastrophe. At present the signs between the leading nations of Europe are ominous, but it is to be hoped that some turn in the oncoming events will avert or postpone a general outbreak of hostilities. We have had wars enough, for a season at least, and the starving millions of India need the attention of these nations. England has restored her lost prestige at a terrible cost in Africa and should now devote her energies to higher and holier ends than war. France cannot afford to put her great Exposition in jeopardy and each of the other nations could easily occupy their time and strength in better pursuits than war if they would only think so. We hope that they may therefore find other solutions of their troubles than by an appeal to arms.

The boxers have renewed their persecution of foreigners, missionaries, in Northern China, and Russia has sent troops to their defense. A number of missionaries have been killed, their property destroyed and others have had to flee for their lives. Among those whose lives are endangered are both English and American missionaries and this fact compels the attention of both the British and the United States governments, each of which has already landed marines at Pekin and other points to assist in quelling the disturbances and protecting the lives of their subjects. It is reported from Pao Ting Fu that eight Americans and three members of the China inland mission are missing, and that five native Christians have been murdered at Sang Ching. Traffic between Tien Tsin and Pekin has been suspended on account of damage to bridges and danger to life. The position of the government at Pekin toward the riots is somewhat mysterious and indicative of either sympathy with the boxers or inability to hold them in subjection. But in either case it will be compelled to recognize the concerted action of the interested powers and if they do not suppress the rioting and destruction to life and property now in progress on short notice there is likely to be some vigorous measures taken by the United States, England, Russia and Germany.

Considerable mystery has surrounded the operations in South Africa for several days. Enough is known, however, to make it pretty certain that Lord Roberts is drawing his forces around Pretoria with a view to what will prove to be the final act in the drama of the war. President Kruger has fled from Pretoria, removing his gold bullion and other valuables to Lydenburg. This action, on the part of the President has developed considerable opposition to him on the part of the other Boer leaders, including the Generals who, it is reported, have determined to make a desperate resistance to the British at the capital of Transvaal. It appears, too, that the efforts of the Boers to cut the communications of Lord Roberts have been thwarted. While there is evidence of recovery from the panic which prevailed a few days ago, there is scarcely room to doubt but that the British forces will occupy Pretoria in a few days. Whether this will practically end the war, or whether the forces will be rallied for further resistance, remains to be seen, and will probably depend upon the terms of peace which may be offered by Great Britain. Premier Salisbury's declaration in a recent speech, that "not a shred of the independence of these republics would be left," is not to be interpreted as meaning that Boers are not to have a large measure of liberty and of local self-government. This would be out of harmony with the British method of governing colonies.

The great street railway strike of this city continues at this writing, though propositions are being exchanged between the Transit Company and the Grievance Committee representing the employees. Disorder has continued in different parts of the city and some outrages have been committed which have created wide-spread indignation among the people. In two or three instances women have been caught by the mob and stripped of their clothing which has been torn into shreds, while they have been insulted and abused for the crime of riding on the street cars, in sections of the city where the police were not in sufficient strength to protect them. In one case a woman, after being thus stripped was greased with axle-grease. If these outrages had occurred in China, where our women missionaries had been made the victims of the "Boxers" and Chinese hoodlums, the whole nation would have been stirred with indignation. It is profoundly humiliating to decent citizens of St. Louis that such shameful occurrences can take place in our own city. While the strikers disclaim any sympathy with these outrages, they are perpetrated by their sympathizers, and in the interest of the strikers. Public sentiment is aroused and the country may rest assured that the people of St. Louis have made up their minds to enforce the law and preserve order. A posse comitatus of citizens is being sworn in and drilled for this purpose. That this should be necessary is due to the peculiar condition of things in this city, in which the police force is under the control of the governor, and not of the local city authorities.

The World's Fair Bill, appropriating $5,000,000 for an Exposition in St. Louis, in 1903, to celebrate the Centennial of the Louisiana Purchase, which has been pending before Congress for some time, has been passed by both Houses, by a decided majority. Speaker Henderson was opposed to to the bill and it would have been defeated, no doubt, but for the fact that it was introduced into the Senate as an amendment to the Civil Appropriation Bill, and passed that body by a practically unanimous vote. This brought it before the House in such a way that a vote upon it could not be prevented by the opposition of the Speaker, and it was carried by a vote of 127 to 75. It only needs now the signature of the President, which it will be sure to receive, to make the Exposition an assured fact. This amount is appropriated on condition that the city of St. Louis and the state of Missouri raise $10,000,000 for the same purpose, which they will no doubt do. The CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST has from the beginning been in favor of this measure. Our chief reason for favoring it is that we believe it will tend to break down provincialism and sectionalism, and promote national unity. The East needs to be introduced to the West and the great Southwest. The growth of the great Trans-Mississippi region has been so rapid that its magnitude and its importance are not appreciated by many of the people of the East. This World's Fair will furnish an opportunity for them to become acquainted with this vast region—its resources and its progress along all the lines of civilization.

The new Philippine Commission arrived at Manila on the 3rd inst., on the U. S. Transport, Hancock, having left San Francisco April 17th. The members of the commission were welcomed by Gen. MacArthur in a short address, to which Judge Taft, president of the commission, responded In a reported interview with Judge Taft, regarding the powers and future work of the commission and the policy of this government, he made the following interesting statement:

Representing the sovereignty of the United States in the Philippines, which it is the purpose of our government to maintain, we are here to do justice to the Filipinos and to secure for them the best government in our power and such a measure of popular control as is consistent with the stability and security of law, order and property. We are civil officers, men of peace. The field of our work is necessarily confined to regions where the armed enemy has ceased his operations. We cannot deal with armed men. Gen. MacArthur and the army will do that. When those now in arms shall have laid them down, relying, as they certainly can, upon the justice, generosity and clemency of the United States, we shall give them all a full hearing upon the policy to be pursued and the reforms to be initiated. We purpose to inaugurate as comprehensive a school system throughout the islands as circumstances will allow. We have come prepared to make Manila our home for two or three years, as the case may be, until the task of establishing a permanent civil government shall have been well begun. We invite suggestions from the Filipinos and all others who have sympathy with our purpose regarding needed changes in legislation and the organization of the various departments of the government, assuring them that we shall give their suggestions careful consideration and adopt those adapted to carrying out the purposes of the United States.

Washington University in this city received, during the past winter, some very substantial contributions to its endowment and building funds, under the leadership of two of its trustees and two of our public-spirited citizens, Samuel Cupples and Robert Brooking. A few days ago, however, it was announced that these two gentlemen had decided to donate to the endowment fund property which they held in common, amounting in value to $3,000,000 and which is yielding an income of from $120,000 to $130,000 a year. This magnificent gift places Washington University alongside the leading universities of the country in its endowment, which now, we believe, amounts to $5,500,000. The buildings of the University are down town, but extensive grounds have been purchased for the University near Forest Park and the buildings which are to be on a scale of magnificence are to be begun during the present autumn. This makes a splendid outlook for the University. The institution, which at one time in its history was under Unitarian control, is now thoroughly Evangelical in its management, though undenominational. It has a splendid outlook and we congratulate St. Louis that it is not to be behind any of the great cities of the country in its educational advantages. Large gifts for educational institutions seem to be the order of the day. When will the habit break out among us?

CHRISTIANITY A SPIRITUAL RELIGION.

The most fundamental difference existing among Christians is that which relates to the spiritual character of Christianity. There have always been those who have laid emphasis upon the outward and incidental at the expense of the inward and essential features of religion. The reason Christ was not received by His own when He came into the world was that He did not come with that outward pomp, circumstance and show which the world was looking for in its coming King. The reason why His teaching was rejected was because it was spiritual and not outward and mechanical. The mistakes which His disciples were continually making during His personal ministry were of the same character. They were interpreting literally words which had a spiritual significance. When He spoke of their eating His flesh and drinking His blood they revolted at the idea, not being able to spiritually discern the meaning of the words. Time and again He had to correct His disciples when they failed to apprehend the spiritual import of His teaching.

The great conflict between Paul and his Judaizing opponents in the first century was waged on this question. Paul stood for the spiritual interpretation of Christianity which made it a universal religion. His opponents stood for the outward and the transient features of Judaism, which would have localized and limited Christianity and have shorn it of its spiritual power. They stressed circumcision and the traditions and practices of Judaism. Paul put the emphasis on the renewed heart, the transformed life and character through faith in Jesus Christ.

The great battle between Luther and his opponents in the sixteenth century was fought on the same lines. Is Christianity a spiritual religion, mediated by faith in Christ and yielding power for a new life, or is it a system of rites and ceremonies, of traditions and forms? Romanism and Protestantism present these two directly opposite conceptions of Christianity to-day. The former conceives of it as resting upon the external authority of the Pope and as being mediated through a sucession of bishops and as having to do with outward rites and ceremonies. Protestantism conceives of it as a life, having its source in Jesus Christ, with whom the soul comes in direct contact by faith and receives the power of an endless life. It lays emphasis upon the character and conduct rather than upon rites and ceremonies.

Nevertheless, Protestantism has not always been true to the spiritual conception of Christianity. It has laid undue stress upon speculative dogmas, upon creeds, upon external authority, upon forms of church government. Out of these things have come our Protestant divisions. These matters are not of the essence of Christianity.

More and more it is becoming apparent that the church can never be united on these outward things, but must seek for its lost unity in Christ. Speaking of the divisions of his day, Paul said they were the result of carnality. Our divisions come from the flesh. Our union must come from the Spirit.

In these conflicts of the past it was the spiritual view of Christianity that always triumphed. It will be so in the future. Mechanical and legalistic views of the religion of Christ cannot stand. They do not satisfy the intellect nor the heart of man. Christianity has but two ordinances, and both of these derive their significance and value from their direct relation to Christ and their adaptation in helping men to a fuller surrender to and a fuller knowledge of Him. The nearer Christians approach Christ and the more they imbibe of His spirit and teaching the more spiritual will be their conceptions of Christianity and the greater will be their unity.

Pagan religions are outward, formal, ceremonial. Christianity alone is inward and spiritual, purifying the heart, and thus controlling the outward life and conduct from within. Only a spiritual religion can regenerate society through its individual units and make this world a fit place in which to live by building here on earth the city of God. It is righteousness, and not a host of cold, lifeless, formal churches, that God would have cover the earth as the waters cover the sea.

BIRTHDAY OF THE CHURCH.

We publish in another place an article by Bro. D. H. Bays which is in the nature of a criticism on an answer of ours to a recent inquiry concerning the time when the Church of Christ had its beginning, and have thought it proper to give his question further consideration.

The answer to the query referred to was made brief because we knew the line of argument was familiar to most of our readers. For the benefit of Bro. Bays and any others who may wish to know the scriptural reasons for holding that the church was born on the Pentecost following Christ's resurrection we submit the following:

1. Jesus said to Peter (Matt. 16:17): "On this rock I will build my church"—the rock-truth confessed by Peter—the Messiahship and divine Sonship of Jesus of Nazareth. From this language it not only appears that the building of the church was a future event, but the nature of the foundation implies that the time had not yet come for the building, since Jesus was "declared to be the Son of God, with power, according to the Spirit of holiness, by the resurrection of the dead" (Rom. 1:4). It is reasonable to suppose that Christ would not undertake to build his church on the foundation indicated until it was duly established.

2. In his great commission Jesus told his apostles to "make disciples of all nations, baptizing them into the name of the Father, of the Son, of the Holy Spirit" (Matt. 28:19). "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to the whole creation. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that disbelieveth shall be condemned" (Mark 16:15, 16). When were they to begin this work of preaching the gospel and baptizing believers into the name of the Father, Son and Holy Spirit? When did they offer repentance and remission of sins in the name of Jesus Christ? Surely the church of Christ could not begin until after repentance and remission of sins was preached in his name. "And he said unto them, Thus it is written, that the Christ should suffer, and rise again from the dead the third day; and that repentance and remission of sins should be preached in his name unto all the nations, beginning from Jerusalem" (Luke 24: 46, 47).

3. We have now the beginning place. Can we find the beginning time? "And being assembled together with them he charged them not to depart from Jerusalem, but to wait for the promise of the Father, which, said he, ye heard from me: for John indeed baptized with water; but ye shall be baptized with the Holy Ghost not many days hence" (Acts 1:4, 5). In further proof as to the exact beginning time, read Acts 11 15, where Peter, relating his experience at Cæsarea, at the household of Cornelius, to his Jewish brethren at Jerusalem, says: "And as I began to speak the Holy Ghost fell on them, even as on us at the beginning—referring, of course, to the baptism in the Spirit on the day of Pentecost, when three thousand were baptized.

4. If there were a church of Christ before this time, it was established without the preaching of repentance and remission of sins in the name of Christ, without baptism in the name of Christ, and without the Holy Spirit, for prior to this time, "the Spirit was not yet given, because Jesus Christ was not yet glorified" (Acts 7:39). Moreover, it was not a church established by the preaching of what Paul (1 Cor. 15:1-8) calls the gospel, because these great facts had not yet transpired.

5. After Pentecost we immediately read of the church at Jerusalem, and later, at Antioch, Philippi, Thessalonica, Corinth and Rome, but never do we read anywhere of a church at any place before Pentecost. Christ's instruction in case of offences, referred to by Bro. Bays, is clearly anticipative, as much of his instruction had to be. The church was in his thought and plan, as indicated by the passage we have already quoted: "On this rock I will build my church." It is not strange, then, that he would refer to it in laying down a rule for the settlement of difficulties between his disciples.

6. When Christ said: "I will build my church," he said to Peter: "I will give unto thee the keys of the kingdom of heaven"—that is, the authority to make known the conditions of admission into it. This authority was exercised on Pentecost, when he said to his convicted hearers: "Repent ye, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ (compare Luke 24:46, 47) unto the remission of your sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost" (Acts 2:38).

In view of these passages and others that might be quoted, we leave it to Bro. Bays to say whether he still thinks it a "remarkable fact that nowhere in all the Bible is either the birth, the origin or the organization of the church so much as mentioned." If the spiritual birth of three thousand obedient believers, repenting and being baptized in the name of Christ, and receiving remission of sins and the gift of the Holy Spirit, in His name, does not constitute a beginning of His church, when no such event had ever transpired in the history of the world before that time, it would be difficult to say what would constitute a beginning.

Of course there was a nucleus of disciples before this, during Christ's personal ministry—charter members, so to speak. This is necessary in all organizations. If any one wishes to call these few disciples, who deserted Him at the crucifixion, and asked Him after His resurrection if He were now going to restore the kingdom to Israel, a church, he can do so, but it is a great straining of the word, and he must reckon with all the passages and facts above cited. We should say, rather, they were material partially prepared, waiting for the descending Spirit to fuse them into a living organism, which Christ calls his church. After this spiritual birth, then believers could be "added daily to the church." Not before.

Certainly, what we say of the Baptists, that there is no Baptist Church, but only Baptist Churches, applies equally to ourselves, as our brother would know we have often said if he were acquainted with our literature. Our local congregations are churches of Christ in so far as they are made up of genuine believers, but the aggregate of these churches of the Reformation do not constitute the Church of Christ, but only a part of that church, which embraces all true believers in all lands and in all religious bodies, or "scattered abroad." No organization on this earth at the present, can rightly call itself "the church of Christ."

But, because the church of Christ is made up of many local congregations, and is not an ecclesiasticism, it does not follow that it could not have had its birth on Pentecost. The church at Jerusalem was the church of Christ on earth until other local organizations were formed and then it became the church of Christ at Jerusalem. The first congregation was the beginning of the church of Christ.

Hour of Prayer.

PRACTICAL USES OF THE WORD OF GOD.

(2 Tim. 3:14-17; Jas. 1:21-25; 1 Peter 2:1, 2.)

Uniform Midweek Prayer-meeting Topic, June 13.)

CENTRAL TRUTH: The Word of God is to the spiritual life what material food is to the body, and when received in a reverent and obedient spirit is the mean of divine instruction, of salvation and of spiritual growth.

The passage from from 2 Timothy, cited above, is an old man's advice to a young man. It is more than that. It is an inspired apostle's estimate of the value and purpose of the sacred writings. He says to Timothy concerning these writings, that they are "able to make thee wise unto salvation through faith which is in Christ Jesus." If there is any subject concerning which one might well wish to be wise, it is certainly that of salvation. This is the great theme of the Scriptures. It is their specialty, and in this field they have no rival. This involves a knowledge of God as revealed in Jesus Christ, of man's nature and sinful condition and of God's will concerning him. On these great questions the sacred writings are supreme.

Even the Old Testament Scriptures, to which special reference is here made, are able to make wise unto salvation when supplemented by faith in Christ, but not otherwise, as is shown in the history of the unbelieving Jews. Christ is the fulfillment of these old Scriptures, and it is only in the light of His life and teaching, His death and resurrection, that they become pregnant with divine meaning.

What is claimed here for the Old Testament is, of course, true of the New, and in a pre-eminent sense. As compared with the Old Testament the New is as the sunlight to the moonlight. It is well to note that it is not claimed for the sacred writings that they are able to make us wise in every branch of knowledge, but in matters of salvation. We may err in claiming for the Bible more than it claims for itself. Its specialty is salvation from sin through Christ. Other matters are merely incidental.

Note what the Scriptures are profitable for: Not for an ornament for the center table; not as a charm; not as containing proofs for our doctrines; but they are "profitable for teaching, for reproof, for correction, for instruction which is in righteousness, that the man of God may be complete, furnished completely unto every good work." Every one who is trying to make the most of his life needs this inspired teaching, and also the reproof and correction which the Scriptures contain. We fail to receive the benefit of all this unless we attentively read and study the inspired writings. Are we doing that?

In order that the Word of God may accomplish its purpose in us we must, according to James, "put away all filthiness and overflowing of wickedness" and "receive with meekness the implanted Word, which is able to save your souls." Purity and meekness are thus made conditions of receiving the Word unto our salvation. It is little use to read or hear the Word while we continue in known wickedness. This is to be "hearers only" and not "doers of the Word," thus deluding ourselves. It is the man who looks into "the perfect law of liberty" and continues to live according to it that is blessed in his deed. Obedience to right always brings its blessings. What a mirror does for the physical man, that the Word of God does for the spirit—it reveals to us our defects that we may correct them.

Peter, like James, emphasizes the need of putting away from our lives whatever tends to neutralize the power of the Word of God. The things which he specifies are "all wickedness, all guile and hypocrisies and envies, all evil speakings." These things certainly ought to be put away by all who claim to follow Christ. Having done this we are likely, "as new-born babes," to "long for the spiritual milk which is without guile," that we may "grow thereby unto salvation."

There is a salvation, then, unto which we must grow—a salvation from the love and power of sin, and all its evil habits; salvation from the low ideals of life and duty into the larger and clearer vision of things eternal and spiritual. The Word of God in its purity is an essential means by which this growth may be made. It is not enough to become "new-born babes" in Christ. We are expected to grow up into Him, unto the stature of manhood and womanhood. Too many Christians are only "babes" in strength and power of usefulness, when they ought to be full-grown men and women in Christ. Feeding on the Word of God and keeping it is the essential condition of attaining to this spiritual development.

The lesson from all this is that we must become more constant and interested students of the Word of God if we are to fulfill our mission in the world as Christians. If this prayer-meeting shall result in forming or deepening this decision in the hearts of any present, it will have accomplished, in part, at least, its purpose.

PRAYER.

Our Father who art in heaven, we thank Thee that Thou hast spoken to us in so many ways, and by so many voices. The heavens declare Thy glory and the firmament showeth Thy handiwork. Thou hast spoken in holy men of old, to whom Thou has given a measure of knowledge of Thy will, and Thou hast in these last days, spoken to us in Thy Son, in whom we have a revelation of Thy character and Thy will concerning us. We thank Thee for the fullness and the glory of this revelation. We pray Thee that it may be our delight to study Thy Word, to feed upon it, to the end that we may be wise on the great theme of salvation, and become strong in the Lord and in the power of His might. To this end enable us to put away all impurity and all known sin from our lives, and to receive Thy implanted Word, which is able to save our souls through faith which is in Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen!

Editor's Easy Chair.

A few days ago there occurred that tender memorial service in which the nation scatters flowers on the graves of its soldier dead. It was a happy thought to set apart a day in the flowery month of May, each year, in which to visit the graves of those who gave their lives for their country, and scatter upon them the sweet-scented flowers, in token of our loving memory and appreciation. Almost a generation has passed since they offered up their lives on the altar of their country, but the nation has not forgotten their services. They gave the highest measure of devotion to their country which it is possible for one to give, even their life itself. Their marches and battles are over. They have crossed the Rubicon of Death and have pitched their tents on the silent plains beyond. But as long as the united country remains, their graves will be visited by loving and loyal hearts, and will be made fragrant with the offerings of the springtime.

On Decoration Day we saw a few companies of the old veterans of the Civil War marshaling on one of the streets of this city. Their hair was gray, their forms were bent, and each carried in his hand a basket containing flowers to sprinkle upon the graves of his comrades of long ago. It was a pathetic scene. We could remember how these men looked when they sprang forth at their country's call, from the North and from the South, to offer their lives on freedom's altar. Then their forms were erect, their step elastic, their eyes full of the fire of youth and their hearts beating with a lofty patriotism. But Time, the tomb-builder, has furrowed their faces, whitened their hair, bent their forms, and soon they must join their comrades in "The low, green tents, Whose curtains never outward swing."

In a little while this patriotic sacrament, this memorial custom, must be attended to by others than those who were participants in the great struggle. But to others it can never mean exactly what it means to these veterans, who live over again, on this memorial day, those dark days of conflict through which our country passed.

When Decoration Day first became a national custom, recognized by an act of Congress, it was feared by many that its annual observance would tend to keep open the wounds of sectional strife between the North and the South. It is gratifying to know that it has had a contrary effect. Gradually sectional and political feeling went out of the observance, even before the Spanish-American war, and since that time it has been almost completely obliterated. Now the flowers are spread alike upon the graves of those who wore the blue and those who wore the gray. This is no mere sentimentalism, which ignores the great result of the conflict, but it is a generous recognition by both sides of the true valor and honest convictions which prompted those on either side to offer their lives to their country. It took time, of course, to bring about such a generous recognition, but no people on the earth has ever so completely outgrown its animosities and antagonisms as the American people, and the mutual good will which prevails to-day between the different sections is a matter of surprise and admiration to the whole civilized world. This is one of the victories of peace, no less renowned than any victory won upon the field of battle. It is the victory of brotherhood, of fraternity and of unity, over sectionalism, hatred and strife.

The principle which is at the bottom of this national observance is a wise and proper one. We will do well to keep in memory those who have rendered service of a high order to their fellowmen, and especially those who have wrought unselfishly and heroically for what they believed to be right. There are heroes who never fought on the field of earthly carnage. There are men and women who have given their lives unselfishly to benefit the race, and who lie to-day in forgotten graves. Too little do we remember the names, the virtues and the heroic lives of those who have gone before us, and who have prepared the way for us. One of the saddest things we have thought about in connection with the great men among us who have given their lives for the cause of truth is how soon they are out of our thought and memory. And yet, the human heart craves to be remembered. For this purpose monuments are erected and towering shafts mark the spot of the last resting-place of our friends. But alas! we even forget the monuments, after awhile, and Time pulls them down. Better a few fresh flowers on the graves of loved ones than unvisited mausoleums that mark their tombs. While the country remembers its heroes let the church see to it that it does not forget its heroes and heroines who, both at home and abroad, have manifested the highest courage, and have lived the purest and most unselfish lives.

There is no greater evidence of the need of regeneration than is to be found in the indifference of men toward the welfare of their fellow-men.

Questions and Answers.

Is it right to teach, as I find it in the Christian Lesson Commentary for 1900 and also in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, that God causes a child to be born blind? Is not this blindness of the child the result of violated law on the part of the father or mother? L. E. T.

If it be admitted that blindness of a child is the result, in every case, of violated law on the part of one or the other of the parents, this would not disprove the statement that God caused the child to be born blind. If blindness occurs under the operation of God's laws, then it is His punitive act. But we do not believe that it is true the birth of a blind child proves sin on the part of either parent. This was the Jewish idea, which caused the disciples of Christ to ask Him: "Master, who did sin, this man or his parents, that he should be born blind?" Jesus answered: "Neither did this man sin, nor his parents; but that the works of God should be made manifest in him." This teaches that the blindness in question was the result, not of sin on the part of the child's parents, but of a purpose of God lying back of it. It would be rash to conclude that blindness is a calamity in every case. God may make it a blessing.

It is not uncommon to hear preachers remark (and without qualification) upon taking the confession of children of tender years—say 9 to 12: "You have never known what it is to sin."

Query: (A) Would you say that the foregoing statement is according to the consciousness of said children?

(B) Is it true that the life of many a boy and girl—having Christian parents—is marked by selfishness and disobedience, more or less aggravated, the angry retort, and such like; and sometimes by falsehood, and even "taking things" not their own?

At our last teachers' meeting, the opinion was expressed by more than one that the Savior's invitation: "Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest," is not applicable to children of the intermediate department.

Query: (C) Are there any respects in which this invitation may be applied to young children; and if so, will you please indicate wherein? W. P. Keeler.

Chicago, May 4, 1900.

A. We should say that the statement ment above would hardly be justified in the experience of any child old enough to seek admission into the church. It would be true enough to say, no doubt, that the child was taking this step before the habit of sin had been formed, or before it had strayed far from the Father's house. But the statement as given, is too sweeping to be true in many cases, if ever.

B. We fear this is true, almost, if not quite, universally. The knowledge of right and wrong begins at a much earlier period of childhood than many of us are apt to think.

C. The line cannot be drawn between those to whom this invitation of the Savior is applicable, and those to whom it is not, on the line of age. There are young children, no boubt, whose little hearts are burdened with the consciousness of evil more than the hearts of some older sinners. It depends much on the sensitiveness of the moral nature to sin. Many of us have known children of tender age to sob with a sense of their own wrong-doing. It must be remembered, too, that a little trouble to a child may be as heavy as a much larger one to one of maturer years.

The strong commendation (presumably not the editor's own) of "a remarkable season of opera," just closed in St. Louis, on the "Budget" page of last week's CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST is so unusual for an orthodox religious journal, I am led to propound a query or two; and let me premise by saying that we would fain look to, not only, but depend upon the true and tried CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST to assist us in guiding our children in the way they should go, and to help us go that way ourselves.

1. Like the opera in general, were not these performances of the "Castle Square Co." essentially theatrical as to costuming, stage settings, etc.?

2. Without passing upon the unrighteousness (per se) or otherwise of professed Christians patronizing the playhouse—theater or opera—do you consider it expedient, or setting a safe example for them to do so?

W. P. Keeler.

Chicago, May 9, 1900.

1. We think they were.

2. We have been influenced, in our own course, by the feeling that it was not "a safe example." We know, however, that there are many Christians, perhaps as conscientious as we are, who feel differently about the opera, and certain plays in certain theaters. They feel that the more effective way to guard the young against the evils of the theater is to teach them to discriminate between the good and the bad. But to some of us, who are more old-fashioned in our views on this subject, it seems that the stage has become so corrupt in its general character as to justifiy Christians in regarding it as an anti-Christian institution. That some plays are worse than others is undoubtedly true, and even respectable men of the world, no doubt, avoid the worse and aim to patronize the least objectionable but it; remains an open question whether a drama, for instance entirely unobjectionable, in itself does not, when acted in the average theater become a snare to the young and unwary, leading on to something worse. We would like to believe that the stage could be reformed and made an instrument for promoting virtue, intelligence and righteousness, but the evidence of such a transformation is not yet visible. As to the opera, it would, according to our own way of thinking, be a much more enjoyable institution if it were to omit its grotesque costumes and incongruous acting, nnd confine itself to a high-class of music and high-class singing. But this seems to us more a matter of taste than of morals, save as the costumes may border on the immoral.

We have in our congregation a deacon who has signed a petition to reopen a saloon that was closed by the Anti-saloon League. Pastors and elders have labored earnestly and prayerfully with him, but he stubbornly refuses to take his name off the petition. What course is best to pursue in the mattér?

If the deacon in question is in favor of an open saloon, he is not in favor of the church. If he is not in sympathy with the church he ought to have no connection with it. "Ye cannot serve God and Mammon." Neither can one serve the saloon and the church. If this brother prefers the service of the saloon to that of the church, he has no right, we should say, to be numbered with the church and regarded as a member of it. We should serve notice on him that he must either be separated from the saloon or the church, and if he decides to hold on to the saloon, let the church separate itself from him.

Current Religious Thought.

The N. Y. Tribune reports the organization of a Union Church with a new creed, in Leffert's Park, in that city. The pastor, Rev. James S. Brockington, has been a a Presbyterian minister. The church became dissatisfied with the dilatory action concerning creed revision, and they decided to meet and make one for themselves. This is what they adopted:

> God, our Father; Christ Jesus, the Savior of all who truly believe in him; the Holy Spirit, Author of regeneration and sanctification, Advocate; unity: "Go, teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Ghost," "and there shall be one fold and one Shepherd." "A cordial welcome to all God's people of every tribe and nation."

That is not a bad stagger. The creed is short, but it is still longer than the one confessed by Simon Peter and adopted by Christ as the formation of His church, namely: "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God." The latter includes all there is in the former and much more.

Dr. Jenkyn Lloyd Jones, one of Chicago's free lances, referring to the various denominational gatherings at this season of the year, said:

> This is the season of denominational rabies. Conference religion as presented by nearly all the denominations during month of May proves that organization is a growth of the law of evolution. According to the members of the various conferences it seems as though the Lord ought to rejoice in the accumulations of missionary boards and the announcements of the statistics gathered by the different secretaries. If I could do as St. John of Patmos did, and send a letter to the different churches, I would say to them: "Beware of your statistics. Beware of pride in figures. Beware lest you mistake matter for spirit. Beware lest you become more enamored of dead heroes than of living issues. Pride of history is never the sign of growth. Beware lest in your boastfulnesss and parade of numbers you mar your spiritual teaching. Every time that a religion has been changed into a denomination it has struck 12 on the spiritual dial, and from that time the clock has started to run down.

Whenever a religious movement begins to look backward instead of forward and to limit its free thought and life by some rules it has formulated, then it has reached its zenith as a reformatory force in the world, and henceforth exists as a crystallization.

ART IN RELIGION.

WILLIAM D. RYAN.

In his definition of art Tolstoi elevates it from its office as a mere means of pleasure and makes it a means of intercourse between man and man. This is his definition:

"To evoke in oneself a feeling one has once experienced, and having evoked it in oneself, then, by means of movements, lines, colors, sounds or forms expressed in words, so to transmit that feeling that others may experience the same feeling—this is the activity of art.

"Art is a human activity consisting in this: that one man consciously, by means of certain external signs, hands on to others feelings he has lived through, and that other people are affected by these feelings and also experienoe them."

Art, then, becomes the interpretation of life—the expression of its deepest experiences. Michael Angelo first saw clearly the man Moses and lived in the age of the Pharaohs. Upon a block of marble he imparted his experience to others. Shakespeare lived in the age of the Cæsars. He breathes the atmosphere of the Roman court. He sees Brutus' dagger strike the death-blow to Julius. He witnesses the tumult that follows. By means of pen and paper he has made us see and experience the same thing.

By its very nature art should be the handmaid of religion, if it be the experiencing and transferring of all-absorbing ideas and feelings. These should be the most lofty that could be conceived. Being the most lofty they will be most Godlike.

Jesus was master in the realm of art. His theme was the love of God. This love was the moving spring in his own life and a fact in his experience. He so impressed it upon men that they, too, were filled with it. It became the controlling motive of their lives. It was the dynamic in every good act and impulse. No painter's brush or poet's pen can compare with the words and acts of Jesus in impressing upon others their most intense feeling and loftiest vision. Men were constrained to live his life, to think his thoughts —so far as human limitations permitted. This is the secret of power in our religion. "The love of Christ constraineth us." "The same mind is in us that was in Christ Jesus." It is thus the inspiration of the imperfect; the masterpiece in the realm of art.

In this way religion is made to appeal to men. David feels intensely the power of God. The heavens speak to him of God's glory, the firmanent of his handiwork. His own experience tells him of God's goodness and mercy. His poetry pictures God as he beholds him and experiences him. So vivid is this picture that we, too—

> "Sing the almighty power of God,
> That made the mountains rise," while we delight in experiencing his gentleness and goodness.

Paul was not a poet, but he was an artist. His constant struggle of the carnal with the spiritual every Christian has experienced and every Christian understands. Much of our knowledge of the spiritual life is due to his interpretation of that life. To read his letters strengthens our faith in God, because they are the expression of his unwavering faith. He had experienced God in his life. He transmits to us that experience.

To win men for Christ requires more than logic, more than homiletic training. Whatever else it may be it is truly a work of art. One must first experience Christ in one's own life, then, in some way, impart this experience to others. The ways in which this experience may be transmitted are almost innumerable. Da Vinci reproduced his conception of the Christ on canvas. "The Last Supper" is Da Vinci's sermon, and it has been effectual. Thomas a' Kempis committed to paper his deepest experiences. "Imitation of Christ" is the result. One would indeed be soulless who could read it and fail to be thrilled anew with the deep significance of Calvary and the sacredness of the Lord's Supper.

Every true Christian mother is a religious artist. Her portraiture of the Christ-life within her may not be on canvas. It may not be committed to paper. The world may know nothing of it, but son and daughter see it in the deeds and words of every day. It becomes a part of their early experience and a force in molding their character. The ability to thus impress one's spiritual experiences upon others is the highest art. It is the highest art because it is the natural—the almost involuntary—expression of one's deepest feeling and loftiest conception. It appeals to the heart because it is from the heart.

Great is the opportunity given to the Christian minister, whose sacred privilege it is to publicly portray Christ by word. His whole life is devoted to religious art. If he be not an artist his work is a failure. His message should be the natural overflow of the spiritual fountain within him as truly as the daily deeds of the Christian mother represent her inner life. A sermon on Gethsemane will not touch the heart of the listener unless Gethsemane has previously become a reality in the experience of the preacher. The love of God must have possession of one's whole being before he can attempt to portray Calvary. One's sermon may be a masterpiece of literature, faultless in logic, vigorous in thought and the people will say: "What a wonderful preacher!" It is only when the preacher faithfully portrays Christ as he has known him in his own most sacred experience that men will cry out: "What a wonderful Savior!" Two sermons may seem to be a great deal alike. One touches men's hearts and brings them closer to their God; the other has no effect on the hearer. The seem alike. The difference is as great as the difference between the masterpiece of a Raphael and the daub of a village amateur. The same colors are present in both, but one is a work of art; the other is not.

It is the exalted mission of the Christian to portray Christ to the world. Not a Christ of theory—not simply the Christ of history, but the Christ of his own experience. The method he may adopt of imparting his experience to others, is not essential so long as he finds it to be the method best adapted to his capacities. Whether it be by public proclamation, by pen and paper, by brush and canvas, by quiet daily deeds, is not the important question. It is of paramount importance that in some way men may know that he "has been with Jesus;" that his outer life may be a constant manifestation of the Christ within him.

ALEXANDER CAMPBELL AND THE OPERATION OF THE SPIRIT.

W. A. OLDHAM.

The writer firmly believes that Bro. Campbell has been misrepresented, recently, in more directions than one. He believes that the misrepresentation is honestly made, under a presupposition the truth of which is now being discussed. He has decided to present what Mr. Campbell says, and to leave the reader decide for himself. "Campbell on Baptism" has an article on the design of baptism. The conclusion of the entire argument is thus stated: "From the express authority and evidence of the apostles and evangelists, without any inferential reasoning, we feel constrained to conclude that the baptisms of the New Testament, both of John and Jesus, were for the true, real and formal remission of sins, through faith in the Messiah, and a genuine repentance toward God." In the Christian System is an article on the "Remission of Sins" in which the same position is reiterated. As the CHRISTIAN EVANGELIST has advertised these books I would advise those who have not the books, to buy them read them carefully, and form their own opinion. The giant mind of Alexander Campbell saw a hundred years in advance of his time, and with marvelous precision and clearness. It pays to read him, for he is full abreast of the thought of the age, and in many cases in advance of it.

I desire, however, to give the testimony with reference to his teaching on the influence of the Spirit. Here is his proposition in his debate with Rice: "In conversion and sanctification, the Spirit of God operates on persons only through the Word." Mr. Campbell affirms, Mr. Rice denies. It is interesting to study the evolution of this proposition in the correspondence between Jno. L. Brown and Bro. Campbell. Mr. Brown acted for the Presbyterians in arranging the debate. I think that that correspondence will show that Bro. Campbell held that the Holy Spirit operates on sinners and saints only through the Word. Detached passages may seem to teach otherwise, but careful study will show that such is not the case. Here is one of those detached passages: "We both believe that the Holy Spirit is given to all who believe and obey the gospel. But with regard to the influence of the Spirit in converting sinners, there is some discrepancy. We teach that the Holy Spirit operates on sinners only through the Word, not without it. Your denomination teaches that the Spirit, without the Word, regenerates the sinner. Thus, the Word contains the converting power—and regeneration is a change of heart and life by the Word." Letter Nov. 17, 1842. Mr. Brown replies to this by denying that the Presbyterian Church held as represented, saying: "We maintain that in the conversion of men there is an operation of the Spirit distinct from the Word, but not in ordinary cases without the Word." Mr. Brown then calls upon Bro. Campbell to defend this, taken verbatim from Christianity Restored: "The Spirit of God puts forth all its converting and sanctifying power in the Word, which it fills with its ideas." In another letter Mr. Brown says: "The passage is in your letter italicized and, therefore, the cream, the very essence of the whole thing." In his reply Mr. Campbell says: "I deny abstract influence in conversion and sanctification." What does "abstract influence" mean, other than influence apart from the Word?

In reply to this letter Mr. Brown says: "I have offered you a proposition in your own language, and you refuse to discuss it." To this Mr. Campbell replies: "On the influences of the Spirit I teach that in sanctification it operates only through the written Word. You teach that in some cases it operates without the Word. I, therefore, affirm that the Spirit of God operates on sinners and on saints only through the Word. You affirm that it regenerates and sanctifies in innumerable instances without the Word. Here is the gist of the controversy. All that I have written and everything in your creed comes up under this proposition." This includes the proposition quoted from Christianity Restored. May I depart from the subject a moment to call attention to the pronoun "it," whose antecedent is the Holy Spirit. M. E. Lard uses "it" in the same way, on the ground that pneuma in Greek is neuter. We have suffered rebuke for using it in the same way. We prefer to follow the greater man.

Mr. Brown in reply says: "We accept as follows: The Holy Spirit operates on persons only through the Word." Here "persons," interpreted in the light of Mr. Campbell's last proposition, means "sinners and saints." Mr. Campbell proposes in reply to this: "I affirm that in conversion the Spirit of God operates on persons only through the Word of truth." Mr. Brown says: "Your fifth proposition [the one just stated] is not quite satisfactory. We are willing to take it as presented in your last letter, with a slight verbal alteration, suggested in my reply, and which you have made. Then it will stand thus: "The Spirit of God operates only through the Word. To this Mr. Campbell replies: "I affirm that in conversion and sactification, the Spirit of God operates only through the Word of truth." This was the proposition finally discussed. I have shown its evolution through the long correspondence between Mr. Brown and Mr. Campbell. The word persons clearly means "sinners and saints," and is a short way of expressing the same idea. "The Spirit operates on persons only through the truth," in the light of the foregoing evolution, evidently means that the Spirit operates on "sinners and saints" through the truth, and in no other way. Presbyterians affirm that there is an operation on "sinners and saints," distinct from the truth, and Mr. Campbell denies. It is not a tedious process to read that part of the correspondence which bears upon Spirit operation, and I hope that all interested readers will procure the debate and read for themselves. It is out of print, but may be found in many of the libraries of our older brethren. We are hunting the truth in history and elsewhere, and cannot afford to misrepresent. In my humble judgment, Mr. Campbell's mighty mind saw through the claims of those who professed to be conscious of the presence of the Holy Spirit. He clearly saw that they mistook certain states of mind for the Holy Spirit. He was a psychologist by intuition, and probably analyzed the mental states which it was claimed were produced by the Holy Spirit, and saw that they were produced by the Word of God, or the word of the preacher, as the case might be.

In another paper I will go through the discussion and show that this was the meaning of the proposition, both to Mr. Campbell and Mr. Rice.

THE JEWISH GOSPEL ACCORDING TO LEVI MATTHEW.

BY A. P. STOUT.

PREFATORY.

In the R. V. and in the Amer. R. V. the titles of the Gospels are: "The Gospel According to Matthew," etc. In "The Twentieth Century New Testament" the title runs: "The Good News According to Matthew" etc. Prof. Noyes in his New Testament says: "The Gospel—this title is not in Tischendorf's text, nor in that of the oldest manuscripts, such as the Vatican and the Sinai MSS.; but I presume that is implied in the title, According to Matthew."

Dr. Hanson in his New Covenant says: "'Saint' and 'Gospel' are wanting in all the older manuscripts. Kata Matthaion, etc. (according to Matthew, etc.), it is the plain and simple designation of the Gospel record."

MATTHEW'S BAD RECORD.

Levi, son of Alpheus (Mark 2:14), surnamed Matthew by the Christ (Matt. 10:3), was a pure-blooded Jew by birth, and a subtax collector by profession. The tax collectors were called publicans. A publican was one who was appointed by a Roman knight to collect the Roman taxes from the conquered Jews in Palestine for the Roman Government. Companies of Roman knights held contracts with the Roman Government, generally lasting five years, by which they engaged to pay the state a stipulated sum of money for the profit of imports, exports and other taxes of the provinces. These knights then levied the taxes to suit themselves, and employed sub-collectors for the same. These sub-collectors were accomplices of the Romans in this extortion from the Jews.

These tax-collectors—publicans—were ranked by the Jews with the heathens, were excluded from the service of the synagogues and from political affiliation. Even the richest of them were ostracized from all respectable circles of the Jews. Matthew's profession was the most degrading, the most despised, the most prejudiced that a Jew could possibly engage in; for he was a servant of the Romans, who were the oppressors of the Jews, and that, too, for money. The teachers of the law and the prophets would not condescend to teach the publicans. Indeed, it is written of them: "As for these people, who do not know the law, they are cursed" (John 7:49).—Bible for Learners.

As the Christ passed out of the house of Peter and Andrew, down one of the streets in Capernaum that led to the lake, he came to the custom house where Levi was sitting thumbing over his tax collections. He paused at the large open door. Levi raised his eyes until they met the clear, penetrating eyes of the Christ, a short moment of long suspense passed; the silence was broken by the two words: "Follow me." At once Levi threw down his tax collections, arose from his seat and started off with the Christ. What became of the tax accounts we do not know; but it seems certain that Levi never went back to the office again.

That call of two words must have been clothed with great power to snatch a man out of a money-making office, without time to consider the consequences, and start him to following one who had no money, promised none and gave none. It made all Levi's money friends his enemies. For the Christ to call a man to follow him who was a despised outcast among the people in whose hearts he was to establish his kingdom, then call him to be an apostle, was to create a prejudice and opposition to his cause he had to meet at every turn during his entire ministry. No one but the Christ could do such a thing and succeed. As for Levi, at one bound he passed from the lowest to the highest calling.

WHERE WRITTEN.

Matthew wrote the Gospel that bears his name in Jerusalem, in the Syriac, Syro-Chaldaic, Aramaic or corrupted Hebrew, which was the language in which the Christ conversed with the Jews. For the Jews and Jewish Christians this Gospel was written; hence, Jewish phrases and customs are not explained as in the Gospel according to Mark.

It is held by the latest and best scholars of the New Testament that Matthew wrote in the Hebrew tongue, a large number of the sayings of Jesus, previous to writing his Gospel, and that those sayings are largely embodied in that Gospel as we now have it. Basis of it.

Dr. Cone says: "The first knowledge we have of the existence of Matthew in the Greek language dates from Justin Martyr, about the middle of the second century, and he gives no information as to it authorship."

There was an oral Gospel and Gospel manuscripts in existence at the time Matthew composed and compiled his Gospel. The Gospel of Mark, and the manuscript from which he drew, were doubtless in existence also.

Matthew, the preacher, gives us a Gospel of discourses thrown together with but little regard to chronology. Dr. Ezra Abbott says: "Matthew's object was to group and mass the teaching of the Lord. There is much reason to doubt whether what is called the Sermon on the Mount was actually delivered at one time in the shape that we now have it." This opinion seems to be general among the later critics. Indeed, it seems to be utterly impossible for the multitude that was following the Christ to comprehend such a sublime and far-reaching code of laws as are set forth in this great spiritual magna charta of life.

"The preface of Matthew reveals a part of the purpose of the whole Gospel, in tracing the genealogy of Jesus, not from David merely, who was under the law, but from Abraham, who was the receiver of the promise (Gal. 3:16) and father of the faithful (Gal. 3:7). Such a genealogy is the fitting place of a book which aims at exhibiting the law, not as trampled upon, but as fulfilled and developed into a higher law." It is evident that a leading thought with Matthew was to make the law reach to the gospel. As Dr. Farrar eloquently said: "Matthew's object was to fling an illuminated bridge of inspired truth between the old and new dispensations."

KEYNOTE TO MATTHEW.

The keynote to Matthew's Gospel is, Jesus the fulfillment of prophecy—Jesus the Jewish Messiah. The thread of fulfillment extends from chapter one to twenty-seven. (See 1:22, 23; 2:15, 17, 18, 23; 3:4; 4:14-16; 8:17; 5:18; 12:17-21; 13:35; 21:4, 5; 24:34; 26:54; 27:9, 35.) The Jews were standing on tiptoe, looking for the Messiah to come along the line of the prophets, and to be of the seed of David. Matthew traces the Christ back exactly on these lines. Matthew records such facts of Christ's life as were best adapted to win the minds and hearts of the Jews to their Jewish Lord, and omits such facts as would alienate the Jews from the Christ. To Matthew Jesus is the perfected fruit of the Jews; the Legislator of the Jewish law; the Prophet of the Jewish church and the King of the Jewish kingdom.

Another Jewish trend in the Gospel of Matthew may be inferred from the few times he uses the expression "kingdom of God." In the Amer. R. V. it occurs four times; 12:28; 19-24; 21:31, 43. In the Twentieth Century New Testament twice: 12:28; 21:43. In New Covenant the expression does not occur. "Reign of God" is the translation. The Jews of the Christ's day had a great dislike of using the word God when they could possibly avoid it; hence Matthew, the Jew, almost entirely omitted the expression "kingdom of God" and substituted for it the phrase "kingdom of heaven." He uses the phrase seventeen times. (3:2; 4:17; 5:3, 10, 19, 20; 7:21; 8:11; 10:7; 11:11, 12; 13:11; 16:19; 18:1, 3, 4; 23:13.)

According to Mark and Luke the apostles were sent forth to preach the gospel without limitation; according to Matthew they were positively forbidden to go near Gentiles or Samaritans, but to Jews only. Here is another strong Jewish trend of the first Gospel. Matthew is the only evangelist who says: "Many are called but few chosen" (22:14). This is to say, God has called many nations to him; but he has chosen only a few to be the bearers of the oracles of God, and they are the Jews (Rom. 3:1, 2).

If the first presentation of the Christ to the Jews had been from the divine side, as in the fourth Gospel, it would have been an almost complete failure. For the Jews could not have accepted a crucified and humiliated Messiah until it was shown by the Old Testament or by the teaching of their rabbis that all that had happened to him was according to the knowledge and divine purpose of Jehovah. This Jewish Gospel by the Old Testament quotations sets the Christ forth in this light; and Peter clinches the position: "Him being delivered up by the determinate counsel and foreknowledge of God, ye by the hand of lawless men did crucify and slay: whom God has raised up, having loosed the pangs of death: because it was not possible that he should be holden of it" (Acts. 2:23, 24). Peter's proof: Psa. 16:8-11. Here is the Jewish hand extended by the Jewish David, the Jewish prophets, the Jewish Christ and the Jewish evangelist to the Jews. It was the only hand they could grasp.

WHEN WRITTEN.

"If the date of Matthew, Mark or Luke could be accurately determined it would by no means determine the date of the traditions they contain. . . . There is no internal evidence for exactly determining the date of any one of the Synoptics. . . A compiler may compile at a late date, and yet preserve traditions in their earliest shape; but it is at least a reasonable inference that the compiler of Matthew wrote before Luke and before the fall of Jerusalem."—Dr. E. Abbott. Estlin Carpenter gives the earliest date A. D. 70. Dr. Sunderland, A. D. 70-90. Older writers assign earlier dates, but with less proof.

Matthew omits 105 of the 678 verses of Mark, 678 verses of Luke, just as much as there is of Mark's Gospel, and 832 of John, all of it save 47 verses. Total number of verses omitted by Matthew, 1615, which is 544 verses more than his entire Gospel, more than Mark and John combined.

Matthew wrote such facts of the Christ's life as were best adapted to win the minds and hearts of the Jewish people to their Jewish Lord. Quotations from the O. T., more than thirty-five.

"WAS THE CHURCH OR KINGDOM. . . . IN EXISTENCE BEFORE THE DAY OF PENTECOST?"

The above question, propounded by Bro. C. J. Kimball in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST of May 17, page 615, is editorially answered as follows:

"The church had its birthday on Pentecost."

The querist very properly asks for "Scripture and reason" upon this point, but no reference is made to any Scripture to sustain the above view, neither is any reason assigned for the position taken in this answer. It seems to me that if it be true that "the church had its birthday on Pentecost," as affirmed, some Scripture might be cited to prove it.

If the writer's silence is to be taken as an admission that no Scripture can be adduced in support of the position, then why attempt to maintain that the church was organized or "had its birthday on Pentecost?"

In the same issue and on the same page of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, L. C. Wilson, in a question to the Battle Flag, asks:

"What church was organized on the day of Pentecost?"

In this question the writer assumes that some church—presumably the Church of Christ—"was organized on the day of Pentecost." Now, this view, I admit, may be the correct one. The church may have been organized on Pentecost, but if it was the fact is susceptible of scriptural proof. "Where the Bible speaks we speak; where the Bible is silent we are silent." Now, in all candor where does the Bible speak on this subject?

It is a remarkable fact tha nowhere in all the Bible is either the birth, the origin or the organization of the church even so much as mentioned. Upon this point the Scriptures are as silent as they are concerning the date of our Lord's birth. A remarkable coincidence, and one full of significance.

Replying to Bro. Wilson's question the editor remarks:

"If a fairly representative man were to answer this query he would probably say there is no such organization as 'the Baptist Church,' but that there are Baptist Churches, or local congregations made up of baptized believers."

May not the same thing be affirmed of the people known as the Disciples of Christ? Is it not true that a "fairly representative man" among us would say that there is no such thing as an ecclesiasticism called "the Christian Church?" that there is no such organization as "the Church of Christ?" Would he not be more likely to say that there are churches of Christ or "local congregations, made up of baptized believers?" We think so. And yet we are told "the church had its birthday on Pentecost." This position, it seems to me, flatly contradicts this fundamental idea, because it teaches by inference the existence of an ecclesiasticism called "the church."

If we concede the existence of an ecclesiasticism in any form whatever, we concede a fact which renders it impossible that the church could have been born on the day of Pentecost, as may be seen by what follows. That the church—whatever that may mean—existed before Pentecost is rendered indisputable from the following Scripture:

"And if he shall neglect to hear them, tell it to the church" (Matt. 18:17).

Here the church is referred to as already existing; for how could the disciples "tell it to the church" if the church did not exist?

In the answer to Bro. Kimball's query we find the further statement that "three thousand persons were converted, baptized and added to the nucleus of believers." Very good.

The record says: "Then they that gladly received his word were baptized, and the same day there were added unto them three thousand souls" (Acts 2:41).

Added to whom? To "the nucleus of believers," to be sure. Were these believing disciples members of the church? If they were, then the church existed before Pentecost, and the three thousand were added to the church. That they were "added to the church" is shown by the words: "And the Lord added to the church daily such as should be saved" (v. 47).

On the other hand, if they were not added to the church, then no church existed on the day of Pentecost, and hence the church could not have been organized that day. If no such thing as "the church" existed before Pentecost, and if it was not "organized" on that day, then neither the apostles nor the hundrd and twenty were members of the church.

Query: When did the apostles and "the rest of the brethren" become members of the church?

But if the three thousand were added to the church on Pentecost, then the church must have existed before Pentecost, for the obvious reason that something cannot be added to that which does not exist. If, however, it can be shown that "the church had its birthday on Pentecost," and that the birth occurred before the three thousand were added, that would materially alter the case. But this, being the very point in controversy, must be proved, not assumed.

Our Budget.

—Missouri Sunday-school convention next week.

—Time—Monday evening to Thursday noon. Place—California.

—"Children's Day"—last Lord's Day. Did you give the children a chance? Not too late yet.

—We have received Prof. Willett's reply to T. P. Haley's questions concerning his article on Dr. Green, but are compelled to hold it over till next week.

—In a letter from W. R. Lloyd, of Richmond, Ky., referring to the editor's baccalaureate sermon on the previous Lord's day, he says: "Many heard your sermon by telephone all over town and county. They tell me your quantity of voice and enunciation were all right, and that every word was heard distinctly and greatly enjoyed." And yet, uninformed people sometimes speak of Kentucky as being behind the procession! This opinion needs revision, in the light of such enterprises as indicated above.

—Colburg St. Christian Church, St. John, N. B., requires a pastor. All communications to be addressed to L. P. Morton, 83 Germaine St., St. John, N. B.

—The Central Church in Denver, Col., has sold its property for $45,000. After paying its debts there are $40,000 with which to begin a new building in a better part of the city. Bruce Brown is pastor.

—The University of Illinois commencment exercises will be held June 8-13. The baccalaureate address was delivered on last Sunday by President Draper.

—The church in Lyons, Miss., wants a preacher—a young man, single, energetic and consecrated—who can work on a small salary. Address Mrs. Nancy T. Howard at above place.

—Oliver W. Stewart, national chairman of the Prohibition party, will deliver the opening address of the Prohibition state convention, to be held in Mexico, June 13-15. Bro. Stewart's address will be delivered on Wednesday evening, June 13th. Bro. Stewart was for two years president of the Illinois Christian Endeavor Society and is prominently known in Illinois as a Christian minister and an advocate of the cause of the prohibition of the liquor traffic. Preparations are being made for a large and enthusiastic convention in Mexico.

—The deal between the Christian Century and the Christian Tribune, referred to last week, has been consummated and the last issue of the Tribune appeared last week, that paper being merged into the Christian Century. As publishers of the Tribune for Bro. Peter Ainslie and the brethren of the East for some time, the Christian Publishing Co. has done what it could to make the paper a useful medium for brethren of the Eastern Seaboard, and we are glad to know that our management has been entirely satisfactory. In a letter from Bro. Ainslie to the editor of this paper he says: "I thank you very much for all the kindness that the Tribune and the East have received from your hands and that of your company. Everything has been as pleasant as could be wished." In return we wish to say that we have found it delightful to work with Bro. Ainslie and the men associated with him in the Tribune, and in wishing the Christian Century Godspeed we wish the brethren of the East to know that the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST and the Christian Publishing Co. are still ready to serve their interests whenever and in whatever way they may be desired.

—The Register-Review contains an article from Bro. L. B. Wilkes, Stockton, Cal., criticising, in what seems to us a most unfair way, the present management of Christian College, Columbia, Mo. Bro. Wilkes used to live at Columbia, and had no little to do with the institution in its earlier history. He has been led to believe, through rumors which have reached him, that the institution is "hopelessly in debt," and that it has lost its "distinctively Christian character." This is amusing to those who know the facts. Christian College has not only erected a modern school building worthy of its name and its patronage in place of the old, unfit and unsafe structure, but it has improved its courses of study correspondingly. In its teaching force, course of study, accommodations, etc., it is as far superior to the institution Bro. Wilkes knew as that was to the primitive log schoolhouse. Moreover, we venture to say that the positive Christian influence of the school was never superior to what it is now. It is meeting all its obligations, and its trustees and friends do not doubt its ability to pay for the splendid building it has erected. It has just closed one of the most successful years in its history and its prospects are unusually bright for the next session. Bro. Wilkes should not have written such a wail on mere hearsay.

—The baccalaureate sermon of the 58th commencement of the University of the State of Missouri was preached Sunday, June 3rd, by Rev. Dr. C. R. Hemphill, of Louisville, Ky., and the annual address, June 4th, by Dr. Frank William Taussig, of Harvard University. The Stephens medal contest was held June 2nd at 8 P. M., the alumni reunion June 5th and the commencement exercises June 6th.

—The First District Missionary Convention for Kansas will be held in Nortonville, June 26-28, and in the program are the names of W. S. Lowe, Topeka, Kan.; Sumner T. Martin, Omaha, Neb.; W. F. Richardson, Kansas City, Mo., and W. S. Priest, Atchison Kan., for addresses and sermons. The program is a strong one throughout in the themes selected for discussion and the persons to treat them.

—"I shall be glad when 'Wheeling Through Europe,' begins again."—Mrs. B. H. Foster, Grass Valley, Cal. We present the first of these letters of European travel from our staff correspondent this week. A volume entitled "Wheeling Through Europe" has just been issued, containing his former letters revised, elaborated with considerable new matter and illustrated. Price, one dollar.

—In March last the Imperial Diet of Japan passed a law prohibiting the use of tobacco to all persons under the age of eighteen. The bill was introduced and supported by the Hon. Sho Nemoto, a Christian and a strong temperance advocate. The argument that seemed to have most weight with the Diet was that tobacco physically disabled men from duty as soldiers, but this argument will not militate against the good effects of the bill upon the young in other ways. And so Japan is outstripping America in the establishment of protective laws for the young. Perhaps we may have to look to Japan for reform missionaries in the future unless we can awaken our own people and statesmen to the importance of prohibitory laws against our own national evils.

—Elsewhere in this issue we publish an article on "Alexander Campbell and the Operation of the Holy Spirit," by W. A. Oldham. This article, as will be seen, is intended as a reply to certain statements recently made in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, representing Mr. Campbell's view of that subject. We are glad to give Bro. Oldham the opportunity of setting forth his view on Mr. Campbell's position, which, undoubtedly, is also his own. It tends greatly to the elucidation of truth to have both sides of every question presented. In the article which we print this week and in the one which is promised, Bro. Oldham will be able to set forth what he believes was Mr. Campbell's real position. We shall probably have something to say on the sucject when Mr. Oldham has finished. Meanwhile, we ask careful attention to what he has written or may write on this subject. We will only take occasion to say here that the proposition affirmed by Mr. Campbell in his debate with Mr. Rice was that "in conversation and sanctification the Spirit of God operates on persons only through the Word of truth." This is different from the affirmation that the Spirit, in conversion and sanctification, operates on persons only through the written Word. The truth, or the Word of truth, is a much broader phrase than the written Word. In the correspondence given by Bro. O., Bro. C. seems to have used both phrases, but in deciding on the final form he was, no doubt, influenced by the consideration just stated.

"Pride Goeth Before a Fall."

Some proud people think they are strong, ridicule the idea of disease, neglect health, let the blood run down, and stomach, kidneys and liver become deranged. Take Hood's Sarsaparilla and you will prevent the fall and save your pride.

Hood's Sarsaparilla
Never Disappoints

—Troy, Mo., is the county seat of Lincoln County, and is fifty miles out from St. Louis, on the St. Louis & Hannibal Railroad. It is one of the oldest settled towns in Missouri and is in the midst of a fine, picturesque country. Buchanan College, located at that place, has just completed its sixth session. By invitation the editor of this paper preached the baccalaureate sermon before the college graduating class on last Lord's day morning. It was an ideal day in every respect. The churches of the town were all closed and the people of the community and surrounding country filled the large chapel to overflowing. The college building is situated on the hill above the town and commands a fine view of the country. Prof. E. H. Lay has served the school as president during the past year, though he closes his labors with the present session. We found him and his good wife highly esteemed in the school and community. The school draws its support chiefly from the county in which it is located, and is proving a blessing to the community in offering educational advantages to young men and women who might not otherwise feel able to avail themselves of such advantages. In the evening we addressed a very large audience in the Christian Church, the other churches of the town adjourning service for the evening. The pastors of the Methodist and Presbyterian Churches were present at the meeting. Bro. J. H. Crutcher is pastor of the church here, giving half his time to the congregation and preaching at other places in the surrounding country the remainder of his time. The church has one of the best Sunday-schools in the town, superintended by Sister Shelton, daughter of the late Bro. D. M. Grandfield, known to many of our readers. Sister Grandfield also lives here. We regretted to learn that the church has no Christian Endeavor Society, and that no church in the town has been able to maintain one. We hope this defect will soon be remedied.

—The C. W. B. M., of St. Louis, extend a cordial invitation to C. W. B. M. workers in adjoining counties to attend their union quarterly meeting, to be held at Tuxedo, June 19th. Send your names beforehand to Mrs. W. D. Harrison, district secretary, 6023 Clemens Ave.

—The new house of worship at Eaton, Ind., will be dedicated on the third Lord's day in June (June 17). L. L. Carpenter, of Wabash, Ind., will preach the opening sermon and dedicate the house. It is hoped that this will be the occasion of the gathering together of many brethren from the surrounding churches, and that it will be a great day for the church at Eaton. All are cordially invited and will be provided for.

—H. L. Atkinson, Chicago, writes that he is "delighted with the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST in its magnificent strides, of late, toward a higher plane of religious journalism." If we can prevent it we shall not make it possible for him to modify this opinion.

—We acknowledge the receipt of a copy of No. 8 of Standard Pub. Co.'s vest pocket series of tracts entitled "Too Much; or, Mrs. Caswell's Sacrifice," by J. H. Stark.

—We have received a copy of the Fillmore Bros.' Prohibition Songs, and from a perusal of its pages we believe it to be a splendid campaign document.

—Remember the Missouri Bible-school and C. E. convention at California, Mo., June 11 to 14, to be there. The program will be the best we have had in many years.

—The special coach for the St. Louis delegation to the Bible-school C. E. convention at California, Mo., is now assured. A large number of the workers in the St. Louis Bible-schools have already enrolled themselves in the party and a number of others from towns and cities adjacent and en route have accepted the invitation to share the comforts of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST special. If you intend to go by way of St. Louis or can join us at some point along the route, send your name at once to either W. D. Cree or Barclay Meador, in care of this office. The CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST special leaves St. Louis, Monday, June 11, at 9 A. M., via the Missouri Pacific Ry., arriving at California at 1:28 P. M.—one hour before the opening session of the convention.

—The following railroads have made the one fare rate to the Bible-school and C. E. convention at California, Mo., June 11-14: Missouri Pacific, Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific, Kansas City Southern, Kansas City, Ft. Scott & Memphis, Wabash, Omaha, K. C. & Eastern, Kansas City Northern Con., Santa Fe and the Burlington from Quincy, Hannibal, Monroe City, Macon, Bucklin, Chillicothe, Cameron, Lathrop, Liberty, Milan and St. Joseph.

—The CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST special will furnish an opportunity for a pleasant outing in the company of friends, as well as a profitable time at the convention of the Bible-school forces of the state of Missouri, at California, June 11-14. An informal program will furnish diversion on the trip and lunch boxes (ten cents each) will be on sale. Members of the party will be furnished with a white ribbon badge bearing this inscription: "Bible-school and C. E. convention, California, Mo., June 11-14, 1900, via the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST Special." Those desiring to join the party from other cities at St. Louis will look out for these badges at Union Station and ask the wearers for necessary information in regard to the special. Let us know when your train arrives at St. Louis and we will arrange to meet you Address W. D. Cree or Barclay Meador, care of this office.

—There was a good attendance of preachers in this office this morning to hear a paper by Rev. J. F. Newton, assistant pastor of the Non-sectarian Church of this city on "Some Hopeful Tendencies in Modern Religious Thought." The paper in spirit and elegance of language was almost faultless. In thought it was philosophical and thought-provoking, but not fully concurred in in all respects by the preachers. This did not, however, prevent appreciation of the paper. In the reports four additions were reported at Tuxedo, three at the Second and one at the Central Church. Children's Day was generally observed by the Sunday schools.

—Having purchased 110 copies of Gospel Call, No. 2, from us, the Sunday-school in El Dorado, Mo., now offers their old books, 30 copies, for sale at a bargain. Address Oscar Sweeney.

—We publish in this issue an article from the Medical Brief entitled "Two Thousand Cross Eyes," written by Dr. J. Harvey Moore, the oculist. It will pay any one to read this as a matter of information.

—Leonard G. Thompson, state evangelist for Colorado, desires two preachers for Colorado pulpits in growing towns. Salary, $700. Can be increased later. These are mission points of the state board. Useless for any man to apply who is not thoroughly missionary, who is not willing to sacrifice, or who is not succeeding now. The Western fields demand heroism and ability. Address all correspondence to him at 524 E. 38th Ave., Denver, Col.

—On Lord's day evening, February 25th, a young man by the name of Edwin Luckel, 22 years of age, was baptized by E. T. McFarland, pastor of the Fourth Christian Church, this city. On the next day Bro. Luckel came near losing his life in an elevator accident in the Century Building. Suit was brought against the owners of the building for damages and last week he was awarded $5,000 damages by a jury in the circuit court. His attorney in the case was Bro. J. F. Merryman, of the Mt. Cabanne Christian Church of this city.

—D. R. Dungan, pastor Mt. Cabanne Church of Christ, this city, spent last Sunday in Canton, Mo., which is likely to become his home in September, he having accepted a call to the presidency of Christian University. Dr. Dungan has spent so much of his life in the professor's chair that he feels that to be his first work. The Mt. Cabanne Church in particular and St. Louis in general, loses a strong advocate of primitive Christianity in his acceptance of this call, but Canton and the friends of Christian University are rejoicing in their victory in the securing of a man of such scholarship and experience to place at the head of this institution of learning.

—Two important suits have just been decided in the U. S. Circuit Courts involving the right to the word Hood or Hood's. These two degrees establish the exclusive right of C. I. Hood & Co., to the word "Hood's" and decide in effect that no other person can put up a Hood's Sarsaparilla, even if his name is Hood, nor can any retail druggist sell or offer for sale any sarsaparilla bearing the name Hood or Hood's other than that prepared by C. I. Hood & Co.

—G. W. Hall preached the baccalaureate sermon for the high school of Ellendale, N. Dakota, May 20th, and the memorial sermon, May 27th. There were large audiences on each occasion.

—The Canteen Convert article in our Family Circle this week will of course be understood as sarcasm. Sarcasm is sometimes the keenest weapon that can be used in unmasking the fallacies of an enemy, and this article is an instance of that character. It cuts to the bone of the controversy.

—In another place in this issue we publish a letter from our Chinese brother, Jeu Hawk, who was converted in this city several years ago, who afterwards took a course of study in Drake University, and who for a number of years has been conducting a successful Chinese mission in Portland, Oregon. In addition to his work in preaching he has studied medicine and prepared himself for mission work in his native land. Such are the peculiar conditions in China in reference to native missionaries educated in this country that it is not deemed advisable by our Foreign Mission Board to send Bro. Jeu as a missionary under its support. He desires, however, for the reasons stated by him, to return to his native land to do mission work, and has prepared himself through the study of medicine to earn his own way and conduct a self-supporting mission. It is greatly to his credit that he is willing to undertake such a work. He is widely and favorably known to the brotherhood and is a man of approved Christian character and ability as a teacher of the Christian religion. We have asked him to state, as he does in this letter, what his plans are and what equipment he will need to begin his work. He has no means at his disposal to equip himself with the necessary surgical instruments and medicines to begin his work, and he feels that if the brethren in their generosity could assist him to such an outfit he would be able to carry on his mission work in Hong Kong independently. We ask the friends of our mission work to read Bro. Jeu's letter, and if they feel disposed to help him to the purchase of the necessary instruments and medicines, we will be glad to receive and take charge of and acknowledge in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST any sums of money that may be sent us for that purpose and turn the same over to him. It seems to us that this is asking of his brethren no more than he has a right to expect of us, in view of the fact that his work is to be carried on without any assurance of outside support. We shall be glad to hear from any one interested in this enterprise.

Muscular Pastor.

MUSCLES BUILT UP ON POSTUM FOOD COFFEE.

"For years I have not been able to drink coffee, as it made me very nervous and gave me a headache. No one loved coffee more than I and it was a severe trial to abandon its use. Nearly three years ago I saw Postum Cereal Coffee advertised and concluded to try it.

"I have been so well pleased with it and its healthful effects that I have used it ever since. I carry packages with me when I visit other places.

"When I began to drink Postum, my muscles were flabby, as my habits are sedentary, but for the past two years my muscles have been hard and I never felt stronger in my life than I do now at sixty years of age, and I attribute my strength of muscle to constant use of Postum. I drink it three times a day. I feel so enthusiastic about Postum that I cannot recommend it too highly wherever I go. Wishing you great success, yours truly,"

The reason Postum builds up the human body to a prime condition of health, is that when coffee is left off, the drug effects of the poison disappear and the elements in Postum unite with albumen of the food to make gray matter and refill the delicate nerve centers all over the body and in the brain. This sets up a perfect condition of nerve health, and the result is that the entire body feels the effect of it.

Personal Mention.

O. D. Maple was at Stronghurst, Ill., last week, delivering a course of six chart lectures.

C. Edwards, who for nearly sixteen years was pastor of the church in Payson, Ill., is now pastor of the church in Albion, Ill.

R. B. Briney began his work with the church in Monroe City, Mo., on the first of the present month. He was at Amarillo, Texas.

H. A. Northcutt, of Kirksville, Mo., preached the "memorial sermon" last Sunday in the opera-house at Kirksville.

T. R. Hodkinson, formerly of Winterset, Iowa, is now pastor of the church in Hamilton, Ontario, —"a city of wealthy churches."

I. W. Cameron, pastor of the church in Weldon, Iowa, composed and dedicated a poem to the Weldon G. A. R. Post, entitled "Salute the Dead."

J. Fraise Richard, of Washington, D. C., will spend a few days in Ohio, with headquarters at Fayette. He will probably be in demand for lectures and addresses while in Ohio.

C. F. Stevens, pastor of the church in Trenton, Mo., preached the memorial at Dunlap, and was complimented by a request for its publication in the county papers.

J. F. Callahan writes that the Sunday-school in Noble, Ohio, will observe Children's Day. Elder D. R. King, of Collinwood, preaches at Noble occasionally.

Imri Zumwalt, of Herrington, Kan., delivered the memorial sermon of that city to a large audience and received a very complimentary notice of the same in the Herrington Times.

The address of Chas. A. Young and wife, during their tour in the East, will be care of Christian Commonwealth, 73 Ludgate Hill, London, or Brown-Shipley & Co., 123 Pall Mall, London.

M. A. Bartholomew, of Moulton, Iowa, writing of the work of their pastor says: "Bro. C. Percy Leach, our pastor, has resigned his work here and will enter Yale University next fall. He is a graduate of Northwestern Christian College, of Minnesota and of Drake University. During his two years' labor here over 100 have been baptized and the work enlarged in every respect."

B. B. Havener, who recently resigned his work at Mechanicsburg, Ill., that he might accept work in Southwest Missouri under the Missouri Bible-school Board, called at this office last week on his way to his new field. But before entering upon his work he will visit churches in Franklin County, Missouri, until the Bible-school Convention in California, June 11-14, after which his headquarters will be Windsor, Mo.

W. H. Willyard, of Mankato, Minn., preached the memorial sermon at the home church on the evening of the 27th, and in the afternoon at Eagle Lake. The Eagle Lake paper gave almost the entire sermon, with a cut of the speaker. It spoke in very high praise of the merit of the sermon. The Mankato press gave quite a flattering comment on the sermon and the soldiers were greatly pleased with the entire program.

W. J. Russell, pastor of the Christian Church as Rushville, Ind, has given five graduating addresses this spring, one at each of the following places: Milroy, Richland, Fayettville, Raleigh and Harrisburg. He also gave the memorial sermon to the G. A. R., of Rush County, on Sunday, May 27. On Sunday afternoon, June 3, he gave the address at a union service of all the fraternal organizations of Rushville. And on June 10 he will deliver a memorial address to the Knights of Pythias at Milroy, Ind.

At the East End Christian Church, Sunday morning, the pastor, Rev. T. E. Cramblet, celebrated the fourth anniversary of his work with the congregation. Among other things encouraging to the pastor and people, figures showing growth of the organization were presented. Four years ago the membership was 186. Since that time 439 additions have been made to the church. After deducting all losses from death, removal, etc., there is a present membership of 539. The Sunday-school has grown from less than 100 to 350, and other organizations in the church have enjoyed like prosperity. The splendid new church bailding has been erected and paid for, and a mission established and housed in its own property on Rowan Avenue since the present pastorate began. The finances of the church were shown to be in excellent condition and the largest audiences in the history of the church now attend the services.—Pittsburg Commercial Gazette.

G. L. Wharton asks us to state that he will now, for a time, be able to fix dates with churches, districts, state meetings, C. E. Societies, C. W. B. M. auxiliaries and missionary rallies of any kind, to lecture once or hold a series of missionary meetings, wherever information and enthusiasm are needed. His subjects are: "Greatest Need of Missions," "India's Need of Christ," "What an Indian Famine Means," "Old and New India," "Intemperance and Missions," "The New Era for Women in India," "Bane and Blessings of British Rule in India," "Hope and Certainty of India's Conversion." Address him at Hiram, Ohio.

Charles Carlton.

We are glad to present our readers this week with a good picture of President Charles Carlton, one of the surviving veterans of a generation nearly all of which has passed off the stage of human action. When the editor of this paper was a boy, a report came to his neighborhood south of Springfield, Mo., that a man by the name of Carlton was holding a great meeting at Springfield and that "the Campbellites were taking the town." Since then he has helped to "take" many another town for simple, New Testament Christianity. The following sketch of Bro. C. is sent us by Bro. J. B. Sweeney, of Gainesville, Texas:

Pres. Chas. Carlton, or "Uncle Charlie," as he is affectionately called throughout Texas, may well be styled our patriarch in the Southwest. He is nearly 80 years old, and yet his strength is unabated and his vision undimmed. He reads without glasses, hears as well and labors as diligently as ever. He was born in England, Aug. 25, 1821. At 15 years of age he went to sea. At 17 he came to America. Worked a few years in a shipyard, then for a while on a farm. Became a Baptist, and in 1847 was ordaided to the ministry. Went at once to Bethany College. July 4, 1849, he received his A. B. degree from Bethany in a class with M. E. Lard. At graduation became identified with the Reformation. He was pastor at Georgetown, Ky., for a year. Then with Robt. Graham labored for several years in Northwest Arkansas, with headquarters at Ft. Smith, conducting a college part of the time. At the solicitation of Mrs. Gov. Phelps moved to Springfield, Mo., where he taught and preached. In 1861 he moved to Texas, organized our Central Church in Dallas. Then taught and preached two years at Kentucky Town, Texas. He located at Bonham in 1867. Began his dual work there, organizing a church, and establishing Carlton College. For 33 years the college has prospered, has a valuable property and is free from debt. For 33 years he has been pastor of the Main St. Christian Church at Bonham. It has swarmed once, and still numbers about 300. He helped to organize our general missionary society in Cincinnati fifty years ago. During vacations has conducted many great revivals. Gives promise of many more years of good work. Is the Gladstone of our brotherhood.

Bro. C. has had four children, all living and all devoted Christians. Three of these teach in the college. His son C. T. is a graduate of Bethany and vice-president of the college. His daughters, Grace and Sallie Joe, are teachers of art and music respectively. Miss Grace is president of our Texas C. W. B. M. His good wife "Aunt Sallie" has just recently entered into rest, at the advanced age of 84. "Uncle Charlie" is a regular writer for the Christian Courier, always at the conventions, and does the work of three men. He has never heard of any "deadline." He is very generous, and yet is worth considerably more than the average preacher.

The Golf Girl

Is the type of the modern woman at her healthiest and best. She walks with an easy grace. She is a picture of perfect womanhood in the springtime of life. But generally the golf club is laid aside with marriage. A physical languor oppresses the once athletic girl. Exercise makes her back ache. She tires easily. Usually she accepts this condition as a natural thing, but it is unnatural. Marriage should add to woman's happiness, rather than subtract from it. If women understood how intimately the general health is related to the local health of the womanly organs, they would appreciate the fact that there is no need to suffer from weakness and backache. The use of Doctor Pierce's Favorite Prescription makes weak women strong, sick women well. It regulates the periods, heals inflammation and ulceration, cures female weakness, and puts the body in a condition of sound health.

Mrs. H. A. Alsbrook, of Austin, Lonoke Co., Ark., writes: "After five months of great suffering with female weakness I write for the benefit of other sufferers from the same affliction. I doctored with our family physician without any good results, so my husband urged me to try Dr. Pierce's medicines—which I did, with wonderful results. I am completely cured. I took four bottles of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, four of his 'Golden Medical Discovery' and two vials of his 'Pleasant Pellets.'"

Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets cure constipation and its consequences.

A Heart's Tribute to Bro. Everest.

BRO. GARRISON:—Please allow me, through the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, to pay my heart's tribute to the memory of dear Brother H. W. Everest. When I got the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST this week I was delighted to see so good a picture of him on the first page; I immediately turned to page 653. Oh! how my heart sank within me when I saw "H. W. Everest's Death." How it did hurt me! For forty years I had known him as an accomplished, scholarly, Christian gentleman. He was a superior educator, an able preacher and a strong, vigorous writer.

I have read most of his writings and endorsed them. He was a sound man, a wise and prudent man and a lovable man and I loved him. Though dead he will continue to speak through his writings, through the many men and women whom he has ably taught in the classroom and through the example of a pure Christian life.

Though more than five years my junior, he is gone from earth, and here I shall see his face no more. Farewell, my dear brother! By the help of the blessed Savior I hope to meet you where pain and sickness and death never come.

Bible College Report.

We have a blank report bearing the above title upon which every man in the College of the Bible of Drake University, if he is preaching, is requested to state what he has done. There are seventeen questions asked. These blanks are filled out every two months.

All our mission boards will be interested in two numbers of our report: "14. Give date of next general missionary day. 15. Did you observe the last one?" To this last quesiton about half of our men have all year answered: "Yes." One fourth answer: "No." And the other fourth are blank. We hope to make a better record next year. We believe that every worker is defective who has the habit of omitting the regular calls for missions. We teach our young men that there is always a way to surmount the difficulties in the way.

The C. W. B. M. workers will be glad to know that under "9. Organizations effected," a number of auxiliaries have been reported.

No. 16 reads as follows: "In the last twelve months have you taken a collection for the IOWA STATE WORK?" About half neglect this also. We hope to attain such a degree of development that no young man can rest under such neglect. We want all to feel that an essential part of Christianity is to at least present the plea for each interest, whether he gets a cent in the collection or not.

Our editors have not been forgotten in our blank. As a Bible College we get from them many a favor. Without their help we could not do half the work before us. Hence we are trying to educate the young men that no better Christian work can be done than to put some Christian paper into each home. No. 2 reads: "Subscriptions taken for church papers?" We are glad to report 243. We shall suggest to our young men that next year they make this 1,000!

Two thousand three hundred and twenty sermons and addresses have been delivered since September, 1899; 484 have been baptized and 387 received by letter and commendation, making a total of 871; 593 classes have been taught in the Sunday-school and 698 committee, official and other meetings, have been attended; 3,111 pastoral calls were made. Some make none, we are sorry to say. At least they report none. Of course this will be remedied; 81,862 miles have been traveled, mostly on the railroads; $11,362.65, not including salaries, have been collected for missions, buildings and charities. Some of the charities are very touching and as practical as pious. This spirit of Christ is the real hope of the future.

It has so far been impossible to secure reports from all of our men. In November, 29; in January, 27, and in May, 37 reported. The work done in the field by our department is, therefore, more than that reported above. And it covers only from September 15th to May 15th.

Of the men and women who have taken more or less work in the Bible College this year there are enrolled 121, but one less than last year.

Of the young men who have participated in the above work we have record in whole or in part of the following: O. L. Adams; W. A. Brandenberg, at Elkhart and North River; Clark Bower, at Highland Park; Frank E. Boren, at Manning; J. W. Babcock, at Swan, where a great meeting was held; Roy Caldwell at Woodward, and another large meeting; J. S. Coffin, at Sugar Grove and Bagley, and a third large meeting; W. O. S. Cliffe, R. A. Copple, at Chesterfield; W. J. Dodge, at Ft. Dodge; F. D. Fillmore, at Chesterfield; E. M. Flinn, at Cunningham; Henry Ford, at Norwalk (this is the man who held a successful debate with a Mormon during the spring vacation week); Noah Garwick, at Van Wert and Clearfield; F. L. Graham, B. F. Hall, at Draper; Chas C. Hougham, at Indianapolis and Deep River; T. S. Handsaker, at Collins; M. C. Huchinson, O. E. Hamilton, at Leighton and Oro Dell; J. Ira Jones, at Ontario and Pleasant Grove; J. R. Johnson, at Kent; Victor F. Johnson, at Blue Grove; L. P. Kopp, at Humeston; George E. Lyon, at Apple Grove and Yale; David Lyon, at Promise City; W. J. Lockhart, at Carlisle; E. E. Lowe, at Batavia and Ft. Madison; George W. Maxwell, Fred Macy, at Fremont; H. T. Morrison, at Mitchellville and Waukee; Roy Polly, Fred B. Pearsall, E. M. Pardee, at Leslie and Ellston; J. R. Perkins at Hedrick; C. E. Pile, at Tingley; G. E. Roberts, at Granger; W. E. Reevis at Commerce and Thornburg; W. G. Stevenson, C. G. Stout, M. A. Thompson, at Thornburg and Tilton; T. T. Thompson at Nineth and Shaw; D. B. Titus, at Cumberland; A. C. Vail, H. E. Van Horn, at Blockton; F. L. Van Vorhis, F. F. Walters at Anita; Frank West, Eli Walker, Mark Williams, at Kellarton and Tiffin; B. E. Youtze, at Rose Hill and Colo; W. H. Zeanor at Galesburg.

ALFRED M. HAZARD.

DEAR BRO. GARRISON:—"A prince and a great man has fallen this day in Israel!" No doubt these words will come to thousands as they read of the death of H. W. Everest. His place will be difficult to fill. From my standpoint he was one of the finest thinkers in the Church of Christ, and his character was as spotless as that of a child. He was always kind to me when I went to school to him, years ago, but during the past few years he has been almost a father to me. The brotherhood has sustained a great loss, but he will still live in the hearts of thousands who have enjoyed his teaching, preaching and writing. Your brother in Christ. G. K. BERRY.

English Topics.

From all parts of Britain the tribes have come up to gather together to celebrate their religious anniversaries at Exeter Hall, St. James' Hall, the City Temple and a host of temples and chapels. The May meetings are as multitudinously attended in London as ever. England has much to sadden her heart. The Indian famine intensifies the gloom occasioned by the shadow of war. But there is no diminution in the religious enthusiasm elicited by the immense assemblies which are convened day after day at this time of the year. In every one of these mighty meetings spiritual power is generated which is not soon lost. Indeed, it is not lost at all, but is distributed in many directions like the force transmitted by the electricians from Niagara.

WHAT BRITAIN IS DOING.

A most striking book has appeared from the pen of Mr. Basil Worsfield entitled "The Redemption of Egypt." Those who hate England will, of course, only detest her the more because she is shown to have done any good anywhere in the world. But any man who is anxious for a dispassionate study of the power and influence of this nation may indulge with profit in a perusal of what Mr. Worsfield tells. He shows in an excellent summary what Egypt was before the occupation and what is the difference now. The employment of the Bedouin camel drivers in the cotton industry is mentioned as an instance of the influence of European enterprise upon native life. The Bedouin camel driver used simply to mean a dangerous desert pirate, and there would have been no change in this marauder but for the transformation England has brought about. I think that American tourists, who will in the near future flock to the land of the pyramid and the sphynx in increasing numbers, will feel specially interested in the measures which the native Egyptians are themselves now taking for the preservation of their priceless ancient monuments. Patriotic Cairones are doing great service in preserving the native portions of the wonderful city of Cairo from the foreign jerry builder. Mr. Worsfield's account of "Mediæval Cairo," which is the present native Cairo, is the best ever written. The chapters on mosques, as illustrating the development of Arabian art, on the pyramids, on the trip to Luxor, on the old and new irrigation, on the improved condition of the once despised and hopeless fellaheen are so excellent that my American friends should seek to secure this book. It is adorned with a large number of very beautiful illustrations, many of which are colored.

THE WONDERFUL NEW EGYPT.

I do want Americans to understand that England is doing an immense amount of lasting good in many parts of the world. The disputes as to the merits of the South African war are interminable, and I have already expressed my own convictions on that topic quite amply enough. But England will one day be allowed the credit she deserves of having done much, in conjunction with America, to propagate the principles of an elevating and humanizing civilization. I appeal to this summary of what has been done in Egypt because it illustrates the general tendency of Anglo-Saxon influence, whether exercised by you Americans or us Britishers. Until the time when we really took control in Egypt that country was a sociological and political inferno. What is it now? It is the paradise of Africa. And the improvement has simply kept pace with the rapid spread of the English language in the educational institutions of the country. Taking schools of all grades, there are now twice as many native Egyptian pupils learning English as there were ten years ago. And this has come about through what Lord Cromer in his recent report calls "linguistic free trade." There is no constraint. The natives are allowed to study what foreign languages they like. They voluntarily take up English. In primary schools the proportiou of students of English has risen from 24 to 72 per cent., and instruction in French has declined in a corresponding degree. This is the result of placing French and English upon an equal level. But it is the ambition of the English Government, not to turn Egyptians into Englishmen, but to fit them for self-government. How far has this purpose been attained? That is an important question for all the world. Mr. Worsfield believes that in at least three departments the European officials may now be replaced by native agents. These are the railway board and the two boards appointed under the law of 1880, to superintend certain state properties. These particular properties were pledged for the national debt. All these boards, including that of the famous Caisse, or Treasury, are unnecessarily expensive, because of their international constitution. It is for the benefit of all humanity that there should be a resurrected Egypt, and England has had the honor of resuscitating the dead nationality. But there is still a more important work going on in that land. It is the work of the missionaries, and in this America has with England a share. Quietly and unostentatiously the missionaries have for years been training large numbers of schoolchildren, both in spiritual principles and in the arts of life. The work done by Miss Whateley, daughter of the famous Archbishop of Dublin, for the girls of Cairo, can never be sufficiently appreciated. Christianity has taken no deep root as yet in modern Egypt; but it is at least implanted in the Delta of the Nile, and it will grow steadily as Islam withers away. The old Coptic Christian Church of Egypt is but a rude remnant. It has lost the simplicity of Christ. Our board might fix its eyes on Egypt as a field for coming operations. The way is paved. Egypt is free and open and is ripe for a pure Christian mission. The Church of England is going to work at Khartoum and in the Soudan on a large scale. Why should not we start a work in that same region? It is when a country is newly opened up that the best chance is afforded, and such a golden opportunity should not slip.

ENGLISH OPINION ON AMERICA.

We in England are not a little amused at the various reports which reach us of the vacillations and variations of sentiment in America concerning Britain. It seems to me American opinion is very much like English. It varies at different seasons and is subject to currents and waves. These oscillations and undulations are inevitable in the case of every great people. Each nation has much to learn of all other nations. Columbia has a magnificent destiny to work out. So has Britannia. Each has some terrible tasks to accomplish. I notice everywhere in England an increasing admiration for the Stars and Stripes. Some Americans assure us that we poor Britishers have not a single friend worth speaking of in all America. If this were true it would indeed be melancholy. But even then the equanimity of the English soul would not be particularly disturbed. England has been friendless before today and never did such great things as when isolated. God made us to be insulated and isolated. As the Italians say: "Britannia fara da se." But surely, he must be blinded with ignorant prejudice who does not see that in the future England and America must be allied. Never mind about overt alliances. They are always fatal. No great nation should entangle itself in a definite compact with any other. I for one would cry out against any actual Anglo-American confederation. But look at the strange and wonderful league which has come about spontaneously amongst the scattered colonies of the British Empire. Nobody asked the Canadians, Australians, New Zealanders and Tasmanians to fight with our British soldiers. They flocked to the standard spontaneously. So will all Anglo-Saxons in some great coming crisis be allied through the overwhelming influence of common sympathies. But underneath all other motives will be the basal and mastering impulse of a common Christianity. The great Protestant communities of the world are its only genuine democracies. These will gravitate together as if impelled by some unseen and irresistible force. Why do Englishmen take it so coolly when told that large numbers of Americans do not at all love England? Because they know very well that the result will be the same. These two nations have so many common interests that they may sometimes bicker and dispute, but they will join hearts and hands in any great crisis that may arise in the world.

PERSONALIA.

I told you in my last that G. F. Assiter was in England. This well-known Missouri minister is this week conducting a protracted mission for us at Hornsey Tabernacle. He is a fine evangelist, and he can sing as beautifully as Sankey. Prof. Herbert Willett is this week lecturing daily at West London Tabernacle with E. M. Todd and his people. Thus we are at this moment happily basking in light from across the water. We love to be regaled by American brethren in transitu. We wish many of them could stay in England longer than they usually do. It is a good plan for strong and able American preachers, if they can manage it, to tarry awhile here in order to give some precious fragments of their minds to our congregations. My own congregation is always proud to give to such friends a warm welcome.

Paris and the Exposition—I.

SUPERFICIAL ASPECTS OF PARIS.

The Paris Exposition has not yet arrived. Officially and technically it was inaugurated on April 15, but even now, near the end of May, one can only say that there will be an Exposition here sometime in the course of the summer. During the past week not less than ten national pavilions have been formally opened and the Rue des Nations will soon be reasonably complete, but the exposition as a whole cannot be put into perfect order before the first of July.

The United States building received its formal inauguration on Saturday, May 12. It was characteristic of the spirit which has animated our commissioner throughout that it was not a select reception to a limited circle of invited guests, but an opening to the public. The opening was not a brilliant social function; it was just an opening. Commissioner General Peck made a short speech in English, to which the French Commissioner-General made an appropriate reply in French, and the doors were thrown open to the public. Sousa's Band played outside to temper the impatience of those who could not gain immediate admission, and all afternoon the crowd flowed through the building.

It is safe to say that most non-American and many American visitors were disappointed in our national building. It is not beautiful. Externally it is, as one of the printed descriptions has it, "of no particular style of architecture," and internally it is a plain, high dome, surrounded by galleries. It contains no exhibits, no advertisement of the resources and products of the country, no historic relics, no sumptuous furnishings. It makes no attempt to be either quaint, imposing, interesting or characteristic. And therein lies its difference from the other national pavilions, some of which, like that of Germany, contain magnificent reception rooms which none but invited guests will ever see, while the others contain exhibits of more or less interest, advertising the industries and resources of the respective countries.

But in spite of all this, in spite of all the functions which our building does not fulfill and does not attempt to fulfill, it is, to my notion, a great success. It will not amuse the idly curious, but it will be of great service to those Americans who visit Paris during the Exposition, for it practically an open clubhouse, free to all comers. There is a post-office and a telephone. There is a cafe and restaurant. There are reading rooms, writing rooms, smoking rooms and lounging rooms. There are plenty of easy chairs which fit the American spine better than any French fauteuil ever can. There is an information bureau where the non-French-speaking Americans can acquire information about every conceivable subject, from the churches to the races, and all delivered to him in the speech wherein he was born. The American exhibits are all shown in their proper departments; there was no need to put them also in the national pavilion.

Yes, the American building is a success, and few visiting Americans, after they have experienced its advantages, will fail to rise up and call Commissioner Peck blessed. People of other nations may not admire the architecture or the decorations, but when they see the point they will envy us the comforts of life which our representatives have provided.

But, though the Exposition has not yet arrived, Paris is always here; and the permanent and perpetual Paris is worth a thousand international fetes, even though they be as vast and as rich as the Exposition Universelle will be when it is complete. The real Exposition is Paris. Is it not international? I sit at dinner in a little French family, among newly found French friends, and talk in English to my neighbor on the right and in German to my neighbor on the left, while the general conversation rushes on in French like the rattle of musketry in a sham battle. Is it not international? I go to a French Catholic cathedral Sunday morning, to a Greek Orthodox chapel in the afternoon and to an American Episcopal church in the evening. Is this city itself not an "exposition universelle?"

The beauty of Paris lies in its boulevards, and the beauty and interest of the boulevards lie in the trees and cafes. Two concentric circles of boulevards mark the site of the old fortifications. A third series, the Grand Boulevards, makes a semicircle through the central part of the city, while others radiate at irregular angles to the remotest precincts. The boulevards are so wide that there is scarcely any possibility of their being crowded except on the most exceptional occasions, and the ordinary traffic has ample room to circulate. It is owing to the presence of these magnificent thoroughfares that Paris, even in its busiest times and places, presents no such congestion of traffic as one encounters daily and hourly in London.

But the boulevards are not only thoroughfares; they fulfill also the function of parks. Every boulevard is bordered by rows of trees, with often a walk and a double row of trees down the center. In May all Paris is as fresh and green as an upland meadow, and the flowering chestnut trees are as sweet and restful to the eye as the trees that you used to know down by the creek on the old farm. The sidewalks are thirty feet wide and there is room enough for all the world to walk without crowding. There would be more than enough room if the cafes did not regularly occupy half of the sidewalk adjoining the premises.

The cafe is to the Parisian what the agora was to the Greek and the forum to the Roman. It is the supreme expression of the social impulse embodying itself, not in conventional gatherings, but in a most spontaneous and elastic form. The cafe is not a restaurant. It is primarily a place where coffee may be obtained, but incidentally a large variety of other beverages are also dispensed. But the atmosphere of the place suggests always that the beverage, whatever it is, is a matter of very minor importance and that what one really wants is to talk to his friends, to read the evening paper or to watch the world go by. The morning is a dull time at the cafes. After luncheon there is a little patronage, followed by another lull. At five o'clock the crowd flows in to take an appetizer before dinner. From seven until eight is perhaps the liveliest time of the day, and again for an hour or more after midnight the tables are well filled.

Paris never sleeps. The great markets, the Halles Centrales, begin the day's work before the cabarets and cafes of Montmartre have finished the night's play. The old artist quarter in the north of Paris still maintains its ancient reputation for Bohemian entertainments at uncanny hours. At eleven o'clock it is quiet; the evening has not fairly begun. By midnight the Bohemian blood has begun to circulate freely in the veins of Montmartre. At one o'clock one can find many little cabarets where struggling artists, musicians and poets are entertaining themselves, each other and any one else who happens to be present, by music and recitation. The performance is half in the spirit of revelry and half in artistic earnestness. As the cafe is the club of the sober and conventional Parisian, so the cabaret is the struggling and Bohemian artist's club, where each "for the joy of the working" does his turn to entertain the other members of the party and enhance his own reputation in his chosen circle. By two o'clock many of the lights are out and the pleasure seekers are concentrated in a few large cafes where they drink, far less than one would expect, and talk far more than one would believe possible until he has heard them. As to quiet and order, they are generally several points ahead of the average Sunday-school.

It is a couple of miles from Montmartre to the Halles Centrales, the great market of Paris, where the first business of the day is done. Here and there along the way may be found cafes, the patronage of which is better than it was during the day. At three o'clock the Grands Boulevards are by no means deserted, but the gray of early dawn soon begins to mingle with the lights of those establishments which are still open. Along the streets which lead to the Halles one sees, in increasing numbers, great lumbering carts piled high with country produce on the way to the market. Sleepy peasants, who have perhaps been up since midnight and have already driven a dozen or fifteen miles, drowse upon their loads, and sleepy coachmen drowse upon their boxes awaiting the belated revelers. Side by side are two cafes: one is nearing its hour of closing, but the wine has not yet ceased to flow; the other has just taken down its shutters and is beginning to serve morning coffee to the marketmen. For one it is very late Sunday night; for the other, very early Monday morning.

From three o'clock until six the great market is busy. The outcasts, who sleep in the nooks and corners of the vast structure, are routed out early, and by daylight the wretched sleepers linger only here and there in corners to which the business of the day has not yet penetrated. Day and night have met each other face to face. The nightly revelers and the daily toilers have touched each other in the street. And the evening and the morning are the night in Paris.

Back through the boulevards one wanders. They are hushed and quiet now for an hour or two. In the full light of early morning they lie as quiet and calm as a country lane. How innocent this city is with all its vice. It has no consciousness of impropriety. Its unabashed frankness is not the brazen recklessness of the hardened sinner. It is unashamed of its revelry, because it is naively and childishly unconscious that there is anything in the world of which one ought to be ashamed. This is a superficial aspect of Paris—that it is a non-moral rather than an immoral place. But I believe that this superficial aspect represents a deep-lying characteristic of this people.

Hot Morning Breakfast.

COMFORT DEPENDS ON FOOD.

It is not so easy to arrange a tempting breakfast for a hot morning, but every one appreciates such a breakfast amd enjoys the relief from the heated blood, caused by a meat and coffee breakfast.

In fact, by skillful selection of food even the hottest day can be made quite comfortable.

Start with food of some kind, then a dish of Grape-Nuts food with cold cream, one or two soft boiled eggs, a slice of bread and butter and a cup of cocoa or Postum Food Coffee. On that sort of meal one will be fully nourished until the midday.

Grape-Nuts food is concentrated and powerful, imparting to the user a sense of reserve force and strength. The strong man thinks the weather moderate and comfortable when the nervous, weak man thinks it unbearably hot. Grape-Nuts food is perfectly cooked at the factory and ready for instant use, cool and delicious, requiring no hot stove and cross cook on a hot morning. "Health is a matter of wise selection of food and a contented mind."

B. B. Tyler's Letter.

An interesting incident in connection with our sojourn in Springfield was a visit to Mount Holyoke College. Mount Holyoke Seminary was founded by Mary Lyon in 1836. This seminary became Mount Holyoke College in 1893. Mary Lyon was born in 1797 and died in 1849. One of her favorite sayings, quoted on the stone which marks her grave, indicates her ernestness. It was this: "There is nothing in the universe that I fear but that I shall not know all my duty or shall fail to do it." When she began her work there were sixty colleges in this country for young men, not one for young women. The first public school in Boston was opened in 1635, but not a girl was admitted to a public school in Massachusetts until 1790—55 years later. The term "children" in the laws was interpreted to mean boys. In 1788 Northampton voted that "none of the public money should be expended in the education of girls." In Rhode Island it was in 1822 when girls first were admitted to public schools. It is difficult if not impossible for us to understand the difficulties under which Mary Lyon worked. She wrought: others enjoy the fruit of her labors. The attendance last year at Mount Holyoke College reached an aggregate of 542. The attendance is quite as large this year. More than 8,000 young women have gone out from this institution to bless the world. It is the favorite resort of young women from the ranks of the respectable middle class. The study of the Bible is a part of the curriculum. There are six residence halls on the beautiful grounds. The "Rockefeller Hall" was erected by Mr. John D. Rockefeller; the "Pearsons Hall" was given by Dr. D. K. Pearsons, of Chicago. There is a botanical garden which covers about one acre of ground. The grounds, in this springtime, are a veritable Eden. It is well to call attention to such a work as this, inaugurated by Mary Lyon at South Hadley, Mass. What she did other young women can do. She was able to do what she did because hers was in the true sense a consecrated life.

The "effete" East is growing! Almost four years have gone by since I was in Boston. At that time work was in progress on "the Subway," or underground railroad. The cars are now driven by electricity here and there under Boston. The great Union Station, in the south part of the city, has been erected in the meantime. This is a larger depot than the Union Station in St. Louis. The South Union Station, in Boston, is 650 feet wide and 710 feet long. The St. Louis Union Station is 600 feet wide and 630 feet long. Each station has 30 tracks. Improvements similar to these are to be seen everywhere. The Tremont Building, on the site of the old Tremont House, is a magnificent new office building.

The Disciples of Christ have made progress in Boston, as in the country generally, during these four years. There is a new house in the Roxbury District, in a better location than was the building on Shawmut Avenue, and in the person of J. H. Mohorter the church has, apparently, just the man for the place. Of the work in Boston more will be said in a subsequent letter.

Last week the fact that a house of worship would be opened in Everett was mentioned.

Everett is in fact, though not in legal form, a part of Boston. The fare to Boston is five cents. Everett has a population of 20,000 or more. It is a growing town. There is not a liquor saloon in the place. The people are of the class that can be reached and influenced by the gospel of Christ. The chapel which was opened last Lord's day is in a part of the city in which such a building is needed. It is not in the way of any other church. Its seating-capacity is about 200. A more artistic little place of worship you probably never saw. G. Wilton Servis was the architect. He gave his services freely and gladly to this work. A gentleman said to me last Monday: "Bro. Servis was the happiest man in Massachusetts yesterday." He certainly was a very happy man; nor was he alone in his experience of joy. The Disciples of Everett were filled with gladness. The congregation was organized in November, 1893. The ground on which the new building stands cost $3,700. It is on the corner of Hancock and Dean Streets. The corporate name of the body is "The Hancock Street Church of Christ." The lot belongs to the Board of Church Extension. A portion of the ground was sold to the city for $500. The cost of the lot is, therefore, to the Board, $3,200. The purchase was made after a personal investigation by G. W. Muckley. Much of the work on the beautiful little chapel was done by the members of the church. When they had not dollars to give they contributed days of service. Do you not know that this place is, as a result, very dear to them? It is in truth a sacred spot. The building cost more than was planned for in the beginning on account of an increase in the price of some of the building material. The entire cost was $3,514. S. M. Hunt, of Springfield, Mass., of whom some account was given in my letter last week, made an appeal for means with which to finish paying for the chapel. The greater part of the money needed was pledged. Bro. Hunt is still soliciting. Before he gets through the chapel in Everett will be paid for. Can you not send in something to aid in this? It will be a good investment. This is the Lord's work. Will you not be a worker with him in carrying it forward? This is a good field. Great self-denial has been practiced by the Disciples in Everett to secure their place of worship.

This was the home, for some time, of R. H. Bolton. He preached to the people in a cottage. He went from house to house with the message of love. While he lived in Everett he edited the New England Messenger. He is kindly remembered. All that I have heard about Bro. Bolton is good. Not an unkind word has been spoken in my presence concerning him. He is now at work in Le Roy, Pa.

The present minister is Thomas G. Picton. He is a young man. He has already done a good work. Wales is the place of his birth. Bethany College is his Alma Mater. The Lord has endowed him with musical talent, executive ability and powers of endurance. He is a worker. The people work with him. He looks for open doors. Through them he passes with the message of divine love in song, sermon and consecration. "Not yours, but you," seems to be his motto. The hand of the Lord has been on Thomas G. Picton for good since he came to Everett, less than a year ago. It thrills my heart with pleasure to place these words on paper.

Three addresses were delivered in the chapel last Lord's day—the day of dedication. The morning discourse was a statement concerning "The Origin, Aim and Progress of the Disciples of Christ."

J. H. Mohorter, of Boston, gave a thoughtful address in the afternoon on "The Blessedness of Worship in the House of God." It was a discourse of felicitation and fraternal greeting from the brethren of the St. James Street Church.

R. A. Nichols, of Worcester, delivered an evangelistic sermon in the evening on "The Way of Life." The discourse was thoroughly biblical. "The Way of Life" was made plain. It was such preaching as is needed.

The thirty-fifth annual convention of the New England Christian Missionary Society will be held in the St. James Street Church of Christ in Boston, June 7-10.

Miss Olive Griffith, state organizer, organized an auxiliary May 13 at Oxbow, with nine members; and one at Deweese, May 20, with nine members.

District No. 5 held its annual convention at Belvidere, Neb., May 22-24. It was well attended. The C. W. B. M. session was especially helpful. Two things the district is surely accomplishing, viz., gaining new members and more nearly meeting state apportionments. Liberal offerings from various auxiliaries have been made for India sufferers.

One supreme effort will be put forth by several auxiliaries to help reach 100,000 women and $130.000 for 1900.

Back to Christ.

Such is the title of a recent book from the pen of Walter Spence, which is devoted to "Some Modern forms of Religious Thought." The work contains many good things, and some things not so good. Some of the things not so good I wish to mention in this brief notice.

The author has a unique way of getting rid of what he regards as rubbish and gaining solid ground on which the Christian can stand and be certain concerning the essentials in the Christian faith and teaching. He does not believe, as the Romanists do, in an infallible church with the successor of Peter at its head. He is sure there can be no infallible church. Then he does not believe in an infallible Bible, or the inerrancy of the Scriptures. He is sure that there can be no infallibility from such a source. So he affirms that many parts of the Old Testament are incredible, and cannot be a revelation from heaven; that some things in the old Jewish book are simply horrible!

But he does not believe that "the Bible is the record of a progressive revelation of God. It was necessarily progressive, because made in human consciousness." But he does not believe "that God dictated the genealogical tables of the Hebrews, or the records of the journeys of the Israelites through the wilderness, or Paul's request to Timothy to bring his cloak," which he says "is absurd." He does not believe "that he [God] dictated Deut. 21: 10-14, or the Imprecatory Psalms, or the book of Esther, or the conflicting accounts of the death of Judas," because he says it "is impossible." Further on he says: "It can no longer be held that the Bible is infallible where it touches the domain of science." And, "Moses was certainly mistaken in teaching 'that the trees and plants were created before there was any sunlight, and that all the stars were created after the earth was covered with vegetation, and that all the fishes and birds were created previously to all quadrupeds and reptiles,'" etc.

After this wonderful delivery he whirls around and gives the New Testament a whack with his scientific sword, and finds a number of serious errors in it, which to his vision become "irreconcilable inconsistencies." I have no need to mention them here, even if I had the space.

After all this slashing and vivisection one would think Mr. Spence would be prepared to discard Jesus Christ himself, and all his teaching. He does nothing of this kind. He has no thought of such an absurdity at this point; for, strange to say, he finds Jesus to be the infallible One, the Christ; and as we have the Christ we need not trouble about any of these other matters. It matters not whether Jonah was swallowed by the whale, or Jonah swallowed the whale! The matter of the inerrancy of the Scriptures has now become a very small matter! "Back to Christ" means the rejection of many parts of the Bible, especially such books and parts of books as some of the higher critics have pronounced uncanonical. To this author it means that the full acceptance of Christ and his exaltation as the Christ of God is the solution of the vexed problem of God's revelation to man. In other words he would teach this thought: Give me Christ as the Son of God and the Savior of the world and his teaching, and I care very little about other revelation.

Then he switches off onto other matters, such as the judgment, the resurrection and the second coming of Christ. He believes that the judgment is going on all the time and will end immediately after death, which brings each one before the great Judge; and that there will be no general judgment. He advocates the idea that there can be no resurrection of bodies in harmony with the old resurrection doctrine, and hence, no general resurrection. The second coming of Christ, as the old theology teaches, he thinks cannot be, for his coming is in operation all the time.

He closes the work with a chapter on what he terms, The Larger Hope. In this he thinks that all sinful men will have a chance for repentance and reformation beyond the grave, but does not advocate the idea that all will avail themselves of this opportunity. "There may be some that God cannot bring back, some that will be found utterly incorrigible, having extinguished all the moral attributes of the soul," is the way he puts it.

Ministerial Association.

The first sad news that came to all on their arrival at Bolivar, Mo., was the intelligence of the dangerous illness of Sister F. M. Hooton, and because of this Bro. Hooton was deprived of the privilege of the institute. T. A. Abbott came to our aid just then and assisted as chairman, together with Clinton Lockhart, of Canton. The first address by Clinton Lockhart, of Christian University, to the South Missouri preachers was received with gratitude by all present, and in the discussion of the paper, which took place Wednesday morning, not a voice could be found differing from the sentiment of the paper. Bro. Abbott then told us in very tender tones of the death of Bro. R. L. Lotz, of West Plains, who was to have read a paper at this hour, according to the program. W. W. Blalock, of Lamar, was absent and his paper was read by Bro. Abbott. The subject was "The Eldership." The paper was reviewed by Bros. Beery, of Lebanon; McQuerry, of Neosho; Nicoson, W. F. Turner, Joseph Babb, Joseph Gailor. Bro. S. E. Hendrickson conducted the devotion, in the afternoon, after which came the address by F. J. Yokley, of Billings, on the money question. Then at 8 o'clock Wednesday was a great feast in the form of an address by C. E. Hill, of Pleasant Hill, on Y. P. S. C. E. work. Thursday morning many hearty endorsements were given to the paper of Bro. Hill. Next came the splendid paper by W. F. Turner, of Joplin, on "The Ideal Preacher." This was followed by an address by Mrs. L. G. Bantz, of St. Louis, on the C. W. B. M. and its work. Many hearty endorsements were sounded out by the preachers present and not a voice could differ from the papers.

The committee on nominations, consisting of Joseph Babb, Buffalo; A. A. Berry, of Lebanon; Joseph Gailor, of Galena, then reported as suggested officers for the institute: For president, W. F. Turner, of Joplin; for vice-president, F. J. Yokley, of Billings; for secretary, E. B. Woods, of Buffalo, and these officers were elected by the convention. In the absence of Bro. Cochran, of Aurora, the time which he was to have occupied was used in an open parliament on the preacher's credentials. The committee on time and place submitted as the place for the next meeting, Aurora; and as time the same as of the Springfield district convention, beginning Nov. 20, thus merging into one the Ministerial Christian Institute and the Springfield District Missionary Convention of Southwest Missouri; the plan was adopted. The last but not least on the program came another address by Clinton Lockhart, on conscience. During the whole meeting there was a burden on every heart because of the shadow over Bro. Hooton's home. Special prayers were offered publicly as well as those that ascend constantly from various hearts that Sister Hooton might recover, if in harmony with the will of the Lord.

THE VALUE OF CHARCOAL.

Few People Know How Useful it is in Preserving Health and Beauty.

Nearly everybody knows that charcoal is the safest and most efficient disinfectant and purifier in nature, but few realize its value when taken into the human system for the same cleansing purpose.

Charcoal is a remedy that the more you take of it the better, it is not a drug at all, but simply absorbs the gases and impurities always present in the stomach and intestines and carries them out of the system.

Charcoal sweetens the breath after smoking, drinking or after eating onions and other odorous vegetables.

Charcoal effectually clears and improves the complexion, it whitens the teeth and further acts as a natural and eminently safe cathartic.

It absorbs the injurious gases which collect in the stomach and bowels; it disinfects the mouth and throat from the poison of catarrh.

All druggists sell charcoal in one form or another, but probably the best charcoal and the most for the money is in Stuart's Absorbent Lozenges; they are composed of the finest powdered Willow charcoal, and other harmless antiseptics in tablet form or rather in the form of large, pleasant tasting lozenges, the charcoal being mixed with honey.

The daily use of these lozenges will soon tell in a much improved condition of the general health, better complexion, sweeter breath and purer blood, and the beauty of it is, that no possible harm can result from their continued use, but on the contrary great benefit.

A Buffalo physician, in speaking of the benefits of charcoal, says: "I advise Stuart's Absorbent Lozenges to all patients suffering from gas in the stomach and bowels, and to clear the complexion and purify the breath, mouth and throat; I also believe the liver is greatly benefited by the daily use of them; they cost but twenty-five cents a box at drug stores, and although in some sense a patent preparation. yet I believe I get more and better charcoal in Stuart's Absorbent Lozenges than in any of the ordinary charcoal tablets.

The Second Annual Conference of the Disciples of Christ of the Middle Atlantic States, at Hagerstown, Md., May 16-18, was regarded by all in attendance as altogether successful. One hundred and twenty-four delagates were present, of whom thirty-five were preachers, all the states from New York to Virginia being represented. The program was pronounced an excellent one and carried out almost to the letter, few failing to take the part assigned them. F. D. Power presided and E. B. Bagby acted as recording secretary. An executive committee was elected, of which Dr. E. E. Montgomery, of Philadelphia, is chairman, and S. T. Willis is secretary. A constitution was adopted and work outlined for the ensuing year, which embraces first, assistance for the Newark mission, and second, the placing of a general evangelist in the Eastern field. The Conference decided to ask the American Christian Missionary Society to take up the Newark (N. J.) work and foster it. We also decided to raise $1,500 for an evangelistic fund. This we shall do if possible. Let us hear from the churches in this field as to what they will subscribe toward the work so planned. As secretary and treasurer of the executive committee I am now ready to receive pledges or money in order to carry out the wishes of the Hagerstown Conference. We should not delay this important work a day longer than necessary. Preachers, I am waiting to hear from you!

The addresses and papers on the program were above the average and each one was well received, but the special attraction was the presence and address of President McGarvey, of the College of the Bible, Lexington, Ky. His two early morning addresses on "How to Study the Gospels" and "How to Study the Acts of the Apostles" were clear, strong and eloquent in their simplicity. His two more popular addresses on "The Churches and Ministerial Training" and "The Minister for our Times" were delivered to large evening audiences and were most gladly received. This prince of Bible teachers, though aging rapidly in the latter years, apparently has lost but little if any of his accustomed vigor. We all account ourselves honored with his presence and assistance at our Conference and wish hereby to make acknowledgment of our obligations to Bro. McGarvey; and as secretary I wish to thank all who in any way helped to make the Conference a success. Especially are we grateful to our good Bro. P. A. Cave and the excellent Hagerstown Church for the royal style in which they took care of us. Our home during the Conference was at the home of Daniel Daub, and a more delightful resting place could not be found. We entertain the pleasantest memories of Mr. and Mrs. Daub and of Master Berry We shall be glad when the time comes to go to Hagerstown again.

The following is the creedal statement adopted by a new union church at Leffert's Park, Brooklyn, recently:

God, our Father; Christ Jesus, the Savior of all who truly believe in him; the Holy Spirit, Author of regeneration and sanctification, Advocate: the Bible, God's Word, authentic record, our guide; unity: "Go, teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Ghost," and there shall be one fold and one Shepherd." "A cordial welcome to all God's people of every tribe and nation."

The pastor is a Presbyterian and the church is the outgrowth of a Presbyterian mission. This statement, if interpreted in the light of the New Testament, would not be very far wrong, would it?

The Rev. Dr. Harry P. Dewey, a relative of the famous admiral, is retiring from the pastorate of a Congregational Church at Concord, N. H., to become the successor of the renowned orator, Dr. R. S. Storrs, pastor emeritus of the Pilgrim Congregational Church, Brooklyn. The Rev. Dr. Emory W. Hunt, of the Ashland Ave. Baptist Church, of Toledo, O., has just accepted a call to the Clarendon St. Baptist Church, Boston, to succeed the late Rev. A. J. Gordon, of sainted memory.

Dr. Robert S. MacArthur recently celebrated his thirtiety anniversary as pastor of Calvary Baptist Church, and in his address plead with his people to endow the church that its work might go on forever without a mortgage upon the property. He implied that he had been compelled to give much time to lecturing in order to build up the church and keep free of debt. This ought not so to be. We supposed Dr. MacArthur would be free from that necessity if any minister in the city is. People will pay for concerts that entertain them; why will they not pay for the support of the gospel that will save them? Paderewski sailed from this port on Wednesday, May the 16th, with a draft for $171,500, the result of his tour in the United States which began last December—an average income of more than $1,000 a day. The pianist is paid better than the preacher. The First Presbyterian Church, Fifth Ave. and 12th St., Dr. Duffied, pastor, has raised an endowment fund of $75,000 to perpetuate its existence and work as a downtown church. The best endowment a church can possibly have is that which comes from above—from God—upon earnest, willing, consecrated men and women in Christ Jesus.

On Lord's day, May 27th, we had Bro. Frank T. Lea, one of our missionaries to Africa, with us at the 169th St. Church. He gave us an interesting address at the evening service, telling us something of their work for Christ on the Dark Continent. Incidentally he referred to the fact that he had bought a little colored girl, gave her freedom and took her into their home. After his address I proposed to the church that we furnish the money to buy another and select a name for the child so redeemed. Whereupon Bro. Robert P. Shepherd, of Hiram, O., who happened to be worshiping with us, asked to say a few words, and proposed to raise the money then and there for the redemption of a child, starting the subscription. In a few minutes about $40 was collected and will be sent through the Foreign Christian Missionary Society to Bro. Lea for the redemption of a child to be taken into our mission, educated and brought to the fullness of salvation in Christ. The one so redeemed shall be known as the child of this church. Personally, I wish we might secure a bright, promising boy and train him for the Christian ministry, to be a light unto salvation in the midst of the heathen darkness about him in Africa. This after all will be the final means of evangelizing the world—preparing and sending native preachers of the gospel among the peoples of the several nations.

Jeu Hawk's China Mission.

DEAR BRO. GARRISON:—Your favor of the 17th inst. came to hand in due time and was glad to hear from you. In your letter you asked me to write a statement of my purpose in returning to China and the work I propose doing there for publication in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST and also what my needs are and so on. And now in order to lay the whole matter before you and the readers of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, I will say that we have something like 80 or 90 Chinamen who are members of the Christian Churches throughout this country that will go back to China sooner or later. In our mission here alone we have 48 members, but of course they all are not here now. When they return to China they do not, as a rule, return in mass or go to the same district, so that they may be strong enough to make an effort to start a work there for the spread of the gospel. They always go home one by one, and here and there. Seeing that we have yet no work of any kind in Southern China, when our brethren reach home if they are faithful and can hold out in the face of all oppositions and prejudices they will unite with the different churches that are in operation there.

In view of this fact, we believe it is of great importance that some measure be taken to gather them in when they return home. As there is no board in our brotherhood that is ready to open any work there, I have decided to go to Hong Kong and establish a headquarters there, both to practice medicine to get our support and also to meet our Chinese brethren upon their arrival there, either from this country or from Australia, and to render them encouragement in time of opposition and persecution when they reach their respective homes. By so doing they may be made strong to withstand all temptations and persecutions at home. Besides, we may be able to reach thousands of them in our quiet way of practicing medicine. Hong Kong is a seaport city belonging to the British Government and is a New York to the Chinese. If we have means to carry out our plans we propose to do the following work: We will rent one story and use it for our office, dispensary and family if it is convenient. We will give free dispensary twice a week and in our free dispensary we will have preaching about one hour or more when we hold them and we will also advance the cause of Christ in our private practice. We will get as much Christian literature for free reading in our dispensary as we have means at our command. This one means can reach thousands of them through Christian reading. There are two reading rooms in Canton and they are a power for good, reaching the literary class as no other means can. We may be able to do more through the grace of God when we reach there and after having the above plans worked for awhile. But we are not able to do any of the above-mentioned plans, except to hang up our shingle and wait for results, unless some help could be rendered us to make a start. We need something like $400 or $500 worth of instruments and a microscope of the latest patent. We cannot get along without a full set of ophthalmic instruments. If there are any Christian physicians who have any old and useful instruments to donate we will be glad to receive them. For medicine we cannot say just how much we need, because it is used every day, especially at our free dispensary. I presume $300 worth may last for some time. The rent in Hong Kong is about the same as in the large cities of this country.

I hope I have given you a clear and sufficient answer for the purpose you asked I expect to go East to either New York, Philadelphia or St. Louis for a few months taking some postgraduate study before going to China. It is my present desire to return to China some time in October this year. I will turn my work here in the mission over to Bro. Louie Hugh to-morrow evening, and may God bless and help him in this great and difficult work. I hope the sisters throughout the country will continue to show their deep interest in this work. This is a great work, worthy of their support, and we pray the dear Lord's blessing to rest upon it abundantly. May God bless you in your efforts to do his blessed will, is the prayer of your fellow-worker in the Lord. JEU HAWK.

Daughters' College.

The board of trustees of Daughters College, in session at Fulton, Mo., May 30, 1900, desires to express to the brotherhood of the state their sentiments regarding the past work, present conditions and future prospects of the school.

During the ten years of its history many hundreds of young women from the homes of our own and other states have received such instruction as to make them more intelligent and useful members of society, and in many instances have been brought into the kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ, or developed into more efficient Christian workers. The existence of the school and the generous gifts with which it has been favored during these years have already been amply justified.

We take pleasure in testifying, in like manner, to the able and faithful manner in which its work is now going forward under the presidency of our brother, J. B. Jones. Notwithstanding the financial difficulties that have arisen, which at times seemed to threaten the very existence of the school, President Jones has succeeded in paying all its expenses during the time he has been at its head and in increasing the attendance to a marked degree. The spirit of the school was never better, the work done was never more thorough, and the friends never more determined that it shall continue

We are glad to state, further, that we believe the financial embarassments which have so long hampered this noble work will be ere long relieved and the school will enter upon a new and even more prosperous era in its history. To this end we take pleasure in commending to our brethren everywhere our beloved president, Bro. J. B. Jones, and to ask that they give him a candid and favorable hearing in behalf of this sacred interest which lies so near the hearts of our whole brotherhood. Your daughters will be safe under his care, and will receive such culture as will fit them for the best possible life, here and hereafter; and any gifts or money or other material expressions of your interest will be carefully and sacredly used for the purposes for which they are given.

Texas Letter.

We thought Gladstone was great when he was here in our midst; but now that he is gone, and we have had time to look at the deep, broad vacuum that tells of his absence, his greatnesss grows on us. Dr. Hillis felt this when he spoke these eloquent words: "Standing upon the summit of the Alpine Mountain the traveler looks into sunny Italy or the German forests, toward the vineyards of France or the far-off plains of Austria. And Mr. Gladstone stands forth like some sun-crowned mountain-peak, supremely great in every side of his character and career. He was a scholar, and with Homer lingered long before the gates of Troy, and with Pericles and Plato sauntered through the groves of Athens. He was an author, and the mere titles of his speeches and books fill twenty pages in the catalogue of libraries. He was an orator and his eloquence was such that oft it seemed to his rapt listeners as if Apollo had come again—the music of the morning breathing from his lips. He was a statesman, and the reforms he proposed and the laws he created are milestones measuring the progress of the English people. Above all he was a Christian gentleman, for religion goes with the name of Gladstone as poetry with the names of Burns or Browning, as war with Wellington or Washington."

And still the tide southward flows. This time it is J. T. Ogle, one of Missouri's strong men, who leaves Carrollton for Guthrie, Okla. This is a rich, new field and Guthrie is one of the best churches in the territory, hence the results cannot well be other than good.

James Norville Crutcher, our young pastor at Paris, has called to his assistance Miss Eva Bailey Wallingford, of Belton, Mo. They were married May 30. We congratulate the groom, and welcome the bride to the Sunny South, and wish them lives of great usefulness and joy.

Aaron Darnell, of Abilene, father of A. H. Darnell, our paster at Clarksville, died in this city, May 14th, after a long and painful sickness. Thus ends another long and useful life, whose influences will continue through time and eternity.

Henry A. Major, our pastor at Brownwood, was called home to God on May 10th. He was well known and loved in both Missouri and Texas, and we will miss him much. I knew him well and believe he was one of the best men I ever saw. He was modest, clean, industrious, and he loved God with all the heart. To the poor, sad wife and her three little children we extend our tenderest sympathy.

Shreveport, La., at last has a house of worship. Claude Jones and wife, so far as human agencies are concerned, deserve the credit. In spite of great difficulties they persevered and this is the result. R. R. Hamlin dedicated it, and held them a good meeting.

G. L. Bush, after nine years of successful work at Windsor, Mo., comes to Taylor, Texas, and we are glad to have him. "George" comes of a preaching family. He is the third in the line and not a scrub in the lot. It is said that the grandfather was good; the father is better, and the son is the best of all.

All aboard for Paris! This is the watchword in Texas just now. It is not gay Paris in France, but Paris, Texas. It is not the Exposition of the world, but the great Texas Missionary Convention. Besides our home forces we are to have some strong men from abroad—G. W. Muckley, whom Jason calls a "live wire;" C. C. Smith, the eloquent advocate of Africa in America; F. E. Meigs, fresh from the foreign field, and Chas. Reign Doville, the wonderful young evangelist. Send our name to J. N. Crutcher that a good home may be waiting for you. Remember the place and time—Paris, June 11-15. M. M. DAVIS

Kansas Letter.

Kansas never looked fairer than she does these May days. Even her cities show the dainty touch of spring. The city of Topeka is a veritable park. The wide, clean streets, with well-shaded, grassy borders, are very attractive. The lawns, rich in foliage, relieved by the white syringas and snowballs, and brightened by the varied hues of roses, over which stretches the blue of the skies and filters the gold of the sunlight are dreams of beauty. Down-town preparations for the coming street fair make the bustle and stir of the avenues vie with that of a much larger city.

Topeka is essentially a city of churches. However much the many spires mark differences of religious opinion, they yet represent the exalted place the Master occupies in the hearts and homes of the citizens of Topeka. But while even Mr. Sheldon's dream of Christian union certainly has never materialized here, yet Christians generally, and many who are not Christians, create the noblest possible sentiment on public questions.

The prohibitory law is enforced. The joints have been raided and closed and a crusade inaugurated against drugstores and clubs suspected of furnishing intoxicating beverages to those who frequent such places. A late ordinance provides for the closing of all places of business, except drugstores, on the Lord's day. A capital city should set the pace in good citizenship.

A city of conventions also is Topeka. There is not a week in the year but that an annual meeting of some kind convenes. Two of note were held last week. The Republican State Convention, at which all of the present state officers were renominated, was the first. Govenor Stanley's sympathy with the enforcement of the prohibitory law has made him a favorite throughout the state. The other convention was one of national interest, that of the National Convention of Charities and Corrections. The sessions were held in the State House, in the Senate Chamber and Representative Hall. Men and women well known throughout the nation as reformers and representing every part of this country and of Mexico read strong papers and gave brilliant addresses. The pulpits of the city were filled on the Lord's day by visiting ministers from other states, and the convention stirred a deep interest in the unfortunate classes of society in all who attended its sessions. An immediate result was the organization of a similar society of Kansas workers, whose object should be, not only to decrease the population of the defectives of Kansas by a thorough understanding of the questions involved, but to secure if possible the removal of all state institutions from the power of politics. For years Kansas reformers have protested against our institutions being made a political dumping ground for politicians, and they hail with joy this first step towards their emancipation from political appointments and removals. The visits of the delegates to our jails, almshouses, prisons, asylums, reformatories, institutional schools and homes gave the visitors opportunity for some rather unfair criticisms, for Kansas is not behind other states in the care of her unfortunates, but these will certainly be productive of reforms.

Our own work in Topeka progresses. Bro. Emerson, the pastor of the First Christian Church, in six months has endeared himself to his people. Aided by them he is gradually but surely lifting the debt that so long has hung like a cloud over the congregation. The strongest ladies aid society in the state is in this church. Since last fall over five hundred dollars have been raised by these indefatigable workers and paid to the church. As well they do other work. At present they are providing a course of six lectures. Travel talks on all lands, illustrated by a projectoscope, these are both entertaining and instructive.

Our colored brethren of the Second Christian Church are a small band that for years have held together and worked towards the time when they should have a church home. They deserve the aid of the white brethren of this city. The consecrated work of Charles M. Sheldon among the negroes of Topeka should stimulate every Christian worker to help in bringing these unconverted to Christ. We have not embraced our opportunities in soul-saving among them.

The North Topeka brethren are fortunate in having Bro. Powell as their pastor. After the many vicissitudes through which this church has passed it is pleasant to know brighter days have dawned. That the church is self-supporting is largely due to the sacrifice and ability of the present pastor.

Our state work suffered a great loss in Bro. Cook's removal from the state. No Kansas worker has been missed more than he, but in Bro. W. S. Lowe God has given us a strong man to carry on the work. Already his sincerity and earnest interest in the Kansas work have won the love of the brethren. Bro. Lowe is ably supplemented by Miss Pendleton, than whom we never had a more efficient secretary.

Bro. D. D. Boyle, former pastor of the First Church in Topeka, has removed to Nevada, Mo. He will be greatly missed and the good wishes of a host of Kansas friends go with him and his family to their new home.

Strikes The Source.

A Pile Cure That Goes to the Root of the Disease.

There are lots of lotions, oils and salves that will, through their soothing influence, relieve temporarily the pain incident to piles. But is that all the sufferer requires? Isn't it a horrible thought to realize that the ease is only temporary, and that the disease goes on under the surface without a moment's interruption?

Wouldn't it be wiser to select a remedy that seeks the source and regulates those deep-seated disorders which induce the disease? Pyramid Pile Cure not only relieves the pain at once, but effects a permanent cure of the worst form of piles. You don't have to go through a tedious course of dieting while using it either.

It strikes through those delicate membranes and tissues and sets the blood in healthful circulation, reducing at once the painful inflammation and congested tumors.

This remedy is not a haphazard combination of drugs, but it is a remedy invented by specialists who have treated piles and blood disorders successfully for years. Almost any first-class druggist has it on sale at 50 cts. per package. Don't treat this disease with every lotion and salve that comes along. Remember, the parts affected are among the most delicate in the human body. This remedy is absolutely safe and no one need fear to apply it freely on the most inflamed parts. The speed with which it allays the pain is an agreeable surprise to the sufferer.

Missouri Bible-school Notes.

The Santa Fe rally was a great day. The other schools united with us, also the South Fork Presbyterian. The sessions were crowded all day. Santa Fe has lost in membership by death and removal, but the workers recruit from the Bible-school and field at large. A. W. Pasley preaches for them, being on his second and probably the third year. Nearly all gave to our work.

The following roads give us one fare for the round trip to California, June 11-14: The Missouri Pacific, Rock Island, Santa Fe, Kansas City, Southern, Ft. Scott & Memphis and M. K. & T. We hope to announce others before the papers go to press. We want every friend to help us by having their papers publish the same. You can buy local to nearest point, then through to California at the one-fare rate.

Paris comes to the front with an offering for our work that manifests friendship indeed; you will see that your school does the same. It will gladden you when reports are read at California.

Did you send your name to C. C. Hill? Well, are you going without first doing so? Surely not, so do not defer writing him.

Everett, C. W. West minister, more than meet the apportionment, while Jamesport, Mooresville and Star, Clark County, send us an offering, many of them making their first gift this year.

Yes, the souvenirs are to go out before the convention, but have been delayed on account of our waiting for cabinets and cuts of friends. Yes, too, one will go to every delegate that enrolls at California, even if a thousand are needed.

Belton is going at it right, organizing mission Bible-schools, then later holding meetings. Good returns will come from such work, and the people will rejoice in it.

Paynesville has so completely modernized their house that it seems entirely new, and yet, they come to the help of our work as if so much had not been spent; they have always done so. W. O. Walton is their minister now and all are much encouraged at the outlook; their future is bright.

Lathrop met their pledge in full and filled the award of merit cards sent them and did it so promptly. We praise them for it.

Richland pays in full. If all others, especially the indebted, would do likewise, we would be free people, so far as debts are concerned, for another year.

Do the county superintendents know that the county banner this year goes to the county organizing the greatest number of new Bible-schools. The indications are now that the banner will remain south of the Missouri River.

A little lady in Oklahoma has filled an award of merit card for us and sent in to this office. Thanks to her and blessings on her.

Now for the final appeal. Let nothing keep you from so good a convention as the one so near to hand. Again, do not come to the convention with your offering if you can help it, but send in the offering before the convention; we need it; we deserve it, and you ought to remit it. Will you?

State Mission Notes.

I am sure that the best "notes" I can give you this week will be to publish the following letter. It is out a sample of the many we are receiving. Bro. Oldham is one of our very best men. He knows whereof he writes. I have been trying to get the church in the state at large to see the whiteness of these fields; sometimes I fear my words are not as fully credited as they might be, and I publish this letter that another voice may be added to mine. What shall we do? This opportunity neglected is gone forever. An empty treasury makes it impossible for us to meet this demand; will not every church see to the apportionment at once? Read this letter and see if I am not justified in making this plea as urgent as possible:

Carthage, Mo., May 24, 1900.

DEAR BRO. ABBOTT:—Oronogo is a flourishing mining town of 2,500, ten miles west on the Frisco. I was down yesterday to preach a funeral and found a number of brethren living there with no church privileges. There are two small Methodist churches there, neither at all adequate to accommodate even those who go to prayer-meeting, so they informed me. We have a Bro. Smith there who is in the residence part of the town. The town is rapidly spreading his way and will soon be all about him. He offers two lots well located for a church, and a lot for a parsonage. I do not think I ever saw a better opening for a prosperous congregation than is found here. Can we not do something? A good tent would be filled every night with an orderly crowd, anxious to hear. Some man who could preach without offense at first is what we need. Hell's Neck, four miles north, is also a flourishing mining camp of about the same number of people, and both within the limits of Jasper county. I do not think there is better missionary ground anywhere than just here in Jasper. These points are both superior to Sarcoxie, where I organized a church two weeks ago with sixteen members, and about fifty more, or nearly that number, ready to come in with a little nursing. If I had control of three or four such men as one T. A. Abbott, I believe that I could plant the "old Jerusalem gospel" in a community which will soon be second to none in the state. Oronogo and Hell's Neck are both North of Webb City, one three miles, the other about seven. Oronogo is just midway between Carthage and Joplin. It has grown to its present dimensions within two years, and hundreds of people are living around in tents, some of them well-to-do people. We should enter this field now. W. A. OLDHAM.

We want to answer this appeal. We can't unless the churches furnish the meaus. Let us hear from a large number at once.

T. A. ABBOTT.

Two Thousand Cross Eyes.

Straightened by a Painless Method.

Extract from an article in the Medical Brief written by Dr. J. Harvey Moore, 648 Century Building, St. Louis.

Cross eyes is such a common defect that many seem to regard it as a matter of little consequence not knowing that it has any other deleterious effect except the mere disfigurement. If parents only knew the far-reaching effects of cross eyes upon their children they would not be indifferent about having it corrected by the most skillful oculist they could find instead of consulting opticians who are merely spectacle dealers, or traveling oculists, or any one making any pretentions to treat the eye or fit glasses. Bear this in mind Glasses will not straighten cross eyes. Even if such were possible it would be necessary to have it done by a competent oculist. As a matter of course, oculists vary in skill the same as men in any other calling and some are more skillful than others in some special lines.

Evil Effects of Cross Eyes.

The evil effects of cross eyes are numerous and far-reaching in character. First, there is the deformity itself. Any deformity has a bad effect upon the mind of the unfortunate victim. He has the constant feeling that something is wrong with him and that every person he meets is cognizant of his deformity. I have seen young girls, just budding into womanhood, droop and become morose and melancholy, avoid society and become absolutely indifferent to everything. They often develop hysteria and frequently chorea or St. Vitus' dance. They are apt to suffer from headache, dizziness and numerous other forms of nervous disturbance. While there are many cases of cross eyes who do not suffer from any of the nervons troubles, they all suffer impairment of sight. The eye which turns to any considerable extent gradually loses the sight from want of use. When properly straightened, all the above nervous symptoms disappear, and with them a general improvement in the general health of the patient. Many a mother has remarked to me after I had straightened her daughter's eyes: "My daughter's health has improved wonderfully. She eats better, sleeps better and is so much brighter and happier, and is not nervous or irritable as she was before. She is like another person entirely."

Free from Pain or Danger.

It is almost impossible to convince people that such an important thing as straightening the eye can be done without pain and without the use of chloroform or ether, but they are always convinced before they are through. Even children five years of age will sit perfectly still and never flinch and say that it did not hurt them at all. We do not confine the patient in a dark room or even bandage the eye. We find that they recover much more quickly and the results are far better than by the old method of chloroform, bandage and dark room. Many physicians will say that a cross one can straighten the eyes without pain by the use of cocaine, but we know from experience that is not true. We have had patients who had had one eye operated upon by eminent oculists and suffered great pain, while we operated on the other eye without any pain at all. It is in the method and skill in operating.

Causes of Cross Eyes.

The causes of cross eyes are numerous. Many cases date from birth. Some people are superstitious about such cases, thinking that they cannot be straightened. We have straightened many cases of cross eyes in persons who were born so. A fall, fright, convulsions or severe illness may produce cross eyes. Children sometimes become cross eyed from mimicking others or simply from associating with them.

FLORIDA.

Jacksonville, June 1.—About the happiest man in the city of Jacksonville and in the state of Florida to-day is our Brother J. T. Boone. The reason for this is that we have had Brother S. M. Martin with us again in a meeting. Those who have had Brother Martin with them know what kind of preaching we have had. This last meeting was the greatest ever held in this city, though only of two weeks' duration. The meeting was held in the opera house under the auspices of the First Christian Church. Large crowds attended every night and last Sunday night the immense opera house would not hold the crowds and many had to be turned away. There were 50 additions in the 13 days of the meeting. The meeting was followed on Monday night, the 28th, by one of Brother Martin's entertainments, which was voted by all the most successful of its kind ever held in this city of a similar character. The Christian Church of this city is very proud of Brother Martin, and he has won a place in the esteem of the people of Jacksonville that cannot be occupied by anybody but himself. At the same time he has been very faithful to the Word and has tried to prevent as much as possible people joining the church alone on his account. Under the able leadership of Brother J. T. Boone the First Christian Church of Jacksonville is forging ahead. It has nearly quadrupled its membership in the past two years. It has outgrown its church building, until the building is not large enough to take care of the Sunday-school. The Sunday-school is the best in the state of any Protestant body. During the meeting the school met at the church on Sunday morning and marched in a body to the opera house, to the astonishment of the town. People outside of the church have been loud in their praise. We need a church—must have it—do not know just how, but it is the Lord's work and we believe that there will be a way provided, and we are going to do our best to do it.—RUFUS A. RUSSELL.

OKLAHOMA TERRITORY.

Norman, June 1.—Our five weeks' meeting closed with 15 additions, Bro. D. D. Boyle doing the preaching. The weather affected the meeting to a great degree. Rained nearly every day or evening. The church is greatly strengthened. Bro. Boyle goes to Colorado, Tex., for his next meeting. He does not hesitate to declare the whole gospel.—W. T. WHERRY, pastor.

INDIANA.

Irvington, May 26.—Last Sunday was a glorious day in Jamestown; 140 in Sunday-school and $2.54 collection. Went way beyond our apportionment. Nearly three times as much as the church gave last year. They gave me an offering on the Akron church debt. We had two confessions and two otherwise; one two weeks before. The work at Jamestown never was more encouraging. We will remodel the church soon.—H. C. PATTERSON.

New Berry, May 31.—We had 10 additions in a short meeting held recently at Royal Centre; eight by baptism and two by letter. Three were baptized at Oden, Ind., not reported. I am now in a short meeting here, which will close next Sunday night. Will then report. After filling lecture engagements at Bloomfield, Ind., Windsor, Ill., and Columbus and Ashland O., I will begin a meeting in Halifax, N. S., June 17.—A. MARTIN, Muncie, Ind.

IOWA.

Des Moines, May 28.—Two excellent audiences greeted us yesterday at Jefferson, Iowa, in our farewell visit. Whoever follows me there will find some of the best people with whom they ever labored. I am very happy to say that on Sunday, May 20, 1900, there was born to us a 10-lb. boy. The mother and son are doing excellently.—T. W. MCDONALD.

Des Moines, May 30.—I closed my work at Ft. Dodge last Sunday. During the year a building costing $1,800 was erected and paid for. There were also 31 additions to the church. I have accepted a pastorate for the summer in Dighton, Kan.—W. J. DODGE.

Keokuk, May 31.—We had four more confessions at Golden's Point, Ill., on Sunday last. We also listened to that great preacher, H. R. Trickett, of Bloomfield, Ia., who preached four of the finest sermons that ever fell from lips of mortal man. God is blessing our efforts at Golden's Point.—W. W. RUMSEY.

ILLINOIS.

Jacksonville, June 1.—A father and mother, with their grown son and daughter, came to us from the Baptists last Lord's day. One adult made the good confession.—GEO. L. SNIVELY, pastor.

Windsor, May 29.—We had four baptisms at Humboldt last Sunday and two additions at the evening service. All departments of the work are in good condition. Preached the memorial sermon at Humboldt, May 27, and delivered the Decoration address at Toledo, May 30.—A. H. HARRELL.

Sullivan, May 28.—Another grand day yesterday; large and interested audiences and two baptisms.—E. W. BRICKERT, pastor.

Bryant, May 7.—Three additions last Lord's day; two by baptism and one restated., 33 additions since I commenced work here last December.—W. W. MOWER.

Augusta, May 28.—All departments of church work are prospering. We intend very soon to begin to remodel our church building. The improvement will cost us nearly or quite $3000. Yesterday the writer delivered the memorial sermon to the G. A. R. of Augusta in the presence of a fine audience. Eld. E. J. Lampton, of Louisiana, Mo., will preach for us the 30th.—A. L. FERGUSON.

Gerlaw.—Our meeting by T. W. Cottingham, of Kansas City, Mo., closed with 14 additions. Bro. Cottingham is thoroughly familiar with the doctrine and gives it out in such quantities that it is bound to bring forth fruit.—HARRY E. TUCKER pastor.

DRUNKENNESS CURED.

An eminent St. Louis physician has given a positive answer to the oft asked question, is drunkenness a disease, or is it simply a temptation that cannot be resisted by a vast number of the human race? The physician in question is Dr. Ozias Paquin, who for years has been a practicing physician in the City of St. Louis. He has answered this question by taking five of the worst drunkards that could be found and cured them of all further appetite for intoxicating drinks. The five cases were all beyond middle age and they had sunk into the deepest pit of drunkenness, with the odor of drink about them so obnoxious that it was almost impossible to stand within speaking distance. He not only cured them of all desire for intoxicating drink, but at the same time placed upon their cheek the flush of health, and into their eyes the light of happiness, and took from their person the odor of whiskey. It was almost a miracle, for he had raised five cases from degradation into the sunshine of health and happiness. Dr. Paquin has cured hundreds of patients who were relapses from other treatments, and in every instance he cured these patients, and they have remained cured for months and years. It can therefore be said that the Paquin Treatment is a permanent cure, and not a temporary one, for the patient never relapses to his former condition. We know of no more humane work being done at the present time than that which Dr. Paquin is doing, and it is the duty of every reader to assist Dr. Ozias Paquin in his noble work, and if any reader has brother, sister, husband, father or friend in whose system lurks the disease of drunkenness, he should at once send their name to Dr. Paquin or see that they either visit or place themselves in communication with the Ozias Paquin Immune Co., Suite 1113 Chemical Bldg., St. Louis. The reader that does this will certainly be doing a christian act, for no matter how hopeless the case may seem, and no matter how many other treatments have unsuccessfully been tried, the method known as Ozias Paquin Treatment will perfect a cure, dispelling all desire for drink, and at the same time will place the constitution in a robust and healthy condition.

Mid Forsaken Graves.

MILTON H. H. LEE.

These monuments of rudely carven stone,
Erected years agone in love, still stand,
The orators of this lone audience.
Relentless time has worn from them the names
Beloved in other days, till nothing now
Remains save indentations slight, to tell
Their story. Trees have grown to wondrous size
Above the dead, where once sweet roses bloomed
And drank the early dew: and, where the green
Vine crept in beauty o'er the new-made graves,
The thorny bramble grows and flourishes.
The passing breath of early morn sweeps by,
But finds no fragrance as it passes; for
The sweet perfume of other days is gone.
Yon wall of stone, so rude, that guarded once
These sacred mounds, has tottered to the earth,
And leaves them here, defenceless, to the beasts.
And o'er the shapeless pile, the untrained vine
Grows wild, and none will deign to pluck its fruit.

Neglected dead: Thy resting places once
Were visited in love: and gentle hands
Were wont to deck them with the sweetest flowers.
The pangs of parting had but newly pierced
Their hearts, and left within their gaping wounds;
But healing time less painful made the throes
And thou wert then neglected, here, and soon
Forgotten by the souls that loved thee well.
Now they are gone—asleep, perchance, with thee—
And no one hath a care who slumbers here.
But I will pause to muse: Less noble thoughts
May enter human heart than thoughts of thee,
And I would gather priceless wisdom from
The boundless store that lies obscure within These lonely habitations dark and drear.

'Tis done! Ye slumber as we all must sleep,
Forgetful of the ills that life has wrought:
Its joys and sorrows now are one to thee.
But thou hast seen a surer light and felt,
For years, perchance, a richer joy than ours.
But thou must sleep, forgotten, here until Awakened by the final trump of God.
No night so dark but has its coming morn;
And even death in darkest night awaits
A glorious dawn, when all that sleep shall rise
And hail the coming of eternal day,
And thou wilt rise in immortality.
Till then, when God shall call thee, rest in peace!

"Only a Deserter."

MINNIE E. HADLEY.

It was early morning on the thirtieth day of May, and the sun was just beginning to peep over the tops of the tall, thick evergreens which skirted the picturesque little cemetery of a small Southern Ohio city.

What a beautiful picture the cemetery afforded at this early hour in the morning, had the good people of L——only been awake to enjoy it!

Sparkling drops of dew were still lingering in profusion along the green, sloping hillsides, which were marked here and there by little glistening slabs of snow-white marble. Roses, lilacs, syringa and lilies were all wide-awake and seemed to vie with one another for the greatest profusion of blossom and perfume, until the very air itself became one grand symphony of color and fragrance; happy birds were singing everywhere; the busy bees were beginning to bestir themselves inside their saffrony lily-beds, and no one would have ever dreamed of its being the silent home of the dead, had not a multitude of snowy monuments and slabs everywhere presented themselves as silent spectres of the dead past, and just now the fact was rendered more convincing by the appearance upon the scene of a little, old, bent woman, who tottered along the graveled driveway leaning upon her staff. She was neatly clad in a plain, black calico dress, with blue checked gingham apron and bonnet. On her left arm she carried a small willow basket in which were two scant, freshly-cut bouquets of old-fashioned red roses mixed with green sprigs of live-forever. She was past eighty years of age. and there was a pained expression of sorrow upon the sweet, quiet face as she silently made her way this bright morning to an obscure corner of the cemetery.

For thirty-five years old Aunt Becky Lowden had taken this early morning walk on "Decoration Day" to an obscure corner of the cemetery, where there was a lonely grave marked by a lowly headstone, now almost covered with grass, and upon which there was carved the single name "Jemmy Lowden."

A tall tree grew just beside the grave and spread its lowly bending branches over the little mound, as if its one sacred and bounden duty were to cover some deep disgrace from the cruel gaze of a heartless world; at least it had always seemed so to Aunt Becky.

Jemmy was her only child. Away back in the sixties, when President Lincoln issued a call for volunteers, Jemmy, then a young man of twenty-five, left his widowed mother and joined the "boys in blue."

How proud she was of him on that "good-bye" morning as he marched away with the other boys looking so tall and handsome in his suit of blue, and how she had prayed God that her son might be either spared to her or else die valiantly fighting.

For one year she heard excellent reports of him; then he took to drinking, shirked his duty and finally one day in November, one black and terrible day, there came the dreadful message which completely crushed poor Aunt Becky's heart and took from her dreary life the last fading spark of its joy and sunshine—"Shot as a deserter."

"O, God!" was all she had said in the agony of her grief, "had I a thousand valiant sons and thou hadst slain them all it would not have been so hard as this!"

So Jemmy was privately buried in the quiet corner of the churchyard, with no monument save the simple, lowly headstone.

Many memorial days had come and gone since then, but the final resting-place of Jemmy was left unnoticed by all save the broken-hearted mother, who always came at this early hour in the morning, left her simple bouquets, and with a fervent little prayer for the appeasement of God's wrath upon her disgraced son, had hurried away to avoid the gathering crowd; and the growing tree with its kindly branches had helped her to hide from the gaze of the world this last, visible, earthly mark of her son's deep disgrace.

But somehow she couldn't hurry away this morning. She had dreamed of her boy all night, and as she knelt over the grass-grown mound to arrange the little red bouquets, the very air about her seemed to be filled with his spirit.

A long time she knelt in prayer by the grave, and God seemed to speak peace to her troubled soul as he had never done before.

At length she endeavored to go, but something seemed holding her back. It was like leaving Jemmy behind. Then she heard the roll of the drum, followed by sweet strains of martial music, and a great crowd of people came surging up the graveled walk.

It was the G. A. R. procession, the old soldiers, Jemmy's comrades, some of them, and they were decorating the graves of fallen heroes.

"Oh, if Jemmy were only worthy of that!" thought poor Aunt Becky as she stood leaning upon her staff watching the decorators a few yards away from her. "But he's only a deserter! only a deserter!" She repeated the words again and again, in a sort of stupefied way, without being able thoroughly to comprehend them.

"Forward, march!" She heard the captain's command, and with solemn tread to beat of drum the little company marched onward, followed by great crowds of people. They were almost past the little gravel walk leading out to Jemmy's grave.

"They have long since forgotten my poor boy," she thought, "and perhaps its best that they should."

But just then the captain caught sight of the little old woman leaning upon her staff and gazing toward them with a look of such resigned sorrow.

"Retreat, boys! To the right!' She heard the orders and now they were marching right in the direction of Jemmy's grave.

"Open order! Salute the dead!" Immediately they filed around the grass-grown mound, some of them stooping beneath the tree's bending branches. One of their number placed a beautiful floral offering right between Aunt Becky's scant bouquets, a salute was fired and the Captain began speaking:

"Boys," he said with a choked voice, as he read the name upon the little head-piece

"too long we have neglected this grave and its lonely watcher. Jemmy Lowden was the truest and kindest-hearted boy we had in camp as long as he let whiskey alone. Many's the time I've known him to give food and drink to a brother soldier when he was famished for it himself. Many a wound has he helped to heal and many an almost dying man has he nursed back to life! Yes, Jemmy was good to us all and God knows he would have been true to death, had it not been for the curse of rum. Three cheers for Jemmy Lowden!"

Up went the long array of military caps and three long, loud, deafening shouts rent the very air.

The last echo had scarcely died away when another piercing shriek arose and the tottering form of the little old woman fell forward, flat upon the ground, with both arms clasping Jemmy's grave.

"Thank God! thank God!" she shrieked fervently. "Then he did serve his country after all! Why couldn't I have been told all this years ago? Thank God, it has come at last! All these years I have prayed for something like this. I thought he was only a deserter! Look at me, Jemmy; your mother forgives you!"

She ceased. The Captain gently raised the little bent form from the ground. A quiet look of deep-felt joy and peace illumined the sweet, pale face. At last the broken heart was healed. She had gone to be with Jemmy.

A Canteen Convert.

I have always looked upon the army canteen as a triumphant device of the devil to ruin our soldier boys, body and soul, and to help the brewers and politicians. But I am mistaken. I acknowledge my transgression, and my sin is ever before me. Against Pres. McKinley and the administration have I sinned. I hope the good people of this country will forgive me for holding views on the canteen question differing from those held by the rival political parties.

I am a convert to the canteen because Secretary Root has declared that it is "a moral institution." The Secretary, of course, speaks for the President. Had it not been for this timely utterance I might have continued in my headlong career of opposition to the canteen, and died without ever having held a government position! As it is I now see the light. The things I once hated, now I love, and the things I once loved now I hate, with few exceptions. Secretary Root has rolled away the burdens of my sins. I am now as happy as a June bug and in full fellowship with the political world at large. I might say in passing that I am available for any of the best offices within the gift of the people. A man of my ability should not be without an office long, especially as competent official timber in our country is so scarce. Admiral Dewey and I are in the hands of our friends. We have launched our frail boats upon the stormy sea of politics to sail on and on until time shall be no more!

Since the canteen is a moral agent, I am expecting several reforms; hence my happiness. I have a right to believe that government beer sold in the canteen will promote piety among the soldiers. Filled with beer they will then fill the Sunday-schools and churches wherever an opportunity affords. They will organize Christian Endeavor Societies, the army chaplains will preach to vast multitudes of devout soldiers, prompted to wait upon their earnest ministrations by the kindly suggestions of government beer. Some of the boys will become ministers at home and missionaries abroad as soon as arrangements can be made. Others will prove to be loving and tender husbands and fathers, dutiful sons, philanthropists; in fine, ideal citizens. They will love mercy, justice and government beer! Therefore, the brewer, saloonkeeper and politicians who cater to the rum power for its vote are public benefactors, allies of preachers and churches, according to Secretary Root. Ordinary saloon beer will transform a good man into a demon, but government beer will make bad men good and good men better. Under the regime of government beer our soldier boys will soon be found in camp reading their Bibles, singing psalms, praying far into the night, making their couch to swim in penitent tears because of past sins. If the soldier's faith wavers, he drinks beer and it is confirmed. If he strays from the path of virtue he drinks beer and at once he finds himself walking in the path of the just. Government beer will set every wrong right that a soldier may commit. If the devil appears to tempt him a glass of beer drunk in his presence will compel "Old Nick" to leave for parts unknown. At a convention of preachers where grand resolutions against the liquor traffic are passed only to be forgotten Satan is as happy as a bee in clover, but in the presence of one of our soldiers equipped with government beer he feels as melancholy as a fly in molasses! It is easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle than for a soldier to be moral without the aid of government beer. As a cure for drunkenness it knocks the Keeley cure into a cocked hat. In the government saloon the moral forces of this country have an ally that will suppress every form of evil, and put the devil out of business. And what a time the politicians will have electing his successor! Yes, my brethren of the ministry, the drinking of beer is now one of the shining Christian graces which must be watered with heavenly dews and nurtured in gardens of blossoming piety. Official drunkenness is no longer a sin, but the saintly accomplishment to be emulated by devout theologians and conscientious teetotalers. The army canteen may become a grand, sanctifying, converting, uplifting agency, which must never be abolished if any regard be had for the moral condition of our soldiers, and the success of our favorite party. I am heartily in favor of continuing this "moral agent" because of its religious influences, because of its revenues to the government, because of its firm and abiding hold upon the Christian voters of this country, and last but not least, because a dying soldier can "read his title clear to mansions in the skies" with the aid of government beer!

How Bilney Won Latimer for Christ.

The Biblical Treasury thus tells the old story of how one burning heart won another to the love and service of the Christ in whom he rejoiced: "Thomas Bilney, converted in the sixteenth century, was at once seized with a burning desire to win others to Christ. He was specially anxious for his friend Hugh Latimer, a zealous and well-meaning Romanist, and his sagacity in winning him has not often been surpassed. He went to Latimer's study, and told him he wished to confess. Hugh Latimer was then a young Roman Catholic priest. There, in the privacy of that solitary chamber, he poured upon his heart the burning story of his own conversion. When he described the joy which he felt, and the witness which he had received that God had taken away his sins, the heart of Latimer burned with new sensations, and there in his confessional the Holy Spirit imparted to him the same peace, the same joy, the same witness, that Bilney had described. From that hour the course of his life was changed, and his talents and his piety were consecrated to the cause of the Reformation."

"Significant Ignorance About the Bible."

BAXTER WATERS.

This is the title of an article in May Century (Magazine) by Dr. Thwing, President of Western Reserve University. This contribution grows out of some test questions put before his students in which he gives a number of Biblical allusions from Tennyson's poetry. The density of the ignorance of Biblical facts was a revelation to him, and he raises the inquiry as to the causes of this present-day ignorance of the world's greatest Book. One very evident cause given is the fact "that the world has become a world of magazines, and a world of newspapers." Fifty-five thousand volumes last year; newspapers galore! Once there was practically only one Book, now what a change!

The second cause he finds in "the decline of the family life. Time was when fathers and mothers read the Bible to the children; portions of the Bible were memorized; its stories were told and listened to;" and the children repeated lengthy passages, such as the Sermon on the Mount and others. He also notes that family prayers are less common now than formerly.

A further cause is that the "Sunday-school has not taken the place of the family as a teacher of the facts and truths of the Bible." The teaching of the school is exceedingly inadequate. The teachers themselves are ignorant of the Book which they are set to teach." He also thinks if the Bible were read in the Public Schools the young would become more acquainted with its facts and teachings.

A further cause is the Sunday desecration and decrease in the attendance at the church services. He suggests also that "the religious emphases of our time have been changed from a book to a life, and to life itself. Bibliolatry has ceased. The more intense religious thought of our time has come to center about Christ. Christianity might exist without the Bible, for it did exist without the New Testament for more than a generation, but Christianity cannot exist without Christ."

This interesting article raises a paramount question with every teacher and preacher as to how to arouse more thorough and genuine Biblical study. This is a time when everybody is reading something, and the Bible should hold its unique place in the world's literature.

"Rubber Day."

There is a new day in the calendar at Niagara Falls. It is "Rubber Day." The Christian Endeavor Union recently realized $250.00 by a single day's collection of old rubbers, contributing the funds to the relief work of the Indian famine. The results were so gratifying that I feel the movement ought to be taken up in every city and village by the Endeavorers, Sunday-schools and churches. The following plan was pursued: First, having decided on the work, the Union did thorough advertising. The daily papers gave "scare headlines" to the movement, informing the people as to the work and proposed use of funds. The superintendent of schools entered heartily into the movement and notices were given in every school-room in the city on the day before the collection. Through the churches and Sunday-schools similar announcements were made. Roman Catholics joined with Protestants to make it a success. The people were asked to have the rubbers ready to give out.

Secondly, the city was districted, and each Endeavor Society became responsible for the collection in one district. The collection was made on the same day throughout the city. In most of the districts Sunday-school boys worked under the direction of older persons. Several pastors engaged in the work and the people entered heartily into the spirit of the matter. A wagon was sent out in each district and the canvass made from house to house. Some of the wagons were gaily decorated with flags and bore banners—"For Starving India" and "Rubber Day." Overshoes, boots, hose and all kinds of old rubber were collected. It sold at about seven cents per pound. The work was a blessing to the Endeavorers and to the city as well as to starving India. "Go thou and do likewise."

The Acme.... Smelting and Refining Company

Offers to Investors for a Short Time Unequaled Advantages.

IT IS A WELL-KNOWN FACT

That a custom smelter, properly equipped and operated, is the most certain source of revenue in the mining business.

ITS SUCCESS

Is not contingent upon the output of any one mine or group of mines, but draws its support from a large number of mines in the district where it is located. There are 100 producing and paying mines within a convenient distance of our smelter site and at least 200 more would be developed if there was a custom smelter conveniently located to which ore could be shipped for treatment.

A CUSTOM SMELTER

Bears the same relation to mining that a grist mill does to an agricultural district, with the profits greatly in favor of a custom smelter. The usual net profits of a custom smelter are about $3.00 per ton.

WE HAVE GIVEN YEARS

Of careful study to our plans and know that we are warranted in our undertaking—the erection of a custom smelting plant. Risks which exist in all ordinary mining operations have been carefully eliminated from our plans. We have water, fluxes, an inexhaustible supply of ore and a clear field.

WE CONTRACT NO DEBTS. OUR MOTTO IS: CASH or NOTHING.

A CUSTOM SMELTER HAS THESE ADVANTAGES OVER ALL KINDS OF COMMERCIAL BUSINESS:

1. The product of a smelter invariably sells for cash.
2. The ore smelted is ample security for the expense of smelting.
3. Profits are always large, often reaching 50 per cent. annually on the par value of the stock.
4. Charges for smelting are always collected before the "matte" or refined ore is delivered from the smelter.
5. A custom smelter has no bad debts.
6. A gold smelter's out-put never fluctuates in value.
7. A gold smelter is absolutely independent of any financial stringency, business stagnation, political disturbance, or other calamity which jeopardizes all ordinary classes of investments.

Our Board of Directors is a Guarantee of Safety to all Investors.

—It is composed of

HON. C. C. COLE, Late Chief Justice of Iowa.
HON. WEBSTER STREET, Chief Justice of Arizona.
HON. EMIL GANZ, President of the National Bank of Arizona.
H. M. CHAPMAN. Secretary of Phoenix and Maricopa County Board of Trade.
N. C. WILSON, Rarge and Successful Merchant.
CALVIN OGBURN, Evangelist.
T. T. POWERS, LL.B.

AMONG OUR STOCKHOLDERS are U S. Senators and Members of Congress, Ex-Governors, High Naval Officers, College Presidents.

YOU ASSUME NO RISK

When investing in the stock of the Acme Smelting and Refining Company.

1. All the conditions are favorable for the erection and operation of a custom smelter.
2. The Board of Directors are all men of high moral and business standing.
3. The officers are all required to furnish bond.

The par value of the stock is $1.00 per share.

For a short time we are offering a limited amount of stock at 50 cents a share—one-half payable in cash, and balance in five equal monthly installments, or where the entire amount is paid in one payment 45 cents a share. Stock is issued full paid and non-assessable. Most respectfully,

CHAPTER XXV.

Mrs. Douglas and Mrs Dew sat in the side-tracked train waiting for Frank and her father to return. As time passed by Mrs. Douglas grew very uneasy, lest Nance might have done her daughter an injury in spite of the presence of Mr. Douglas. The flashing of the rain against the car windows and the moaning of the wind which had found its true September note at last and was practicing it for the autumn days at hand—all this increased her alarm. This feeling was changed to amazement when the car door was flung open and three dripping persons entered: Frank, Mr. Douglas and Nance. Mrs. Douglas recognized the old nurse at once, and seeing that she was very far from dying, fear mingled with her surprise. The old woman saw her and came directly to her side. Mr. Douglas kept close to Nance, never knowing what that unscrupulous person might attempt. Frank, with the aid of Mrs. Dew, removed her dripping cloak.

"Le's come to the pint," said Nance abruptly. "Why am I here? I follered you all from the village. It was me looked in the window that morning. I wanted to kill Frank! I possumed dying so I could git her to come to me, and stab her, in the very teeth of her pap. I meant to kill myself afterwards. Very well. It worked a charm. Here comes the gal and her pap; the gal she drops on her knees besides me. I fingers my dagger under the bed clothes, and I watches her!" Mrs. Douglas stared at the repulsive creature with horror in her wide eyes. She shrank as far away as the seat would permit. But Nance continued vehemently: "So she bends over me, her on her knees, and thinks I: 'It's dead easy; she's farely throwed herself here for my aim!' thinks I. Then to git a little time I puts up a mournful song about doing her a wrong. And she say it's all right, she say, an' she's forgive me, she say, an' she don't want me to die, not her! An' I see it warn't no copybook phrasing she were at, but she meant ever' word she say. An' she say: 'Nance, live, I wants you to, an' I'll be yore frien,' she say, 'an' God will love you,' and a heap more along that line, like as if she was an angel that had foun' one of her kinfolks! It broke me all up an' I han's 'er the dagger, her pap has it now, an' I confesses all I meant to do, an' then she throwed them dear arms of hern roun' me." And Nance broke into sobs. That surprised Mrs. Douglas more than ever, but somehow she ceased to fear the old nurse. "So I ast to come an' tell you the cause of it all an' why I wanted to kill the little innocent, she don't know no more of the worl' than milk that ain't been watered, bless her heart! An' I want to tell you that the cause of all yore trouble has come through you and yore husban'. Now I speaks to you heart to heart, an' as a lady to a lady that is above lies. You've blamed ole Nance fur ever'thing, but you ain't never supposed that you might be to blame. You listen! When I come to yore home in Kentuck to nuss yore baby, I was as good as the next one; hadn't never stole, nor been in jail nor nothin'. I come of a good family in the mountain kentry, an' I thought as much of myself as you did of yoreself. They wasn't as much of me to be proud of, as they was of you, but what they was of me I respected. So did them that knowed me. I hadn't been long with you when yore gold watch and the red box it was kep' in disappeared. You thought I taken it! So did yore husban'. I see you awhisperin' an' alookin' at me! My heart was jes tore with terror, fur I knowed what would happen. You'd sen' me up fur it! An' yet I never stold that watch. I'll prove to you in a minute that I didn't steal it. Well, I didn't know what to do; didn't have no frien's in Lexington, they was 'way off in the mountain kentry; an' if they'd been thar what could they a done? Nothin'. I see what was comin'. Thinks I, 'I'll git back to my ole home an' never leave it agin!' An' I left one night an' hid in town till I could git a chance to escape, fur I knowed the trains would be watched. I hid like a dog fur days an' then you ketched me an' in jail I went, me that had done no wrong, as I'll prove an' my pap would a died afore he'd a been in jail—was as hones' as the day was long; ma too! When I see the worl' from behind them iron bars, the devil jes got in my heart an' eat it up an' staid in the place of it. An' it was: 'O, if I kin git out of here an' have revenge!' That's all I thought of. An' I did git out; prisoners bruck loose, you remember. Then I thought I would burn down yore house or kill one of you. But no, I see what was best as soon as I had crep' in yore house an' see the baby sleepin' there in the new cradle. What a pretty cradle it were, white an' gol'! Thinks I: 'Hello, I never see this cradle afore!' An' thinks I: 'Wonder what's became of the cradle they had when I was here?' An' thinks I: 'Wonder where that old cradle was put?' Then what do I do but steal up to the garret an' there was the ole cradle, with the leather pocket you made to keep the playthings in; remember? An' thinks I: 'Miss Douglas's pap has been asayin' he was goin' to git his darter a new cradle, that the ole fam'ly cradle wasn't good enough for Mary,' that's Frank. 'An' thinks I: 'That silly Miss Douglas sometimes let baby play with her gold watch an' the red box; an' once she went away an' left it on the kiver, an' fogot it. An' thinks I, 'Mayby she done it this time; an' mayby the the baby worked 'em off the kiver till they falls into that leather pocket!' With that I runs my han' into the pocket an' there was the watch an' the red box! An' I don't know why it was, but seemed like when found out that the watch hadn't been stole at tall, but was jes in the pocket of the discarded cradle, look like hell boiled and hissed in my soul for my mistreatment and misjudgment. I tuck the box and stole your baby; but I left the watch, I would a died before I'd a tuck it, though I've often wished since I had. An' I'll tell you where that watch is now; it's in that old cradle unless it's been stole out of it, most unlikely! So that's how it is. But I'll tell you what I'm agoin' to do. I ain't agoin' to be behindhand with Mary. I'm agoin' to forgive you; you needn't make no apologies—I guess I got even with you anyhow; yes, I guess I did! So we'll call 'er square, an' I'm glad you've got your little gal agin, God bless her!"

THE FEEDING OF FIVE THOUSAND.*

This wonderful miracle of Jesus was wrought very soon after the tidings of the death of John the Baptist reached him in Galilee. The impression it made upon the minds of his disciples was profound. It is the only miracle, except his resurrection, which is narrated by all four of the evangelists. To get the whole story with its attendant circumstances the four accounts should be carefully compared.

It became necessary for Jesus to leave the familiar haunts along the western shores of the lake where so large a part of his ministry had taken place. Herod, alarmed by the reports of his wonderful works, and fearing lest he might be the Baptist whom he had cruelly put to death, sought to see him, Luke tells us, we may be sure for no good purpose. The Master would not trust himself to the hands of "that fox," as he calls Herod, for his hour to die had not yet come. Meanwhile, the twelve returned from their brief and busy tour of the surrounding country with the story of the success which attended their ministry. They need a season of rest as well as their Master in preparation for the arduous year upon which they are about to enter. So Jesus takes them with him across the lake to the vicinity of Bethsaida Julias, a town at the northern end of the lake, east of the mouth through which the Jordan empties into Galilee. Here he would be outside the territories of Antipas and within those of Philip, whose milder spirit made him less to be feared. His departure from Capernaum was witnessed by the people, and a multitude of them took their way on foot around the northern end of the lake, meeting him as he landed and disappointing his hopes of quiet and rest. But he patiently ministered to them, teaching them of the kingdom of heaven and healing all who were afflicted and proving himself once more the Burden-bearer of the race.

The day soon passed, and with the coming of the late afternoon a serious problem faced the disciples. A vast multitude was gathered in this lonely spot, several miles from the nearest town of Bethsaida, and much farther from their homes in and about Capernaum. Held by the marvelous teaching and beneficent miracles of Christ men had forgotten the flight of time and night would soon be upon them with neither shelter nor supper for their need. The disciples came to Jesus and suggested that he send the people away at once that they might reach the adjacent villages before night. Turning to Philip the Master asked him: "Whence are we to buy bread that these might eat?" Philip answered that it would require at least two hundred pennyworth to give even a slight portion to each of so many. It was hardly possible that their combined store of money could reach that sum, which was equal to thirty dollars in our currency, and had a purchasing power of six times that amount. The time required to go and get the bread would add to the suffering of the hungry multitude, who were already fainting with their tiresome journey around the lake and their long fasting. "Give ye them to eat," said the Savior, with what must have seemed to the disciples a strange disregard of all human possibilities. "How many loves have ye? Go and see," said the Master. Andrew, Peter's brother, brought back the answer: "There is a lad here which hath five barley loaves and two small fishes; but what are these among so many?" From the parallel accounts we judge that this lad was carrying the scanty store of provisions belonging to Jesus and his disciples. These small, flat cakes and the two little fishes they had still on hand could be of no account to feed these thousands. To their amazement the Master bids them seat the multitude upon the grass in companies of fifties and hundreds. It was the month of Nisan, "the month of flowers," and the hillsides were spotted with brilliant blossoms, while the whole plain was carpeted with luxuriant grass. Did the multitudes remember the day on the other side of the lake when Jesus had taught the lesson of God's providence from the grass of the field and the beautiful lily; and did there enter their hearts the faint prophecy of the marvelous supply for their necessities which he was about to furnish them? Probably not. They obeyed his command and took their places in order, hardly knowing what to expect.

Taking in his hands the loaves and fishes Jesus reverently looked up to heaven while offering thanks, and then began breaking and filling the baskets which were in the hands of the disciples, baskets which they had probably found among the people who had come from the greatest distance, and had brought food, which had been consumed earlier in the day. Bearing to the hungry crowd the broken bread and fish the disciples returned with their empty baskets to Jesus only to have them filled again and again until everybody had eaten to the full. He who created the universe found it no task to create food for a few thousand of his needy children. He who makes the golden harvest to wave in ten thousand fields and causes the water to swarm with their myriads of the finny tribes could increase the store of bread and fishes for to-day's wants. But it was a marvelous miracle, and no wonder the multitudes said: "He is surely the prophet who was promised to the world."

The disciples were filled with a strange awe and must have felt as never before that their Master was truly divine, when he could thus command the very elements of nature and do a creative work in the sight of men. They were afterwards to witness the work of spiritual creation, when the Lord should fill their own hearts with the truth and grace of his gospel on Pentecost and thence send them forth with full baskets to feed the souls of a famishing world. That work is yet in progress and the feast of grace is still being given to dying men. Are we as obedient to the command of our Lord as were his first disciples? Do we ever stumble at the humble means employed and doubt the adequacy of the gospel to save the multitude? If so, we may well learn a lesson of faith from these humble Galileans, and taking the Master at his word go forth breaking the bread of life, confident that there will prove to be enough for all.

The feast is ended at last. All have eaten and are satisfied. But before they leave the scene of this wonderful ministry of love the Lord would teach them another lesson. "Gather up the fragments that remain, that nothing be lost," said the Savior. And when the broken pieces were brought together, lo, they filled twelve baskets. More is left than they had at the beginning. A lesson in economy. The fragments are not to be wasted. Life is made up of remnants. No aim is wholly attained, but it may be partially realized, and that part may bring greater joy than we had anticipated from the whole. A lesson of resignation. When the feast of youthful hopes is ended there will be many broken bits of childhood joys many fragments of memory, half sweet, half bitter, which we should not despise. Gather them up, taste again their flavor and you may find them imparting a new and delicious sweetness to your soul. A lesson of recompense. Use the little you have as God bids you. Never think aught in your hands too little for Jesus to use. Bring the few loaves and fishes of common human endowment with which he has blessed you and let them be given out from his hands—they shall meet the wants of a multitude. He may have to break them, sorrow may be the way of service to you, but your broken, unhappy life, judged by earthly standards, may prove the bread of heaven to famishing souls about you.

"For the mark of rank in nature is capacity for pain,
And the anguish of the singer makes the sweetness of the strain."

TOPIC FOR JUNE 17.

ABIDING IN CHRIST.

(John 15:1-10.)

It is no dream or mystic fantasy, this thing of one spirit abiding in another spirit. There are those who have so much in common as to justify the saying: "They are one." Whenever we have so much in common with Jesus as to be able to say: "We are one," then we are abiding in him; and in proportion as we approximate toward such unity, in that degree we live in him. Abiding in Christ, union with him, that is the greatest thought in Paul's writing.

Such union with the Master supplies us with needed companionship. We are not made to be alone. It is needful for us to have association with others. But some may be denied the congenial companionship they need, so far as people are concerned. For such there is a Friend that sticketh closer than a brother. It is possible for every one of us, as it was for ancient Abraham, to be called the "friend of God." In short, we may have such companionship with Christ as to be one with him, abide in him.

From such union will come strength. If Christ be for us, who can be against us? If he is within us we shall be strong. It is said that God with one man is a majority; but God within one man is almighty.

There will also result calmness. Those thoughts and fears and tempests that perturb us can be stilled and quieted by his spirit within us or ours within him, which amounts to the same thing. It is calmness that Matthew Arnold asks for most of all.

"This is the curse of life that not
A nobler, calmer train
Of wiser thoughts and feelings blot
Our passion from our brain.

But each day brings its petty dust
Our soon choked souls to fill,
And we forget because we must,
And not because we will."

It is through the rush of this world's business that we forget our lowest selves, and not through the indwelling calmness of great and noble thoughts inspired by the presence of Christ in our hearts.

Abiding in him will also bring us content; peace, sweet peace, flowing like a river. After all, where is the need for worry, when one lives with such a character as Christ's? There are those with whom to live in the same house is an abundant blessing. Surely, with such a great, kindly, gentle one as he in our homes, we need seldom be unhappy and ill at ease. If we are with him, we would not envy others who are with the crowds, with wealth, with fame, with pleasure. He is enough. To have him in us is to be able to say with Paul: "I have learned in whatsoever state I am, therein to be content."

Yes, and many other things will come to us if we abide in him. Seek first his kingdom and his righteousness and other things—many other things—will be added unto us. What spiritual gift do you earnestly desire, fellow-Endeavorers? Abide in Christ and it will come. Is it gentleness, kindness, long-suffering, a pure heart, righteous thoughts—any or all of these? Abide in him and the thirst will be quenched.

CONDITIONS OF CHRISTIAN GROWTH.

By F. D. Power, Director.

(In two articles—Article II.)

Unfolding the divine Word in its many beauties and helps, we find prayer instituted as a means of growth in divine life. Our Lord taught his disciples to pray (Matt. 6:9). The apostles taught the church to pray without ceasing; to pray always with all prayer and supplication in the Spirit, and to watch thereunto with all perseverance; to come boldly to the throne of grace, that they might obtain mercy and find grace to help in every time of need (Eph. 6:18; Heb. 4:16).

The kingdom of Christ began in a prayer-meeting and the early disciples continued steadfastly in prayers (Acts 1:14; 2:42). All great onward movements of the church started in prayer. "Pray ye the Lord of the harvest that he may send forth laborers into his harvest" (Matt. 9:38).

Paul, the greatest of Christian leaders, began his service praying, and over and over again appealed to the churches: "Brethren, pray for us, that the Word of the Lord may have free course and be glorified" (2 Thess. 3:1). Luther, who broke the spell of ages and gave the church its mightiest impetus since the days of the apostles, was a man of obstinate pleading with God. The prayers of John Knox were feared by Mary, Queen of Scots, more than the army of ten thousand men. Whitefield, Payson, Wesley, Judson, Livingston were all giants of the closet. As the church prays, the church grows. As the Christian communes with God, he becomes like God. As men and women frequent the banqueting house of the Lord evening, morning and at noon they become healthy, vigorous, aggressive, strong in the Lord and in the power of his might. Growth in piety and in power are not possible without the spirit of grace and of supplication. Prayer is the hand of God's child laying hold of the hand of his Father, lifting himself and being lifted into a serener atmosphere of happier fellowship and of nobler achievement.

Another means of growth is public worship. Meditation, prayer, education in the Holy Scriptures, self-examination, communion with saints are all brought to bear upon the soul as the sunshine and the dews of heaven upon tender and growing plants. The Holy Spirit through Paul counseled the Corinthians concerning the order of worship when they "came togeher in the church" and exhorted the Hebrews "not to forsake the assembling of themselves together" (1 Cor. 11:18; Heb. 10:15).

Here the church publicly confesses the name of Christ, sets forth her faith in his resurrection and proclaims his gospel for the conversion of the world. Here the ignorant and vicious are instructed and warned and the sorrowing are comforted. Here the Holy Spirit diffuses his sanctifying iufluence and gives foretaste of the deep and hallowed pleasures of eternity. Here intercessions and thanksgivings are made for all public and private interests and the principles of morality and religion which preserve society from decay, are published to all men. Here the obligations of state, neighborhood, family and individual life are enforced; barriers between rich and poor are broken down and the vital interests of piety, benevolence and patriotism are inculcated. What has so great a tendency to quicken faith, promote zeal, enliven devotion, elevate morals, build up men and women and little children in the likeness of Jesus Christ, and thus to advance the growth of the kingdom of God?

We become assimilated to the moral character of the object we worship. He that worships Buddha is transformed into Buddha, says the Buddhist. To the sacrifice of Hercules none were admitted that were dwarfs, and to the worship of Bacchus none that were sad. Odin and Thor, conceptions that were bloodthirsty and cruel, shaped the character of the Northmen, so that death in battle or by one's own hand alone could admit to the halls of Valhalla. Adoring a God of love and mercy, of justice and righteousness, men become just, righteous, merciful, loving. They grow to will what God wills, to love what God loves, to hate what God hates—to be like God.

Finally, the Lord's Supper as a means of growth is easily first among the public exercises of the Lord's people. An ordinance which is commemorative of the Lord's death, as baptism of his burial and the first day of his resurrection, it must be of precious moment and of invaluable service to the church. Waiting at the cross, crowded with memories of the dying love of Jesus of Nazareth, solemnly observing the farewell request of our great Leader: "Do this in remembrance of me," we must imbibe his Spirit and be transformed into his likeness. In all the world millions perpetuating his memory on every Lord's day in this simple feast must keep alive the flame of Christian zeal, impress mankind with the power of Calvary and mightily advance Messiah's kingdom. Hence the observance of this institution upon every first day of the week by the primitive Christians. The Lord's death and the Lord's resurrection; the Lord's day and the Lord's Supper; the Lord's house and the Lord's table were forever associated in the assemblies of the Lord's people. Departure from this order has been a great source of loss to Christianity, and with the restoration of this ordinance to its true position must come great gain in the growth of Christian religion.

Bible study, then, prayer, the public worship, the institutions of the Lord's house are means of grace and growth. Through these channels the gracious influence of the Holy Spirit are imparted. We do not have to make these conditions any more than the plant makes air, heat, light and moisture. All we have to do is to allow them to operate for our development, to place ourselves in a proper position to grow!

We are not born full-grown into the kingdom of Christ any more than the plant into the vegetable or the child into the animal kingdom. We do not spring through a miraculous conversion to the full stature of spiritual manhood. The very idea of growth is opposed to such a theory. The law in all the universe of God is progression. "Grow in grace." "As new-born babes long for the spiritual milk which is without guile that ye may grow thereby unto salvation." "Leaving the principles of the doctrine of Christ—the milk of babes—let us go on unto perfection." "I count not myself yet to have apprehended, but one thing I do: forgetting those things which are behind and stretching forward to the things which are before, I press onward toward the goal unto the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus. Not that I have already obtained, or am already made perfect" (Phil. 3:12 14).

Nor do we continue as infants in the household of our Father. The child that is checked in his development becomes a freak, a dwarf; the prattle of the babe that charms us becomes the gibberish of the idiot that fills us with pain. As men and women in Christ Jesus we are not called upon to be always confessing ourselves miserable sinners. A ceremonial religion demands this; a New Testament Christianity exalts us above this condition; an intelligent and faithful use of the means of grace must bring the happy consciousness of growth. "Behold, now are we the sons of God."

How are we treating these agencies? Does the soul hunger and we refuse to feed it? Does it pine for light and we keep it in darkness? Does it long for showers of divine favor and we suffer it to wither and waste? Does it ask for bread and we give it a stone?

There have been about twenty additions at Richland Center since Pastor D. N. Wetzell located there in December. All departments of work looking up. They had a combined fair, dinner and entertainment on the 16th anniversary of the church which netted $100. Missionary offerings are larger than heretofore.

E. R. Russell is stopping temporarily at Richland Center, and can be secured to labor for some of our Wisconsin churches.

G. C. Johnson, a Bethany boy, recently from Ohio, has been holding a meeting at Lynxville and has been given a call to the pastorate there.

F. W. Mutchler, who removed this month from Center to Arcadia, Ind., writes that he is now getting settled in the work there.

The west district convention will he held June 7-10 at West Lima. Delegates should send sheir names to Dr. B. A. Cole in advance that entertainment may be provided. The following preachers are expected to be present and are on the program: D. N. Wetzell, E. R. Russell, G. C. Johnson, Milton Wells, F. W. Mutchler, Julius Stone, A. W. Bloom and C. G. McNeill.

I visited the old Retreat Church last Sunday. They have had no meetings of any character for two years. They will meet regularly from now on. Sunday-school at 11 o'clock, followed by communion service every Sunday. Elder G. C. Johnson, of Lynxville, will visit them occasionally. At my visit last Lord's day we took up an offering for Home Missions which, though unannounced and a week late, amounted to $5.57. N. W. Marks was elected superintendent of the Sunday-school and F. E. Rutter, secretary. With these two men at this work this school is sure to succeed.

In my tour of the churches during the last month there have been four additions, three baptisms.

Obituaries.

OGLE.

Mrs. Orpha Ogle, whose maiden name was Hedrick, was born in Howard county, Mo., Dec. 20, 1832, and died in Maryville, Mo., at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Alexander Holt, May 18, 1900. She was married to Mr. Isaac Hagey when 23 years of age, and of this union there were born one son and two daughters. Being left a widow in 1862, she married again in 1869 to Mr. Wm. Ogle, whom she survived 24 years. To them were born one daughter and two sons. All of her children remain to mourn the loss of their dear mother. She united with the Christian Church some 30 years ago and died as she had lived—a Christian. Bro. A. W. Lawrence, of Maryville, conducted a short funeral service at the home on May 19, after which her remains were brought to Quitman, Mo., for interment. The writer took charge of the services at the grave, where a number of relatives and friends were gathered. We then laid her body away to rest in the hope of the resurrection.

N. ROLLO DAVIS.

MEBARG.

William Mebarg was born in County Downe, Ireland, near Belfast, Aug. 1, 1830, and fell asleep at 3:40 P. M., May 23, 1900. Bro. Mebarg came to America in 1850 and settled on the Western Reserve, Ohio, near Canfield. Here he obeyed the gospel under Calvin Smith. In 1856 he married Mary Whitefield, of Allegheny, Pa. She with one son and two daughters remain unto the present time. He removed to South Dakota in 1882 and settled near what is now Northville in Spink county. Here, although for 18 years disallowed church privileges, he remained true to the faith, lived a life above reproach, and dying, is honored by all for his integrity. We laid him to rest here at Northville at noon, May 25, 1900.

R. D. MCCANCE.

Clark, S. Dak.

POWELL.

Died, at her home near Hallsville, May 2, 1900, Mrs. Jennie E. Powell, widow of the late E. L. Powell. Her body was laid to rest by the side of her husband and son in the churchyard at Olivet, where for many years she was a member and an untiring worker in church, Sunday-school and C. W. B. M. work. This auxiliary failed, but Mrs. Powell still deemed herself a member of the general society, and through the years when she was near no society her loyalty never wavered and her dues were paid with unshaken interest. She was in the truest sense a devout Christian, patient and cheerful, teaching by example the lesson of a holy life. In her death her sons, the church and C. W. B. M. have sustained an inestimable loss.

MRS. H. B. LANSDALE,
MRS. J. P. GILLASPIE,
MRS. H. B. BUSH,
Committee Columbia Auxiliary.

RUSK.

Mary Lipka was born June 16, 1867, in Harrison County, Indiana. Died May 24, 1900 Age 32 years, 11 months and eight days. At the age of 15 she became a member of the M. E. Church; about two months ago she placed her membership in the Christian Church. In 1885 she married Peter Rusk. To this union two ceildren were born; both survive her, and father mother, three sisters and one brother mourn her loss. Funeral services conducted by the writer at the Christian Church.

Book Notes.

Our preachers and others are realizing that our Summer Bargain Sale is really a good thing, and they are taking advantage of it to fill up the empty places on their bookshelves. One preacher has just sent to us for a list of thirty-eight volumes. A great many others have sent smaller orders. We are offering an unprecedented opportunity for the securing of first-class standard literature at low prices. Our offers are not made to preachers only, but to all the reading public.

Our shipping-room presents a busy appearance these days—particularly about 4 P. M., each day. On one side is piled the packages to be taken by the express companies; on the other are the mail sacks filled with parcels for the post. Four men, and sometimes more, are kept busy wrapping and packing books to be sent out. From 8 A. M. until 5:30 P. M. this department is as busy a place as can be found in the country.

Our "Special Catalogue No. 22" contains, among other things, a number of offers of books for light summer reading—fiction of the best and purest. These are offered at surprisingly low prices. If you have not a copy of this catalogue, drop us a postal card and we will send you one. You cannot afford to be without it. These special offers of ours will not always stand. Take advantage of them while you may!

We greatly regret that we have not 500 more copies of Abbott's "Life of Beecher," which we have been selling at $1.00. Our supply is exhausted and we can secure no more to sell at this low price. We can, however, supply it still for the regular price, which is $2.50. Other of our special offers must necessarily be withdrawn soon.

We are receiving a great many requests for the little pamphlets containing sample pages (reduced) of "Silver and Gold" and "Tidings of Salvation," our two new song books. And the best thing about it all is that nearly every time we send out a sample we get an order. These two books are in the front rank, and easily sell on their merits. If you wish to know more about them, drop us a postal card.

"Christian Science Dissected" is proving to be a very unpopular book—among Christian Scientists. We have lately received two anonymous letters, evidently from followers of Mrs. Eddy, abusing us roundly for presuming to publish any criticism of Mrs. Eddy and her vagaries. Neither of these timorous anonymuncules had read the book. They went for us on the strength of our announcements of it in this paper. On the other hand, those who have read the book highly endorse it. Dr. Howard Crutcher, of Chicago, the famous surgeon, writes: "I read 'Christian Science Dissected' at one sitting. It is a masterly exposition of the sanctimonious fraud, and should meet with a wide acceptance. Rev. Bruce Brown, of Denver, says that it is the best work on the subject he has ever seen. The book will be mailed to any address for 25 cents.

The Christian Missionary Convention of Montgomery county, Kan., which met May 1-3 at Independence, was pronounced to be one of the best in the history of the county. The addresses and discussions were magnificent throughout the entire program. The reports from the churches were gratifying to all. Of the nine churches seven have pastors and the other two, Cherryvale and Caney, will soon be supplied. Reports showed 205 additions and one new church organized during the year. Arrangements were made to organize two this coming year, one at Liberty and the other at Havana. Certainly this report substantiates the facts that county co-operation can be made a success and that it is one of the best means of planting the gospel in new fields. S. W. NAY.

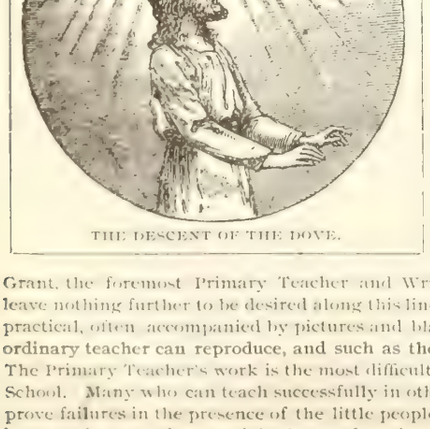
Our Young Folks gives special and most careful attention to the Sunday-school Interests, looking upon this organization as the strongest Working Arm of the Church, and the most effectual agency for teaching the Word of God to the young and bringing them to Christ and promoting their growth in grace and in knowledge.

1. THE BIBLE LESSONS.—Two or three pages of each issue of OUR YOUNG FOLKS are devoted to an exposition of the International Bible Lesson. The Scripture Text is printed in full, with copious Explanatory, Geographical, Illustrative and Applicatory Notes, also Suggestions for Teaching and Review, with carefully prepared Outlines and Blackboard Designs. The Teacher or Student who is in possession of a copy of this Journal will find himself or herself so fully equipped that no other lesson help will be required.



THE DESCENT OF THE DOVE.

2. PRIMARY HELPS.—The Helps and Hints for Primary Teachers, prepared by Mrs. Mary Wisdom Grant, the foremost Primary Teacher and Writer of the Christian Church, leave nothing further to be desired along this line. They are full, simple and practical, often accompanied by pictures and blackboard designs such as the ordinary teacher can reproduce, and such as the little ones can understand. The Primary Teacher's work is the most difficult of all work attempted in the School. Many who can teach successfully in other departments of the school prove failures in the presence of the little people, as to successfully lead and interest them requires special talent and equipment. Therefore the teachers of these classes ought to have the best help obtainable, and such help it is the province of OUR YOUNG FOLKS to supply.

Echoes from the Field.

Connecticut.—It requires 185 copies of OUR YOUNG FOLKS to supply our school this year, and then we are often short. We have taken it from the beginning, and could not do without it. Superintendent.

Pennsylvania.—Our school believes in having the best of everything without reference to cost, and therefore we always have an abundant supply of OUR YOUNG FOLKS and pronounce it the best published. Superintendent.

Michigan.—We are delighted with every feature of OUR YOUNG FOLKS which is now taken in our school and Endeavor Society. The sketches of Our Pioneers and Great Reformers are particularly attractive to the older people. Pastor.

Ohio.—OUR YOUNG FOLKS is regarded as a "gem of purest ray serene" in our church. We follow its Mid-week Prayer-Meeting Topics; our teachers rely on it as their principal aid in the preparation of the Sunday-school lesson, and our Endeavorers would be lost without it. Pastor.

Iowa.—We have never had in our school any other paper that has so completely satisfied us as OUR YOUNG FOLKS. Its exposition of the Lessons and Practical Suggestions to teachers, are particularly helpful. I should think that every Christian Sunday-school in America would be among your patrons. Superintendent.

Nebraska.—Our school has made free use of OUR YOUNG FOLKS in past years, but the demand has so increased that we must double our order for this year. It gives our teachers just such help as they need; helps to keep the big boys and girls in the school and keeps us all posted in methods of work. Superintendent.

Indiana.—Our school was a little late in introducing OUR YOUNG FOLKS among its teachers and young people, but it came at last and it is now there to stay. "No half-price offers," or offers of free copies of worn-out singing books, will be likely very soon to tempt us to exchange it for something else. Secretary.

Illinois.—Our Sunday-school has almost doubled in the six months we have been using OUR YOUNG FOLKS, and we should be very sorry to dispense with it. The Schools of our people, this country over, need just such a stimulus as this Weekly affords, and I truly believe that its introduction would be a profitable investment for all concerned. Superintendent.

Missouri.—At the beginning of the year an agent from another publishing house induced our Committee on Sunday-school Supplies, by marvelous discounts and free books, to substitute another paper for OUR YOUNG FOLKS The change is so unsatisfactory, that though the other is paid for for the year we have made up a club for our old favorite. We shall be wiser next time "Experience teaches a dear school," etc. Pastor.

St. Louis.—In this city, where Sunday-school workers have an opportunity to examine and make themselves familiar with the best helps and appliances published, and where they come in contact more or less with the foremost Sunday-school people of the age, OUR YOUNG FOLKS is the principal paper distributed and used by the teachers and older pupils in ten of our foremost Christian Schools, and circulates more or less in all others.

THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST

"IN FAITH, UNITY; IN OPINION AND METHODS, LIBERTY; IN ALL THINGS, CHARITY."

Vol. xxxvii. St. Louis, Mo., Thursday, June 14, 1900. No. 24

CURRENT EVENTS.

It is becoming more and more apparent that large cities must have larger legal privileges in the management of purely local matters. Home rule for cities is one of the rapidly approaching events of the future. As a reform measure it is rapidly coming into favor. In an article in the North American Review for June, Bird S. Coler argues strongly for a larger independence for municipalities, for commercial and other reasons. Two governments in a city—state and municipal—cannot exist without friction detrimental to the business and morals of the city. The state control of a city's local matters affords too much of a temptation to political bosses. The experiences of our larger cities have demonstrated that the state control of their local affairs is unwise and dangerous. The people of a city must hold the reins of government in their own hands in all matters pertaining strictly to the city. Under the present order of things there is too much machinery—too many chances for boodle. Things could and should be simplified. There is no reason why a city should not be run on strictly business principles, the same as any other business enterprise or corporation. There is no reason why there should be any politics in a city government at all.

We regret to be compelled to report that the condition of affairs in St. Louis in connection with the strike grows worse instead of better. This, however, was to have been expected as the result of the vacillating policy pursued by the governor in reference to calling out the militia to quell disorder and enforce the law. It required no prophet to foresee that, unless the strong hand of law was laid on the situation, matters must grow worse. Last Lord's day afternoon there occurred a riot on Sixth Street and Washington Avenue, near the barracks of the posse comitatus, which resulted in the loss of three lives and the wounding of two or three others. A procession of strikers was returning from East St. Louis, and at the point mentioned, meeting one of the cars of the Transit Company, one of the strikers hurled a brickbat through it. He was seen by one of the officers of the comitatus, who pursued him and caught him. Other strikers resisted the arrest, and in the melee three of the strikers were killed and another wounded. This most regrettable circumstance was the result of violating the clearest laws of prudence and propriety. This is no time for street parades of striking men. It is no time for hurling bricks at street cars. The people are in no humor to tolerate any act of violence, and the posse comitatus has strict orders to arrest any one indulging in such acts. Another man was killed in another part of the city who seems to have been an innocent bystander near a scene of disorder. There were several other casualties reported. The people of St. Louis feel deeply humiliated by these scenes of disorder, and feel that they could have been prevented by a little prompt and vigorous action on the part of those whose duty it is to enforce the laws and preserve order. All negotiations between the strikers and their former employers seem to have been broken off. The strikers have greatly injured their cause by not accepting a proposition from the Transit Company which many of our citizens believe to have been fair, and by resorting to these acts of violence. We have no doubt but that a majority of the strikers are opposed to such lawlessness, but it is an inevitable result of a strike, and is one of the reasons why strikes are unsuccessful.

Gov. Roosevelt's tenement house commission in New York City is confronted with some involved and perplexing questions, but it has bravely taken hold of its work. One of the difficult features of this work will be the restriction of landlords to the moral and sanitary demands of the problem in the construction of tenement buildings; but landlords must learn that their rights are modified very greatly by the superior rights of the community. One way for relieving the overcrowding of these houses in the down-town districts that will probably be recommended by the commission will be the enactment of a law securing low fares to and from suburban settlements during working hours, or to and from work. This would go far toward the discouragement of building tall, unventilated buildings, and such a law ought to be in force in every large city. Other phases of the problem to be investigated by the commission are the sweatshops, child-labor, playgrounds, sanitary and education questions. The commission has full power to probe to the bottom of these matters and their report will be looked for with interest by those interested in municipal and moral reforms.

To meet the growing business of the Great Northern Railway, its builder, president and master spirit, Mr. J. J. Hill, is having constructed a fleet of steamers for trans-Pacific trade that for size and carrying capacity, per steamer, will astonish the world. Instead of the ten thousand ton ships planned one and two years ago, ships having a carrying capacity of 20,000 tons have been ordered. The displacement of one of these steamers under full load will be 28,000 tons, or double the tonage of the Campania or Lucania. It will require from one to one and a half thousand loaded freight cars to load one of these steamers and these cars will require twenty miles of yard tracks, which are now being built in Seattle, Washington. The deck room in each of these steamers to be devoted to carrying freight is over five acres in extent. We have heard of the floating palace, but in one of these steamers we have the floating warehouse, elevator or freightyard. Mr. Hill evidently has faith in the future of our trade with Russia, China and Japan and is showing his faith by his works.

Affairs in China continue to assume a more serious aspect. The disclosure of the fact that the Chinese Government is in sympathy with the Boxers gives a significance to the movement of the latter that it would not otherwise possess. The war vessels of the United States, Great Britain, Germany, France and other European powers are gathered at Taku. The marines of these war vessels have been landed, and Captain McCalla, of the American war vessel, with 100 Americans, has landed and is in command of the marines. A message from Pekin to the admirals reports the situation as hourly growing more dangerous for foreigners. All those in Pekin have taken refuge in Legation Street, the approaches to which are surrounded by a howling mob of undisciplined soldiers, with cannon and bayonets. Meanwhile, the Empress Dowager was amusing herself at the palace with theatricals, while it is reported that government arms are being dealt out to the Boxers. Communications between Pekin and Tien-Tsin have been interrupted by the Boxers. The latest news is that the combined powers will send an armored train with the marines to push its way through to Pekin. It is evident that news of very grave character must have reached the naval commanders to cause them to send 1,500 men 80 miles into the interior, through a country infested by hordes of fanatical, blood-thirsty Boxers. This force is said to consist of 600 British marines, 200 American marines and bluejackets under command of Capt. Bowman H. McCalla, 300 Russians, 200 Germans and 200 Italians. It is estimated that it will take three days for this force to reach Pekin, as the railroad has been destroyed in places. Here, it is evident, is a very grave situation, and the outcome of it no one can see. It is clear, however, that the civilized governments owe it to their citizens, whose lives are in peril, to co-operate for their protection. If this shall result in the overthrow of the Empress Dowager and the putting in her place of a more enlightened ruler, it will no doubt prove a great blessing to China and to Christian civilization.

Later intelligence from China intensifies the gravity of the situation in the Celestial Empire. It is reported that the Empress Dowager has dropped all pretenses and is in open sympathy with the enemies of the missionaries and foreigners, and that the Mission property at Pekin, together with the lives of the foreigners there, are menaced by the hostile population which has the sympathy of the Empress. A most important piece of news, however, is a reported message to the people of the West, by Weng Tung Ho, the tutor and confidant of Emperor Kwang Hsu, stating that His Majesty, the Emperor, is convinced, from trustworthy sources, that the loyal support of many scores of millions of Chinese will be accorded to his proposals for putting an end to the state of anarchy brought about by the action of the Empress. In brief, what the Emperor proposes, through his tutor and confidant, is that foreign Powers, whose troops dominate the capital, shall remove the Emperor from the palace where he is a prisoner, depose the Empress and her present ministers, bring the Emperor Kwang Hsu to Nanking Wu-chang, or Shanghai, whichever the said foreign Powers deem to be the most suitable for the new capital of the Chinese Empire, under the new conditions; that the foreign Powers declare a joint protectorate over China, and undertake the task of governing the country through His Majesty, the Emperor. This, the message declares, would gain the support of the great body of the Chinese, would do away with the abuses which now exist, put the Chinese Government in sympathy with the foreigners and missionaries and would be in every way preferable to parceling out China among the different Powers. If it be true that the Empress has thrown off all disguise and is in open hostility to the foreign element, or that she is in secret intrigue with Russia, as is feared at London, this may be the outcome of the present upheaval in China. Should this be the case, it will no doubt greatly hasten the evangelization of China and her advancement to the front rank of nations. The authorities at Washington have directed Gen. McArthur at Manila, to forward, with all possible dispatch, additional troops to China to assist Rear Admiral Kempff in protecting the lives and property of the American citizens in that country.

The interest in developments in South Africa has been somewhat eclipsed by the sensational news from China. The chief center of interest at the present moment in South Africa seems to be Lang's Neck Pass, in connection with the operations of Gen. Buller. It seems probable, from the latest news, that the British now hold this pass and Majuba Hill. Meanwhile, the Boers, 2,000 strong, have succeeded temporarily in cutting the communication of Lord Roberts between Kroonstadt and Vaal. Lord Roberts is strengthening his forces in that region, while completing his plans for a northern movement in the direction of the new capital. It is not likely the Boers will succeed in holding any length of time their position on the railroad south of Lord Roberts, but it may serve the purpose of delaying the latter's forward movement for a few days. The Boers express their determination to continue fighting until the last. Whether this means that they will resort to guerrilla warfare, after there is no longer any hope of meeting successfully the British forces, remains to be seen. Since the foregoing was written a fuller account of the disaster to the British forces in the Free State shows that the Free Staters have captured a thousand British and killed in battle one hundred more. About twenty miles of railroad have also been destroyed. Lord Roberts assumed this risk of attack in the rear by his rapid march to Johannesburg and Pretoria and will now no doubt give his attention to the Free State before pushing his columns further north.

General Funston recently discovered a store of insurgent documents which throw some interesting sidelights on the situation in the Philippines. One of the most important of these is a paper from Aguinaldo, setting forth a plan for an uprising in Manila, in his own handwriting, in the Tagalo language, and dated January 9, 1899. The document directs that, when the word was given for the uprising, his "valiant Sandlihans," or bolemen, were to slay all American soldiers in Manila. The insurgents were directed to repair to the house-tops, whence they were to hurl down upon the soldiers heavy furniture, and any iron implements they might have, heated red-hot. The women were to have a part in this uprising, also, as they were instructed to have hot water in their houses, which was to be thrown upon passing soldiers. Boiling oil was also to be used for the same purpose. After this bolemen were to run through the streets, slaying Americans wherever they could find them. Other papers, or letters, indicate that an American consul at a Chinese port sold several shipments of arms to Aguinaldo. The recent capture by the native police of Pio Del Pilar, one of the leading insurgents, is regarded as an event of considerable importance, both because it takes this chief out of the field, and evinces the loyalty of the native police to the cause of the United States. General McArthur, now in command, expresses regret that the insurgent leaders do not gather an army which can be met and defeated, instead of pursuing the guerrilla policy, which they seem to have adopted. Gen. Otis has landed in San Francisco where his arrival was duly honored by the citizens and by the military forces quartered there. Rochester, N. Y., is preparing to give him a very hospitable welcome back to his old home. He has been promoted to major general in the regular army.

THE SPIRIT OF LAWLESSNESS.

Perhaps no graver peril threatens our country to-day than the spirit of lawlessness which is manifesting itself under so many forms and among so many classes of people. It attracts public attention more when it assumes the form of mob violence, in some of our large cities, in connection with a strike or some other social disturbance. But the spirit often manifests itself, even under the forms of law, or by the evasion of the law, where it is less noticed, but none the less dangerous in its effects. It may be said of this spirit of disobedience, wherever it exists, among the rich or the poor, as Paul said of the carnal nature: "It is not subject to law, neither indeed can be." But obedience to law is the fundamental condition of social order and of governmental stability. It is this that constitutes the distinction between the American people, as a whole, and peoples of other so-called republics, where insurrection and disorder prevail. Any increase among us, therefore, of that spirit of insubordination, which has proved the bane of other republics, may well excite alarm.

Let us notice some of the instances of this lawlessness in high places. For some time past the honest people of the country have witnessed the remarkable growth of trusts. We may admit that there are combinations of capital that are entirely legitimate; but when the aim is to control the products and prices in any given line of industry for the enrichment of the trusts, at the expense of the public, there is a violation at least of the very spirit of our state and national constitutions, and of the laws made in pursuance thereof. Laws have been enacted with a view to prevent these combinations, but it would seem with little effect. Other laws which, if enacted, might have proved more effectual, have been defeated by the influence of powerful corporations, brought to bear on legislators. All this, we need not say, is the spirit of lawlessness.

For a number of years the government has been trying to prevent certain abuses among the railroads in the way of discrimination in rates. For this purpose Congress has enacted an interstate commerce law, with a commission to regulate rates and prevent abuses. It cannot be said, however, that the measure has accomplished its purpose, because these powerful corporations have often found ways of evading the law to carry out their own selfish purposes. The effort in all these combinations is to destroy competition and to secure monopoly. It is well known to all observers that the liquor traffic in this country has defied all the laws intended to regulate and control it. It has shown itself essentially lawless and has trampled under its unhallowed feet laws which have been intended to protect the public and the innocent from its rapacious greed and from its disastrous effects. This has been so long continued that no one now expects a saloon to be run according to law. In states and communities where the sale of intoxicating drinks is prohibited entirely the traffic is carried on clandestinely against the law and in defiance of the moral sentiment of the community.

Is it strange that these examples of lawlessness among the rich, and on the part of great corporate interests, which have power to control legislation, should breed the same spirit elsewhere? These abuses and violations of law are largely responsible for that lawlessness which manifests itself in those deeds of violence and disorder which often paralyze the business of our large cities and bring disgrace to our civilization. There can be no adequate remedy for these social disorders that does not begin at the top and correct those public abuses which have brought disease to the whole body, politic and social. Let us take an illustration near home.

A few months ago the street car lines of St. Louis, with the exception of one line, went into a combination against the protests of the people and of the leading newspapers of our city. The corporation, however, was strong enough to control the city council and to secure the governor's approval. This was the first act of the drama. The next was a degree of oppression on the part of this syndicate known as the Transit Company, which its employees found to be intolerable. The greed of this new corporation had no respect for the welfare of its men, and imposed upon them so many hours of labor as to practically deprive them of any association with their families and a proper care for their own health. A strike was imminent, but a compromise was reached by which concessions were made by the company in favor the men. Meanwhile, the employees found it necessary to organize a Union. If their employers could combine their capital, why should they not combine their labor also? They did so, and a few weeks ago, feeling secure in their strength, they made new demands upon the company, some of which were, perhaps, just enough, but others of which, in the judgment of many of the people of St Louis, are unjust. The result was a strike, which has continued now for more than six weeks, greatly disturbing every department of business and of the social and religious life of the city. Not only have the people of St. Louis been greatly inconvenienced and suffered great loss, but the city has suffered in its reputation by scenes of disorder and of outrage which are a disgrace to modern civilization. Tracks have been blown up, wires have been cut, unoffending passengers have been assaulted and abused, innocent persons have been killed and property has been destroyed.

This is only another scene in the same drama, which had its origin in corporate greed. It is as much a violation of the law for these strikers to prevent other men from taking their place, by force and violence, as it was for the corporation, in the beginning, to purchase the votes for its charter, but not more so. If we deal with the latter, as we ought to do, promptly and sternly, we are under equal obligations to deal with the original and even more serious violations of law. The sheriff is now calling out a posse comitatus of 2,500 men to supplement the police force of the city in their efforts to enforce the law. These citizens are taken from their business, from their homes and families, to protect the property of a corporation which came into existence by fraud, and whose unjust policy towards its men, in the beginning, has produced this lawlessness and disorder. In the midst of this turbulence the governor of the state, the mayor of the city and the president of the police board are too much engaged in the game of politics to fulfill their obligations to the public. For purely political reasons, no doubt, the governor refuses to call out the militia of the state, and for the same reasons other officers of the law are lame in the execution of their duty.

The source of all this confusion, disorder and violence is the spirit of lawlessness: First, in the corporate greed, seeking its own aggrandizement at the expense of the public; secondly, in the inflamed passions of laboring men who have been carried to an extreme, and lastly, in the baser instincts of the hoodlum element, which infests all our large cities. The one remedy for all this lawlessness is to inculcate among all classes of people a greater reverence for law and order, the strict enforcement of law and the election of men of approved character and capacity to execute the laws, preserve public order, and maintain peace.

The disorder and bloodshed of last Lord's day, perpetrated by the strikers, one of whom threw a brickbat at a street car, and others of whom resisted his arrest by the posse comitatus, resulting in three men being killed and others wounded, will perhaps impress on both the governor and citizens of St. Louis, that the one supreme duty of the hour is to enforce the law, put down rioting and punish the rioters. Nothing else is in order until this is done.

We are sorry that our esteemed neighbor, the Central Christian Advocate, has been removed from St. Louis to Kansas City. We regret still more, however, that the same Conference which voted to change the location of the paper also decided to change its editorial management. Dr. Jesse Bowman Young has shown himself to be not only a capable editor, with a high ideal of what a religious journal should be, but a courteous Christian gentleman of lovable character, with whom it is a pleasure to associate. We have had no better religious exchange than the Central Christian Advocate, and we do not know its superior in all the Advocate family. We learn from the last issue of the paper under the editorship of Dr. Young that his paper was objected to because it was of a too high order of literature, that its editor was too tolerant of higher criticism, etc.—charges which have a familiar sound about them, unfortunately, and which, in this instance, were believed by enough people having a voice in the matter to result in a change of editorial management. Our highest wish for the paper is that its new editor may hold it to the high standard of journalism which it attained under Dr. Young.

Hour of Prayer.

NOT WEARY IN WELL-DOING.

(1 Cor. 15:51-58; Gal. 6:9.)

(Uniform Midweek Prayer-meeting Topic, June 20.)

CENTRAL TRUTH: In religion, as in every other great interest in life, it is fidelity, persistency and patient continuance in well-doing that wins success.

The Christian life has its seasons of discouragement as well as its periods of joy and of exultation. There is, perhaps, more need for patience in Christian work than in any worldly enterprise. One of the most common sources of discouragement is the apparent lack of results from our labors. We labor with zealous care to promote our own spiritual development, or that of one very dear to us, or of a congregation, it may be, and we see for a time no visible results. These are the moments of trial. This is a severe test to our faith.

It is at a time like this that we need such encouragement as the texts above cited furnish us. The first passage is a conclusion drawn from the apostle's great argument on the resurrection. Christ, he argues, has risen from the dead, and we also, in due time, shall in like manner be raised or changed from the mortal to the immortal, and death will be abolished. "Wherefore, my beloved brethren, be ye steadfast, immovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, forasmuch as ye know that your labor is not in vain in the Lord."

This is the very thing that we sometimes fear—that all our labor in the Lord is without practical results, and therefore in vain. We ought to learn, however, from this and other passages, that no earnest prayer, no sincere effort put forth in the Master's name, has ever been in vain. This is the divine assurance, and it is one that we sorely need in our Christian work. Our vision is too dim, oftentimes, to see good resulting from our labors, but at such times we must walk by faith and rest on the divine assurance that our labor in the Lord is not in vain.

It is likely that the churches of Galatia were discouraged from some cause. Perhaps the membership was not increasing as fast as they thought it ought to, or perhaps the religious life of the members was not as fruitful in good works as the leaders had hoped for, and it may be that the apostle had received letters from members of the church describing this condition of things and telling Paul that the outlook for the churches in that region was very discouraging. We know, indeed, that some who had begun well had been turned aside by false teachers who followed in the wake of Paul and strove to undo his work. All this looked very discouraging, and to persons of weak faith it might have had disastrous results but for such timely admonition and encouragement as the apostle gave them.

He had been telling them to sow to the Spirit and not to the flesh, for to sow to the flesh was to reap corruption, while to sow to the Spirit was to reap life everlasting.

Then he adds: "And let us not be weary in well-doing; for in due season we shall reap if we faint not." It is the waiting for the reaping time that tries the strength of our faith. We forget the experience of the husbandman, who sows his seed in the earth and waits for many a dark day before the glad harvest waves before him. It is often so in Christian work. The seed sown must have time to germinate and grow and ripen to harvest. We may rest assured, however, that if we sow good seed in good soil we shall, by and by, in due time, reap the harvest.

We need this lesson in our homes, in the spiritual training of our children; we need it in our Sunday-schools and Junior Societies, where we must lovingly sow the seed of truth and wait for the coming harvest; we need it in our churches, where the faithful pastor sows in season and out of season the good seed of the kingdom, and often must needs wait long before he sees the result; we need it in our missionary work, for often must the missionaries sow the gospel seed in the hearts of those pagan peoples and wait long years for the harvest of souls, and even when conversion takes place, the spiritual growth is necessarily slow in most cases, and the missionary must be patient.

The thing we need to assure ourselves of, in all these cases, is that we are working with the Lord, that we are both teaching and living the truth and following up our efforts with earnest prayers, and the rest we can leave with God. His Word shall accomplish that whereunto it is sent. Our labor in the Lord is not in vain. If we continue patiently in well-doing we shall reap in due time. These are divine assurances. Let them encourage our hearts and strengthen our hands as we go forward in our Christian work.

Let us not close this lesson, however, without an admonition to be faithful in the sowing. In the early morning, at the noon time and in the dewy eve let us broadcast the precious seed. Or, if we cannot broadcast it, let us drop it quietly into single individual hearts and follow it with our prayers. We must be sowers if we would be reapers, and we must sow to the Spirit if we would reap everlasting life. It is not only true that we reap what we sow, but we shall reap in proportion as we sow. He that sows bountifully shall reap bountifully, while he that sows sparingly shall reap sparingly.

PRAYER.

O God, our Father, we thank Thee that Thou hast called us to be colaborers with Thee in making this earth a garden of the Lord. We thank Thee for the truth sown early in our own minds and hearts by parents and teachers, and for whatever fruit has appeared in our lives. We pray that we may be sowers of good seed in the hearts of others, and that having sown the seed, we may have patience to wait for Thee to grant the increase. We thank Thee for the assurance that our labor in the Lord is not in vain. Help us, then, to be more faithful workers with Thee here, sowing to the Spirit, and in the end reaping everlasting li through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen!

Editor's Easy Chair.

As the mercury climbs the tube, these June days, the fancy of young and old lightly turns to thoughts of cool, sequestered spots, of some "boundless contiguity of shade," of mountain heights or ocean beach, or of any place that promises rest from the intensity of summer heat, direct and reflex, and an environment furnishing the most striking contrast with city life. Some of the most effective brain toilers of the past and the present have been able to carry on their literary labors or bear their business burdens by taking a month or so off sometime during the year for vacation, or at least a change of scenery and of work. It is estimated that the working period of man's life has been lengthened out at least ten years in modern times and this is, perhaps, to be attributed more to the custom of annual vacations than to any other one thing. Our advice, therefore, to our readers, and especially to those who are the hardest workers, has always been, with all their gettings, to get a vacation when they can.

There is a good deal to be said, of course, for the "strenuous life," but it should be remembered that no life can be continually strenuous for any great length of time without breaking. There must be periods of rest, or else the life will soon cease to be strenuous, losing its fire and vim. Who knows but that Paul's periods of imprisonment, which were but enforced periods of rest, prolonged his life and usefulness? His was such an intense life that without some cessation of the outflowing energy and vitality, he must have been wrecked at a younger age than that to which he lived. We have no doubt but that sickness comes to us often as a blessing in disguise and gives the worn-out system a chance to rest, which it would not otherwise have. Most of us, however, prefer to take our rest in a different way. The least enjoyable vacation is an enforced one, which we take on the advice of a physician, who tells us that it is that or a perpetual vacation. Such was the first vacation ever taken by the writer. It were wiser not to wait for that.

While there is something, as already stated, to be said for what Gov. Roosevelt calls the "strenuous life," we are inclined to think that most people in this country need, more than that, what might be called the "Gospel of Rest" or of Leisure. We think this is especially true as regards the pursuit of wealth, or of social position, or of political honors. Most Americans are in too great haste to become rich, which the good Book assures us is not a wise thing. Many are in haste to be famous. This also is vanity. Others enslave themselves for one part of their lives, thinking to thereby purchase immunity from labor for the remaining part. This is bad philosophy. It is wiser to scatter our leisure along through life and not have too long a protracted period of toil, on the one hand, or too long a period of rest on the other. If we would not live so fast we might live longer, and even do better work while we were living. Too much hurry is as bad for work as it is for health.

There is danger, too, of mistaking noise and bustle, fretting and fuming, for work. What some people call "a busy life" is only a fussy life. Some good people do not get still enough to receive a message from God, who speaks to the soul in its moments of reverential silence. We keep up such a clatter that the "still small voice' is inaudible. What many of us need to cultivate is a capacity for being quiet, the talent for stillness when the soul can have its "flashes of silence." One of the good things about a vacation is that it usually puts us in a position where we can cultivate the grace of quietness, of silence and of reflection. True, one ought not to wait for a vacation to cultivate such graces, but the vacation season is a good time for "the hustler," "the mixer," together with the fretter and the fumer, to sit down and be quiet awhile and think of how many foolish things he has said and done in his day, and how grateful he ought to be to God and to all his friends that he has been permitted to live through it, and to learn, at last, the wisdom of silence, the value of solitude and the meaning of rest.

"Doctor," said a perfect stranger, as he sat behind us on the street car, coming down this morning, "is it true that your people have doubled in number in the last quarter of a century?" We replied that we regarded that as probably an underestimate rather than an overstatement of our growth. "Well," he went on, "that is what Dr. —— told us in his sermon last Sunday. He said many of the leading churches of this country had not kept pace with the growth of the population, that some of them, like his own, for instance, had gradually declined within the last year, and that the people calling themselves Christians are the only religious body that has made so rapid an increase in numbers; and the reason he gave for this was that while other preachers were given to preaching politics, theology, philosophy and a thousand other things, you people stuck to the gospel." We neither affirmed nor denied the truth of this statement, but we frankly admitted that sticking to the gospel was about the best way yet discovered for making converts to Christ. Fellow-preachers, if this minister of another religious body has given us more credit than we deserve, though we think his statement is generally true, as it applies to us, let us see to it that we deserve such compliments, even in a higher degree, in the future. We may and must have our philosophy, our theories and our speculative opinions. Every thinking man among us, as among other people, has all these, and he is the better preacher for having them. But let no one mistake any of these things for the gospel. Our business in the pulpit is to deliver a divine message to men.

Questions and Answers.

1. Are we—the Disciples of Christ—"open" or "close" in our communion practice at the Lord's table? If open, does the open extend to to all denominations who practice a form either of sprinkling or immersion for baptism?

2. If the answer be to all, then should the emblems be offered to candidates for immersion who have just made the confession preliminary thereto? If the answer be yes, then should there be any distinction between candidates who were sprinkled and those who were not?

3. On what scriptural authority is the general opinion based that baptism should precede the communion?

4. If there be scriptural authority for the position that baptism must be first, and it be correct that only the immersed are baptized, should we not deal honestly with the people and say that our "open" communion is meant only to extend to immersed believers in Christ? D. S. H.

Basic City, Va.

1. We do not use the words "open" or "close" to describe the Lord's table which is spread in our churches. The fact that it is the Lord's table and not ours settles that question. Because it is the Lord's table, we have not felt it to be our duty to prohibit or debar any who claim to be the Lord's people from participating with us in this memorial institution. This makes our practice what is usually designated "open;" that is, it is open to all who love the Lord Jesus Christ, and who have accepted Him in the way which they believe He directs. We, therefore, raise no question as to the "form" of baptism, to which persons present have submitted. The communion is their act and is a matter between them and their Lord.

2. There is a distinction to be made between those who are simply candidates for baptism, and those who have obeyed the Lord in this matter as they have understood it. We have never known any of the former class to desire the communion until after they submitted to baptism. Every earnest religious nature feels the necessity of openly confessing Christ and identifying himself with the Lord's people before participating in this memorial service.

3. So far as the Scriptures give us any intimation, it seems clear that those who participated in this ordinance, originally, were baptized believers. Baptism was the outward symbol of surrender to Christ and identification with His followers. It was perfectly natural that this open confession of and surrender to Christ should take place before observing this supper in memory of him.

4. It is always right to "deal honestly with the people," of course, and those who believe that persons having made a mistake as to the form of baptism, have no right to partake of the emblems in memory of Christ, no matter how much they love him and how faithfully they serve him, ought to be honest enough to say so. But there are not many among us who would be honest in making such a statement. Most of us, nearly all of us, in fact, believe that the Lord Himself would not forbid any who love Him and who are willing to obey Him, as far as they understand Him, from partaking of the feast in His memory. We believe that such is the nature of this tender memorial service that each one must judge for himself and not for another. It is not so much a question of a clear understanding—though the clearer our knowledge of God's will the better—as it is a question of a loving and loyal heart. Moreover, we believe that those who are in error as to the meaning of baptism may be more readily won to a better understanding of it by our not assuming to judge as to their fitness to partake of the emblems in memory of Christ's death. As soon as the believer becomes conscious that his obedience to the Lord in baptism has not been complete, his next duty, we should say, would be to complete his obedience to that ordinance, that his conscience might be clear when he came to the Lord's Supper.

A minister in the M. E. Church in our town recently made a statement from his pulpit that we—the people known as Christians or Disciples of Christ—have a creed, but would not admit it. What he had in his possession was the Christian System, by Alexander Campbell. Is that, in any sense, the creed of our brotherhood? A. J. Crews.

This question comes up with great regularity, and has uniformly been answered in the negative, but it does not seem to satisfy our brethren, particularly in the Methodist Church. In the preface to the second edition of the Christian System Mr. Campbell says: "We have added a few essays on church order as a part of the Christian system; thus endeavoring to give to the book all the chances of being as useful as possible to those who are desirous of a perfect understanding of our attainments and Christian knowledge. We speak for ourselves only; and while we are always willing to give a declaration of our faith and knowledge of the Christian system, we firmly protest against dogmatically propounding our own view, or those of any fallible mortal as a condition or foundation of church union and co-operation. While, then, we would, if we could, either with the tongue or pen, proclaim all that we believe and all that we know to the end of the earth, we take the Bible, the whole Bible and nothing but the Bible as the foundation of Christian union and communion. Those who do not like this will please show us a more excellent way."

We do not understand how it would be possible to give a more direct and authoritative denial of the charge made by our religious neighbors that this work of Mr. Campbell is, in any sense, an authoritative creed or basis of fellowship. Neither Thomas nor Alexander Campbell objected, in the beginning, to creeds as statements of doctrine or opinions for the information or edification of the people; they discarded them as bonds of union and communion, and as bases of Christian fellowship. This position has been consistently held among us from the beginning, and the passing years have only confirmed its wisdom.

Current Religious Thought.

In an article in the New York Observer on "How to Spend Summer Days," "Augustus" gives the following advice, which may be found helpful, not only to vacationists, but to those who remain at home:

Last week the "Augustus" letter urged Christian people to keep up their religious habits in summer, when they went away from home. It may not be amiss now to say a few words about summer reading and occupation. It is taken for granted that all will do some reading in the summer months, but much observation at summer resorts and in country homes leads me to think that newspapers and novels form the bulk of the literature which occupies the leisure hours of Americans in summer. It is true that summer schools and religious conventions are not open to this criticism, but it is to be feared that these are almost the only exceptions to a course of mental indolence or dissipation which is unfavorable to intellectual culture or soul growth. Hot weather is not favorable to continuous study, and the usual rural and seaside environments are often such as to make it difficult to systematize life, and give regular time and place to mental discipline and training. Moreover, this is not the object for which one goes into the country. But a place may be found for the reading of good books without trenching upon recreation at the golf course or the tennis court, or interfering with pleasant and healthful pursuits and excursions, which are a part of the enjoyment and profits of a summer away from home cares and labors. There are early mornings, before the dew has dried from the grass, when the air is still fresh and cool, and then what better time is there for sitting on a shaded piazza, while the birds sing and the air is full of fragrance, with a healthful and stimulating book? The daily paper has not yet come with the letters from the mail, there is no pressing demand from the office or the household, and friends have not begun their daily calls. An hour's devotion to good reading at this time, through a summer's outing will nourish and strengthen the mind, and help towards a serene and contented disposition through the whole of each day. Some findthe noon hour, after exercise a good time for literature, but if exercise has been active the mind is apt to share in the relaxed condition of the body after effort, and one is more disposed to dream over a story or a newspaper than to read anything solid or instructive.

Then there are rainy days, and windy days, when out-of-door amusement is impossible or unattractive. Instead of occupying these times with cards and gossip and novels, it is better to devote a part at least to good reading. Every intelligent person will find more real pleasure in such a course than in the desultory and aimless occupations which are so often taken up to pass away the time. Each one knows his own taste and mental inclinations, and many country towns have now excellent libraries where standard literature can be obtained. There are a large number of books published nowadays upon nature and natural objects, upon birds and fishes and insects and flowers, upon the sky and the winds, upon different regions of country, the races of mankind, and their development, upon sociology and ethics and religion, which are easy to read and useful to think about. Some of these may be specially adapted to the locality where one is sojourning, and may fit into excursions and explorations of flood and field

A dear friend who loves nature, and also loves literature, and more than either loves God, has thus become acquainted with the birds of the air and the flowers of the field and the rocks of the mountains, including their gems and crystals, with the shrubs and trees of glen and forest; and now that his recreation days have led him to seashores and ocean resorts, the fishes of the sea, the crustacea and corals, and seaweeds are the objects of his observation, the sources of his entertainment and the subjects of his study. Tides and winds, sun, moon and stars, are all his friends and companions, as he sails his yacht over the sea, and when she is anchored in the harbor his library of selected books helps him to continue in the line of his chosen recreations and pursuits.

Early rising is a good thing in summer and gives one the best part of the day for thought and mental culture. But if one rises with the sun for such a purpose, he should rest and perhaps sleep for an hour or two at midday, as the Spaniards do, whose "siesta" is as regular as their meals and quite as important to health and comfort.

HARVEY W. EVEREST.

I. N. M'CASH.

In the short history of the Bible Department of Drake University three of its five deans have ceased from their labors. A. I. Hobbs and R. T. Mathews have been followed by H. W. Everest. Conspicuous alike for ability, fidelity to all educational interests and prominent in the affairs of the brotherhood, these men differed widely in characteristics. Doubtless the teacher by instinct and the more versatile writer among them was Dean Everest.

He was the well-equipped, all-around educator. He rode no hobbies. His wide range of information, his studious habits and careful mental discipline prepared him admirably for thorough, conscientious treatment of any subject. He was an instructor, not a debater; and his place was in the classroom and councils of his brethren, not in the fray. He was the friend of every enterprise, having for its aim and promise the enlightenment and Christianization of the people. The cause of education with him ranked next to Christianity.

Harvey W. Everest, A. M., LL. D., was a native of New York, born at North Hudson, May 10, 1831. His parents were of that sturdy intellectual New England stock which gave a reproduction of these qualities in their son. He attended the public school of North Hudson and began his career as an educator by teaching a summer school in his own neighborhood when but sixteen years of age. The removal of his parents to the now famous Western Reserve of Ohio, gave him the educational advantages offered in the following schools which he attended in order: Geauga Seminary, Western Reserve Eclectic Institute, now Hiram College, Bethany and Oberlin Colleges, all Ohio institutions, except Bethany in West Virginia. At Hiram he was tutor while pursuing his classic studies, and upon his graduation from Oberlin returned, as its head instructor—the successor of James A. Garfield, his former associate and friend.

In 1864 he accepted the presidency of Eureka College and served until called to the pastorate of the Church of Christ at Springfield, Illinois, eight years later. A professorship was offered him in Kentucky University, in 1872, which was taken and filled two years. He returned to Illinois, one year as pastor of the church at Normal and then as president of Eureka College for the second time. This institution owes to Dean Everest its life and breadth of influence. To him more than to any other man is due the uniting of the factions created at old Abingdon. Through these periods, while president, young men and women were trained, many of whom have attained eminence as Christian workers. Butler University, at Indianapolis, Indiana, was opened to him in the spring of 1881, which he entered and served as its president until 1886. In that year a land syndicate organized Garfield University at Wichita, Kansas, and Dean Everest was chosen its chancellor. He was instrumental is raising the one hundred thousand dollar endowment, provided an excellent curriculum, met the conditions upon which the university was to become the property of the brotherhood; but the syndicate failed in its financial obligations, never completing the building and removing incumbrances so it could become the property of the brotherhood. Through no failure of his the university closed its doors in 1889 and its chancellor became the pastor of the church at Hutchinson. A great sorrow came into his life in the loss of his devoted and accomplished wife, while ministering to that congregation.

In 1891 he was made president of the Southern Illinois Normal School at Carbondale. Four years of hard labor, both as instructor and lecturer in that institution, told on his health and the physical decline began which ended in his death. He was married the second time to Mrs. Jennie Rodgers, of El Paso, Illinois, a woman of refined culture and a noble companion for this great man. He was secured for the last place in which he served, as dean of the Bible Department of Drake University, in 1897.

By his first wife, three sons, Claude H., Jean K. and Herbert H., were born; the first two of whom live at Oklahoma City, Okla., while the youngest resides in Texas.

In reviewing his whole life there can be found no reproach upon his character, no just criticism of his spirituality, scholarly attainments and wonderful faithfulness. A keen intellectual discernment, logical, concise yet considerate of the feelings of those who differed from him, won and held friends for him throughout his whole life. He made large contributions, in his educational work, pulpit and writings, to the plea for the union of God's people in Christ upon the one foundation.

As an author, his "Divine Demonstration" is a text-book on Christian Evidences in our colleges. The two more recent works, "Science and Pedagogy of Ethics" and "The New Education," rank high as literary and philosophical productions. His articles on various phases of Christian doctrine, in our religious weeklies and periodicals, have ever commanded the closest attention and warmest admiration from all classes of readers. He was clear in his thinking, simple and apt in illu tration, and withal there was a breeze of freshness in the manner in which he presented his thoughts that lent a charm to all he wrote. As a lecturer he was confined to religious and educational themes, but was sought for addresses from Mississippi to Michigan and from Pennsylvania to Colorado.

As a preacher he was didactic, not oratorical, but there was no lack of power to hold in closest attention his audience. There were occasions when his diction was lofty, his imagery beautiful and the effect sublime. His congregations always grew in knowledge of the Scriptures, spirituality and the grace of God under his instruction. He seemed to be cold and wanting in heart-power to those who did not know him well; but it was only seeming, for he was tender-hearted, broad in sympathy, genial and companionable. As a man his life was transparent and so consecrated to the work of the Master that many will rise up and call him blessed.

The funeral services were held in the University Place Church of Christ, May 23, and the sermon preached by its pastor. Chancellor Craig, Dean Haggard and H. O. Breeden took part in the obsequies. A great audience and rich floral offerings showed the love of many for him. His grave was made in Woodland Cemetery, where others who have labored in Drake University now sleep. As the years come and grow old, children and grandchildren of his students will receive their education in Drake University and make their pilgrimages to this noble man's grave. So sleeps one of our best known thinkers, writers, educators; one who was considered conservative, but whose mind was ever open to the newest thought, and who investigated for the sake of the truth every suggestion from every source. He loved the truth and the truth made him free. The brotherhood have a rich heritage in his name, and add another to the dark roll of its pioneers and heroes. God bless his memory.

DR. GREEN AND THE PROGRESS OF THEOLOGY.

HERBERT L. WILLETT.

In the Christian Evangelist of April 19th Bro. T. P. Haley calls attention to an article which appeared in the issue of March 29th, referring to the life and work of Professor Green, of Princeton. In that article it was affirmed that "with his death almost the last of his type of conservative scholars has disappeared," and also that "there is a striking parallel between the position of Dr. Green, the last representative of the older type of biblical critics, and Professor Shedd, also a Presbyterian, the last of the thoroughgoing kind in theology." Bro. Haley requests a fuller statement of the positions maintained in that article, and though it may be feared that the length of time elapsing between the appearance of his letter and this reply, necessitated by my distance from home, may make both the article and the reply seem like ancient history, I venture in spite of that fact to avail myself of the opportunity presented by his note to add somewhat to the former statement.

When one uses the words "conservative critics," he must remember that it is almost as elastic as the other much-used name, "higher criticism." It is quite possible to say that a scholar is "conservative" and mean by that his entire acceptance of the validity of the critical process, but his dissent from the extreme views held by others who employ the methods of criticism. On the other hand it may be referred to one who, while examining carefully the whole ground which the biblical scholarship of recent years has traversed, rejects all—or well-nigh all—the results reached by the great body of workers in this field. The indiscriminate use of the term is likely to render a statement vague and misleading.

For example, an assertion made recently by a certain Brooklyn preacher has appeared in various religious papers to the effect that in taking inventory of the leading biblical scholars of the world he had discovered that out of some seventy about forty or somewhat more were conservative. There is no doubt that with the broader definition of "conservative" this may be true. But in the sense implied by those who quote the statement, and perhaps even by the original writer, nothing could be more misleading, for the implication is apparent that this majority reject alike the methods and results of biblical criticism, whereas exactly the opposite is the case. In connection with this statement it is interesting to recall another, made some years ago by the same preacher, on receipt of Harnack's great work on the literature of the New Testament. Without reading further than the preface he observed that the author registered his strong opposition to the extreme views of some critics and forthwith wrote an article which went the rounds of the same class of papers maintaining upon the authority of Harnack that higher criticism was forever demolished. Yet, that very volume, if he had been patient enough to read it, would have shown the increasing strength of the work of criticism and the notable contribution which it was making to the vindication of the Word of God. All such heated, hasty and unweighed utterances are to be deprecated for the reason that they obscure the true issue by imposing upon the words a meaning which the facts do not justify.

It was to avoid this very ambiguity that in the article to which Bro. Haley is kind enough to refer it is clearly stated that Dr. Green was "almost the last of his type of conservative scholars." By that type is meant the scholars who reject totally the results of the higher criticism regarding, for example, the documentary character of the Hexeteuch, the growth of the Mosaic legislation as attested both by the documents and the history, the importance of the exilic and post-exilic periods in the religious and literary life of Israel and the legitimacy and value of those investigations of authorship and date which have illuminated many obscure parts of the Old Testaments while modifying to a greater or lesser degree conclusions held at an earlier time. The mere indication of the fields traversed, of the utterances interpreted, of the problems solved and of the difficulties removed in the progress of critical work would far surpass the limits to which this article must confine itself. Nor is it a question solely of details. These must, to be sure, approve themselves to every candid student. But the fundamental question is: Do the Old Testament books raise problems which are capable of solution by the application of the principles of biblical criticism? If so, are the answers to these problems likely to confirm or disprove the claims which the Bible makes for itself? The type of scholarship to which Dr. Green belonged denied that there were any such problems, or that if there were the critical method threw light upon them. The vast majority of biblical scholars part company with him on this issue while yielding nothing to him in loyalty to and reverence for the Word of God. These scholars—and I speak now of the conservatives who believe in the inspiration of these documents in a divine revelation to man mediated by Jesus Christ and in the miraculous elements in his life as well as in those of the prophets of Israel—may differ as to the problems which the Old Testament presents and as to the extent to which the higher criticism is competent to resolve those problems as well as regarding what may be considered the legitimate results of the critical method, though it could be easily shown that there is a large degree of unanimity in the results reached; but from the position already indicated as occupied by Dr. Green and his school, Christian scholarship, both in America and Europe, has departed never to return, for that position is seen to be neither tenable nor desirable.

The second part of the inquiry of Bro. Haley has grown, I think, out of a misapprehension of the point made in the article referred to. It was not my contention that the older theology or the existing theology which is so largely subtended by the Calvinistic view of things against which the Disciples of Christ have ever protested was based upon a particular theory of the Bible, though I believe this to be true. What I was concerned to point out was the practically simultaneous passing of the two men who had stood respectively for extreme conservatism in biblical study and extreme Calvinism in theology. That a particular view of the Bible will give form and color to our views of theology is usually true, though it is quite possible for men to adopt rational views of God and salvation while holding outworn theories of the Bible; or to reach firm and enlightened ground in biblical study while still shackled by creed formularies of an earlier age. Yet, the application of the same divinely given faculties to the problems presented both in biblical and theological fields is, under the guidance of the Spirit of God, sure to issue in a broader view and a larger faith. It would require, not only greater space, but the pen of a more competent student of systematic theology to point out these relations and results. But this fact at least was emphasized in the article: that the results of the higher criticism are already becoming the foundations of a new biblical theology, i. e., a careful study of the different portions of Holy Scripture in the light of the time in and dispensation under which they were uttered in order to a more accurate apprehension of the progress of divine revelation and the particular contribution of each prophet or apostle to the total body of revealed truth with the resulting clearness of view which comes from right division of the Word of God. This is the task of which Mr. Campbell felt the necessity and to which he devoted so much of his life; it is the work to which, consciously or unconsciously, the Disciples of Christ have contributed, and is to-day recognized as the work of biblical scholars. Some of the most notable books of our time have been upon the various phases of biblical theology. This in turn must serve as the foundation for a more satisfactory doctrine of God than was set forth in the theology which is now passing away, and to whose demolition we, much as any religious force of the age, have contributed. The outlines of the new and truer Dogmatic are only just emerging, but they give promise of a form and proportion more nearly adequate to the needs of the time and more closely corresponding to that fair structure, the Church of Christ, built upon the foundation of apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the the chief corner stone.

Gloucester, May 22.

STEADFASTNESS.

BAXTER WATERS.

The Christian life is one that requires constancy and perseverance. Victory is won at the cost of many struggles and battles, and it often takes many long, weary, forced marches to enter within the city walls. The virtue of steadfastness is often the one thing needful—the "one thing lacking." Many start out with bounding enthusiasm and demonstration in the Christian career, but "few there be who are are chosen" to continue faithful to the end. As, in response to Gideon's call, there were 30,000 who came up from all quarters of Israel's camp ground, but there were only 300 who stood the tests and formed that famous Gideon's band. What a vast army the followers of Christ would make if all remained true and faithful. Many thousands begin the Christian life and then grow weary, give up easily, and "in time of temptation fall away," allow "the cares of this world, the deceitfulness of riches and the lusts of other things to enter in and choke out the Word, and they become unfruitful."

Oh, how quickly we give way to the powers of sin. How easily are we enticed by alluring pleasures of love and ease. How quickly we grow cold and indifferent and fall beneath life's burdens and sorrows. We allow an evil heart of unbelief to enter in so that we falter before our tasks and fall feebly when the hill of duties rises before us. Our ears are dull when the call comes for aggressive movements, and we grow faint and weak. But weakness is never a virtue, nor is cowardice. Both are as unbecoming and as sinful in the Christian warfare as in real battles. Strength is the true mark of Christian character. Steadfastness in purpose is the ideal of a noble life. Determination is the key note of a successful career. If we have weak wills any small trifle will baffle us. If we lack determination, the least hindrance will give us an excuse to play with duty and trifle with virtue, and thus we lose our souls. But given a will the way will open. Determination makes opportunities, it finds duties. The determined, steadfast man sees the walls crumble before him; what he finds to do he does with all his might. If we are seeking a way in which to expend our energy, let us do it by heroically standing fast, by being immovable in the presence of temptation, by keeping ourselves unspotted from the world, by simply being faithful until death shall call us. Victoriousness is the crown of such a life, strength is its girdle and firmness its foothold.

THE LATE JOHN M. ATWATER.

FREDERICK TREUDLEY.

When a life goes out which has been as conscientious, strenuous, effective, noble, sincere, "easily to be entreated" and symetrical as was the life of him under consideration it is proper that a more extended notice be given to it than has already appeared, and so while waiting for some expression from a worthier hand I solicit a little space wherein to pay the tribute of ardent affection to one who like his Master, ever went about doing good.

My acquaintance with John Atwater began when I entered his father's family at a very tender age, and he was just upon the threshold of life. For more than forty years I have known him intimately, in a public and private way as a teacher, a preacher, a father, a husband, a son, a brother, a young man of promise and high hopes, an old man, older than his years, passing sweetly and almost solemnly to his grave, a friend of man and of God, amidst sorrow in hours of spiritual triumph, in a thousand ways and under many conditions. I have been able to know his inner mind and life, his aspirations, what he thought good, the objects he would pursue, the aims he would cherish, his counsel to youth. And now that it has all been closed and the volume of his life written, I say with great reverence that a sweeter life has rarely been bound up in flesh or a nobler one ever "fallen on sleep" to be gathered to its fathers. And I think now, as I thought when I stood over his coffin and gazed long and earnestly upon the face that had never turned to mine before except in love and fellowship, or indeed to any human face that I know of with other than the same feeling of universal love, that if such a life is not a victory and if the death of such a man is not as good as life, then we are indeed inextricably involved in sorrow and perplexity. And though the day of his burial was "cold and dark and dreary," and the rain fell and the grave in the beautiful Bedford Cemetery seemed forbidding as the winds and rains swept by, yet one could not but feel that here was only the mortal part, that it was going to join its kindred elements, but that elsewhere was he whom we loved and for whom we yearned.

I wish to speak of Mr. Atwater briefly under three different heads, viz.: 1. Some personal traits; 2. As a teacher and related to youth; 3. As a preacher.

SOME PERSONAL TRAITS.

At the funeral services I was impressed with one remark made by Bro. Moffett, the substance of which I repeat. Speaking of his goodness of life Bro. Moffett said: "I never saw or heard of, nor did I ever know of any one else ever having seen or heard of John Atwater saying or doing, at any time or place, anything that was not worthy of the upright life." This is my testimony: that forty years of intercourse such as I was permitted to enjoy failed to reveal a single deed or expression inconsistent with the most excellent life. I will not say there were no imperfections, but that is the most I can say. As a boy among boys, or a young man at work, in play, active, energetic, he was always the same and ever maintained a high plane of personal life. He was preeminently pure in speech and conduct, guarded himself against everything base, and always held himself to that course. I recall not a single expression of questionable color, not an insinuation of evil, all was good, stainless, calm. His soul was like his face, clean and pure.

There ran through his life a vein of humor which naturally bubbled over at every turn. What a story-teller he was, and how I recall among my red-letter days those when he used to come home and would take the little boy on his knee, patiently, kindly, and tell with infinite spirit and skill some long tale which he had read. And thus I remember the Ettrick Shepherd's Bride of Polmood, told with a skill which even improved the original. He was full of spirit, intellectually inclined, delighted in reading aloud, which art he was able to practice with great effect. He was accustomed to read aloud to his family, and I recall among other books his reading of Mercedes of Castile, and his interest in it. He was fondly attached to Dickens and wrote a lecture on "The Christ in Dickens," and I recall, when once in conversation I was bearing my testimony to the personal helpfulness of the character, Mark Tapley, his hand shot forth like an arrow to take mine in approval of my sense of appreciation of what he, too, thought was so good a creation. As a young man he was always looking up in the world; knew the good and pursued it, and led many in the same ways.

He was tenacious of opinions, and sometimes, perhaps, was harder to persuade than the occasion seemed to justify; still, if defect it was, it was the defect of a virtue, and his views were maintained most conscientiously and considerately. I would not say that he was as wide a reader as some are, nor that his reading embraced a range of sufficient extent for the highest development, but if not it was because he led a very busy life, a life devoted to both college and pulpit, whose weeks numbered seven days of labor, and his time and strength were most liberally given to those whom he served. To a friend he wrote some years ago: "I live in one incessant, pelting hailstorm of demands upon my time." I consider him as one who spared himself as little as any one I ever knew, that he might serve another. I never knew him to consider himself, his own comfort or personal affairs. He was an exceedingly unworldly man, caring little for money only in so far as it might minister to his highest needs, never for a moment thinking of it for its own sake, and fortunately, like his good father, who used to say to me: "My son, I have always prayed that God would give me neither poverty nor riches." He was saved from the troubles or temptations of either excess. His living faith seemed to save him from much anxiety on that point, and while he doubtless consulted prudence in due degree, he realized that his calling could not consider worldly advantage, and so he chose to limit himself in worldly things that he might abound in heavenly.

AS A TEACHER AND RELATED TO YOUTH.

As a guide to youth and an instructor he was singularly at his best. First, he had that peculiar power which belongs to great teachers, to forecast the future of his pupils, and to look upon them, not as callow youth whose weakness is subject to whim, caprice, folly, but as beings who are about to endure hardness and to perform work. Young people "in posse" are, on the whole, possibly more pleasing spectacles than young people "in esse," and the former insight was peculiarly his. The work of instruction was therefore adapted to his nature, and to what he accomplished students of his at Hiram, Alliance, Eureka, Ada, Garfield and Oskaloosa will bear ample witness.

It was a leading feature of Mr. Atwater's teaching that he made hard things easy of comprehension. To solve the most intricate problem, to disentangle the most involved question was a favorite practice in his class. While he undoubtedly placed excess of emphasis upon some minor points in teaching, he yet was one of the few great teachers with whom I have been associated, and his reputation would have been far wider had circumstances been different. He was one of those teachers whom the after life commends, and no tribute higher than this can be paid. He taught with great energy, effectiveness and solicitude.

He appreciated children and their cares. Once he said to me that he regarded Mr. Garfield as one of the best and wisest and most considerate of fathers whom he had ever seen with children. He was a man of great influence over youth, for he was possessed of much tact and wisdom, and felt an abiding personal interest in all students. His counsel or reproof was always given from the standpoint of the soul's native worth rather than of temporary advantage. I remember his saying to me: "Plan liberal things for yourself;" and his offering the following advice which I have often had occasion to repeat. It was concerning the propriety of taking special courses or short cuts in education, especially when there was doubt as to whether a young man could finish his plans. His counsel was to take regular work in a steady way on the ground that if so taken the student was practically as well off, and if time and taste developed the opportunity to go on still further he would be in condition to profit by the same

AS A PREACHER.

As a preacher Mr. Atwater was not of the evangelistic type. Primarily he appealed to the intellect, but was so clear and forcible in his expositions of Scripture as to reach the emotions through the beauty of truth.

He was a devout man. He reverenced the Bible and knew it, too, as few men know it. He knew it as his father before him knew it, of whose substantive and verbal knowledge I can say that one could scarcely begin a quotation which he could not complete, or propose a question he had not fully considered.

Mr. Atwater's chief defect as a preacher arose out of his virtue as a teacher. He desired to make his instruction so plain and comprehensive, and was so desirous to leave no ground for dissent from his conclusions, as to cause him sometimes to trust too little to the understanding of his audience.

Religiously and morally speaking, he was one of those who "dwell in light," and his sermons were pre-eminently calculated to win the assent and confirm the will of men and women.

He was a man well balanced in his judgments. Talking with him one day concerning questions pertaining to future punishment, I recall his saying to me in substance: "I do not dwell so much upon this phase of religious discussion because I prefer to set forth the goodness of God and the life and works of our blessed Savior, but I do not fail to urge these words of the prophet: 'Say ye to the righteous, it shall be well with him; and to the wicked, it shall be ill with him.'"

He often chose texts of Scripture involving some obscurity and made it a prime object of the sermon to clear away the difficulty and throw light upon the doubtful passage. There are people now living in the many congregations to which he ministered who remember sermons delivered thirty years ago. They can even now recall the text, the illustrations and the pleasure they felt at seeing a dark subject made bright and luminous.

He was fearless in his public utterances. But above all things he was solicitous for the welfare of his people, for he saw the humanity within. He was so human in his own being. And after all, here lies the basis of all influence, but where there is combined with it clearness of insight, wide knowledge, great experience, you have the man of power.

Mr. Atwater was a preacher of a noble type, whose methods and the secret of whose life might well be studied by all who seek to enter upon the same work. He was spiritual, to whom the things invisible became visible through faith.

In the early days his mind had become invaded by doubts, but over these he had triumphed, and I recall the peculiar fervor with which he stated publicly those experiences and how he could then break them as he could break in his hand a brittle straw.

How true it is that in the virtues of a good life doubts are dissolved and that "they who will to do His will shall know of the doctrine."

I doubt not my own feeling, aroused to warmth by so much good received at his hands, may lead to a certain sort of enthusiasm not tending to a perfectly judicious view. If so it is not an unpardonable fault. The writer's view is a kaleidescopic one. He called this man his spiritual father and was regarded by him as a spiritual son. He first went to college through his urging. He came into the church under his tactful, loving ministrations. He was the first guest who ever hallowed my home with his presence And for him I shall look among the first, next after his father, if so be I, too, shall be permitted to "pass through the gates into the city."

And what more may be said or done? Nothing more than to drop a tear of remembrance and in quietness and peace abide the years as they come and get ready for departure.

His friends may now view with peculiar satisfaction the quiet close of his earthly career. He had a few years ago happily reformed the broken lines of his family circle by a second marriage. When his health gave way and it became plain even to himself that the days of his greater activity were numbered he dropped his arduous tasks, and with mind undimmed and with spirit fresh and buoyant, and with the most perfect cheerfulness took up some lighter work, the occasional sermon or article for the press, read again with his loved companion his favorite authors, dwelt again upon the great doctrines of the Christian faith, restated in sermon his confident expectation of a future life, and thus "sustained and soothed by an unfaltering trust approached his grave." A favorite poem or a favorite author had the passage marked: "And so beside the stream I wait the muffled oar."

His long and arduous labors reduced his vitality to where his life hung in the balance as a flame feebly flickers from the wick—a breath and it was gone. A brief sickness and the weary soul, grateful for release, passed away. But then the sunshine, the life beyond, the thousands who who had gone before made happy by his healing touch, the coming of others whom he can now meet at the outward swinging doors, the blessed Master and the good Father of us all. For him the face of death became the face of love, and for us heaven is dearer because he is there.

The apostles proceeded on the theory that if men were converted, regenerated, discipled, evangelized in any city the church would come into existence as a natural consequence. But in these days the theory is reversed and preachers are generally proceeding upon the theory that if a church or churches be organized in any city the evangelization of that city will follow as a natural consequence. But experiences have proven that this is not the case. To build up churches in a city is one thing, and in this some have succeeded, but to build up a city in the church is quite another affair. The theory of evangelization followed by the apostles accounts for the fact that they nowhere commanded men to "join the church" nor evangelists to build churches. Here again we find a radical departure in these days of formality from the apostolic practice. Nowadays preachers put the emphasis on joining the church, whereas it should be upon conversion. A thoroughly converted man cannot be out of the church, whereas church membership is no longer a guarantee of conversion. Think on these things.

19th-20th Centuries National Religious Jubilee.

PRECEDED BY A YEAR OF PRAYER AND PREPARATION AND NATIONAL RELIGIOUS REVIVAL.

To the People of the United States:

By Prayer.—In churches, familes and private prayer—for descent of the Holy Spirit upon and quickening of the spiritual life of the people, that all Christians may be bound together in love, peace, and co-operative efforts to evangelize the world and raise mankind to a life of righteousness; that family prayer and Bible study may become the custom in every household; that the Sabbath day may be kept holy, and the Ten Commandments made the law of every life; that the family life may be purified and children reared in honesty, justice, virtue and love, and that our people may be raised to a higher type of citizenship and patriotism through the power of a purer and higher type of Christian life.

By Work and Preparation.—In the midweek prayer-meetings the spiritually minded and zealous members endeavoring to bring in the apparently indifferent, that by the power of the Holy Ghost all may be infused with the spirit and fervor of consecration to the Master.

By Education.—Through widespread study and reading of missionary histories and by lectures, that our people may become better informed as to the missionary efforts and successes of this and previous centuries, thus learning what greater things could be done in needed religious, moral, social and charitable reforms, if amounts commensurate with the work were given, not only of the abundant wealth of the rich, but also of the mites of the poor.

It is also desirable that ministerial associations, church clubs and other like organizations endeavor to arouse their respective communities and see that committees are appointed to carry forward the movement and arrange for suitable celebrations in their respective cities, towns and villages. Plans for such celebrations are not now proposed—these, together with the most advantageous time, will be decided upon by the local committee of each place.

It is believed and desired that commemorative projects already determined upon by some religious bodies, as also others which may be presented, will, with this one, assist each other, and also a general religious awakening. And as our aim is for the glory of God, we may well remember that "with God all things are possible."

A year's preparation of this kind will result in a higher standard of Christian life, manifesting itself in unparalleled enterprises of the 20th century for spreading the gospel, and thereby elevating mankind to the exalted station for which they were destined.

So desirable is a national religious revival, that the approaching centennial event is deemed a fitting time to make great efforts for its realization. It is therefore proposed to the American people, for their careful and prayerful consideration, that all required preparation by prayer and work, may be at once begun, believing that God will bless our efforts. Can this year be better utilized than by a national seeking for God's blessing upon our nation, churches and people?

Never has the world celebrated the outgoing of such a magnificent century as the 19th, or the incoming of one already so full of wonderful promises; especially of greater projects for evangelizing the world, and elevating humanity by application of a spiritual and practical Coristianity, to all phases of human life. The American people, so marvelously prospered in religious, political, industrial and intellectual welfare and in national honor, should rise to the full appreciation of their individual and national blessings, and celebrate this unusual occasion with thanksgiving and praise. Signed by many distinguished men in all religious bodies.

Our Budget.

—Missouri Sunday-school Convention in session at California this week.

—This is the time of the year for college commencements, and the voice of the college graduate is heard in the land.

—St. Louis strike still remains with us and the posse comitatus continues to grow. St. Louis presents something of a military appearance.

—How hard it is for the voice of reason to be heard in the hour of passion and strife!

—How hard it is for the voice of justice to be heard in the hour of material prosperity!

—The consolidation of the street car railways in St. Louis was accomplished against the wishes of a large majority of the people, and the methods adopted are believed to be corrupt. This was the first wrong, and is it surprising that evil results have grown out of it?

—The CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST believes that the striking employees of the Transit Company have made some extreme demands, but it also believes that they have been goaded on to this by unjust treatment—treatment that would never have been resorted to but for the monopoly which had been created by the act of consolidation.

—It seems to us that the easiest, quickest and fairest way out of the present tangle is to commit the whole question to fairminded, intelligent citizens, who will distribute the blame where it properly belongs, and do justice to all parties. If the Transit Co. is not willing to do this, it must be that it has a bad case, or that it distrusts the people for whom it is doing business.

—Was Children's Day observed or was it postponed? If it was not observed on the day named let it be observed later on. By no means let it be neglected entirely. If the day was observed and a worthy offering raised, let the amount be forwarded to the mission rooms without delay.

—It is gratifying to know that many Sunday-schools raised more money on Children's Day than they had expected. If all had done so there would be general rejoicing among the friends of the missionary enterprise. The good effect will be felt clear around the world. Those Sunday-school superintendents wrong the souls of the children who do not interest them in world-wide missions. To confine their thoughts and their sympathies to their own little and local interests is to impoverish their natures. Children should be trained up in the way they should go while they are in the Sunday-school. When they unite with the church they will continue to grow in the grace of giving.

—The Foreign Society is trying to enlist 4,000 Sunday-schools this year and to secure from them $50,000 in the support of this work. This is not too much to ask and to expect from such a large host.

—The Foreign Society needs a capable man for India. G. L. Wharton has felt compelled to give up the work on account of the failure of his wife's health. Some one is needed to take his place. Whoever goes should have health, ability, education, faith and consecration. No man is too good nor too well equipped for the mission field.

—Butler College brings a very successful year's work to a close with its commencement this month. The graduating class numbers twenty-two, and in addition there are three candidates for the degree of Master of Arts. The canvass of the Bible College for temporary funds, which has been carried on for the last few months, has met with great success, and the permanence of this work as well as its usefulness has been clearly demonstrated. It is under the direction of a separately incorporated board of trustees consisting of men prominent among the Disciples. The canvass for a permanent endowment of $100,000, to be begun next year, will start under favorable conditions and should be carried through without much trouble. The commencement program which we publish is of interest to all alumni of Butler College. The center of interest will be Commencement Day. The address on that occasion will be delivered by President Andrew S. Draper, of the University of Illinois. The doors of the college will be open to all visitors and all friends of the college are cordially invited to be present.

—Eureka College commencement exercises will be held June 10-14. The baccalaureate address was delivered on June 10th by President R. E. Hieronymus. Address to the Bible-school, June 11th, by Prof. B. J. Radford. Commencement address by Prof. W. D. McClintock, University of Chicago, June 14th. Alumni meeting address June 13th, by C. C. Rowlison, of Indianapolis, Ind.

—The Tuskegee Institute, under President Booker T. Washington, has closed one of the most successful school years in its history. Last year the commencement exercises were interfered with by an epidemic of smallpox in the state, but this year all was clear and the institute enjoyed an enthusiastic and well-attended commencement. Booker T. Washington is probably doing more for the salvation of his people and the solution of the race problem than any other living man, through this industrial college, and its success ought to be a matter of rejoicing with all Christian people everywhere. The negroes of the South are not alone in their obligations to Booker T. Washington; it is now almost a national obligation.

—The church in Faulkner, Kan., was totally destroyed by a cyclone at two o'clock on the morning of June 7th. We regret to hear of this misfortune to the church at that place, but glad that no one was killed thereby.

—We have received a copy of the souvenir program of the Missouri Bible-school Convention now in session in California, and find it interesting from start to finish. To our older brethren it will call up many pleasant recollections. The familiar faces presented give life and expression to the souvenir, and the outline of the Bible-school work in Missouri is a valuable piece of literature to those who have in any way participated in the work. We do not wonder that there is a large demand for this souvenir program.

—In another place we print an address to the people of the United States concerning the National Religious Jubilee, celebrating the outgoing nineteenth and the incoming twentieth centuries, to be preceded by a year of prayer and preparation. This call is signed by a large number of prominent men in various religious bodies, sufficient in number and reputation to give the call an ecumenical character. The enterprise is one entirely worthy of commendation. The statement that we should pray "that the Sabbath day may be kept holy" no doubt refers to the Lord's day, and in this meaning and spirit we can accept it. The statement, too, as to the Ten Commandments being made "the law of every life" must be understood as referring to the ethical contents of these commandments. With this understanding the phrase is unobjectionable, but it ought to be understood that Christ taught the highest ethics and that his teaching is the law of life for every Christian. The purpose and spirit of the call are altogether to be approved, and we are glad to give our heartiest editorial endorsement to this appeal to the people of this country. We trust it may be heeded and that the closing century may witness a widespread rivival of scriptural knowledge, piety and Christian activity.

—Errett Gates, we hear, has resigned the pastorate of the Hyde Park Church in Chicago. He has done a remarkably good work. When he went to the church, less than four years ago, the congregation was receiving $700 a year from the American Christian Missionary Society. The first year after Bro. Gates took the church it became self-supporting. It has received no assistance from the Home Board since. Last year the Hyde Park Church led our Chicago churches in its missionary contributions. A neat house of worship was dedicated last January which cost about $7,000. There is a mortgage debt on the property of only $2,000. During this time, and while carrying on this work, Bro. Gates has pursued his studies in the University of Chicago. He has completed the course required for the Ph. D. degree. What his purposes are for the future we do not know; but any church in need of a pastor will do well to address Errett Gates, 5526 Jefferson Ave., Chicago, Ill. His work, just completed, in Chicago, is the best recommendation.

—Of conventions there is no end. All kinds of organizations now hold conventions; from the conventions held by a single wholesale house for the benefit of their salesmen to the great religious and political conventions; nearly every profession and trade has its meeting to talk over things of mutual interest. The Sunday-school work, through its various township, county, state and international organizations, holds thousands of conventions every year, which brings together persons far and near to discuss plans for improving and uplifting the great Sunday school work of this country. Their value is becoming more and more apparent every day. People must get together and learn of each other if they would advance.

—B. B. Tyler's reference to the beginning of railroads in this country, in his letter this week, is a splendid illustration of the tenacity with which human nature clings to the traditions of their fathers. Every new movement in civil, social and industrial reforms are pooh-poohed in the same way. When one sees the extent and power of the conservative spirit in men it becomes a wonder that any improvement ever fought its way into existence. When will men learn to reason together about things and cease opposition to that which has every promise in it of a benefaction to the race, whether in the material, civil or religious domain.

—The Supreme Court of Michigan has recently decided that that state has Sunday laws which even baseball players can be made to respect. The ruling of the court makes it a duty of the sheriff to prevent the playing of baseball games on Sunday without waiting for a complaint from the people or an opinion of the prosecuting attorney. Some other states may have some laws of this kind equally constitutional if the matter was looked up. If they have no such laws they can have, for it has before been decided in the highest courts that Sunday laws prohibiting games that disturb the peace and other prohibitory statutes are constitutional and can be enforced.

—A new church paper has made its way to our table, called the West Virginia Christian. It is a journal of twelve pages, clear type, good paper and edited by J. A. Canby and J. W. Yoho, Cameron, W. Va. Among its contributers we see the names of F. D. Power, A. Linkletter and others familiar to the brotherhood, and the paper, on the whole, looks as if it had come to stay. That it is worthy of a place in our brotherhood, especially the brotherhood of the state of West Virginia, is conceded without argument and we bid the new journal a hearty welcome and a Godspeed in its career among religious journals.

—The few members of the Christian Church, living at and near Crane, in Stone County in Missouri, have just completed a new frame building at a cost of over $1,200, which does great credit to the community and especially to the few members who have been active in its erection. The building is capable of seating 400 people, is ceiled in the inside, well seated, with platform and pulpit, and is, in every way, a very commodious and creditable structure. Special credit is due to Brethren Douglas, Williams and Frank Darland, for their interest in the building and their liberality. On last Lord's day the editor of this paper was present and preached the dedicatory discourse at 11 A. M., and raised most of the funds that was yet lacking to pay for the building. He also preached at 3 o'clock in the afternoon, when the Lord's Supper was observed Other towns and churches were represented and the audience was by far too large to be accommodated. It is the purpose of the few members here to have a meeting soon, to gather in other members in the community, to organize their forces, to secure preaching for at least a part of the time, and to do more aggressive Christian work. Southwest Missouri is blessed with an abundant wheat crop and with a good prospect for all other crops. It is becoming a great fruit country, and its mildness of climate and healthfulness make it a desirable section of the country. We hope the young church at Crane will become a center of moral and religious influence in all the regions round about it.

—Central Avenue Church of Christ, Topeka, Kan., has been improving the interior of their church building. The Ladies' Aid Society is responsible for a new carpet, and their facilities for work are largely increased. One immersion recently. The pastor, Frank A. Powell gave a course of lectures on "Evidences" in May, which were well attended and accomplished good. All lines of work are reported in good condition.

—The program of the 14th annual meeting of Rutherford County Teachers' Institute, Tenn., to be held in Murfreesboro, June 18-23, under the direction of Prof. J. C. Willis, of the University of Lexington, is pitched upon a high intellectual plane. It is comprehensive, abreast of the day in the discussion of educational themes and strong.

—The Bethany Reading Course article, by W. J. Lhamon, in this paper, is devoted to the Ecumenical Missionary Conference, recently held in New York City, and is worthy of a careful reading. It is a splendid presentation of some of the important things of that important religious conference.

—On last Wednesday the assistant editor of this paper had the pleasure of visiting the convention of the 5th Illinois district at Virden and of delivering an address to a full house at night on "Public and Private Rights." Though we had not the pleasure of hearing all of the reports and addresses, we heard abounding testimony of the fact that it was a fine convention. The attendance was good and a deep interest taken in the welfare of the churches, of missions, and especially of Eureka College. We were glad of a resolution committing the preachers and churches to a more energetic work in behalf of Eureka College. The district is not yet thoroughly organized, but the work is to be carried on until all the churches in the district, 131 in number, shall be contributors to the state work and other missionary activities instead of 34 as now. While in Virden we formed many new personal acquaintances besides meeting some whom we had formerly met. The church at Virden, Paul Castle pastor, entertained the delegates elegantly and all returned from the convention encouraged and renewed in the spirit of their minds. W. W. H.

—The first issue of the Christian Century since the consolidation with it of the Christian Tribune contains a front page likeness of Peter Ainslie, the editor of the Tribune, who is now contributing to the Century. The paper makes a good showing in its mechanical appearance and in the ability of its articles. We wish it increasing success.

—The receipts for Church Extension continue to grow in a most satisfactory way. Recently Mrs. Eugenia Thomson, of West Plains, Mo., gave $1,000 on the annuity plan in memory of her husband, J. G. Thomson, and Mrs. E. D. Harvey, of Meadville, Mo., gave $500 on the same plan. The total receipts from October 1st to June 1st are $30,842.14.

—The church in Macon City, Mo., at its missionary rally, recently, raised $272.25, which it divided among the different societies as follows: To the Foreign Board, $40; to the Home Board, $75; to Church Extension, $25; to state missions, $35; to Ministerial Relief, $20; to Orphans' Home, $25; to local C. W. B. M, $10; to state Bible-school work, $25. This looks like helping every good work. R. B. Briney has just recently become the pastor of this church and speaks well of his predecessor, Bro. Nicoson, who left the work in good shape.

—Dr. Niccolls, of this city, preached a sermon last Lord's day on the strike. His text was peculiarly appropriate: "In those days there was no king in Israel, but every man did that which was right in his own eyes." In the course of his sermon, which was commendable throughtout, after expressing his sympathy with labor and laboring men, he made the following statement, which we cannot too strongly commend:

When men refuse to work, either wisely or unwisely, no one can question their right to do so. They are not criminals. But the moment they directly or indirectly conspire to prevent, by force, others from doing the work they refuse to do, they become offenders against society. They are in rebellion against social order and civil law, disguise it by what name you will. The right of one man to work, if he wishes to do so, is as sacred as the right of another man not to work, if he does not wish to accept the proffered conditions. When men confederate together to prevent others from doing the work they refuse to do, they are fighting, not for but against the rights of man. There is no difference between them and the most tyrannous monopolist that ever bankrupted his rivals.

This is the gospel for the hour, and it is high time that laboring men and strikers everywhere accept this self-evident truth. No man that reverences law and the rights of men will countenance or sympathize with any effort on the part of the strikers to prevent, by force, others from accepting the places they have voluntarily vacated.

—In a recent number of the St. Louis Christian Advocate, its editor, Dr. Palmore, pays the following eloquent tribute to two great and lofty characters:

In the light of the final day, when the real value of men and women shall appear in their true light, when America and the nineteenth century shall be weighed in the balance, the two people of the century who will wear the most stars in their crowns for having blessed the most people in their day and generation will doubtless be Frances E. Willard and Dwight L. Moody. And here, on the streets of Chicago, cumbered with poverty, hunger, thirst and cold, they did their noblest work, laying the foundations of their monumental work.

—A brother of wide acquaintance in our brotherhood says:

Three times in the last six weeks have I heard "our church is in trouble," and "we had a preacher who brought no letter;" in one instance the preacher's membership was in another state, while he had been laboring elsewhere for years. One preacher said: "Not necessary for a preacher to have a church letter." No, not when he gets drunk!

"In Union There is Strength."

True strength consists in the union, the harmonious working together, of every part of the human organism. This strength can never be obtained if the blood is impure. Hood's Sarsaparilla is the standard prescription for purifying the blood.

—The following is among the many appreciative notices of "Wheeling Through Europe:"

"Wheeling Through Europe" is the title of a book of travels by Winfred Ernest Garrison, a St. Louis man, most of the chapters having already appeared in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. Mr. Garrison followed the usual line of travel during the two summers he spent abroad, seeing Europe "over the handle-bars," but he has the happy faculty of being able to describe what he saw in a most entertaining and delightful style. The book is illustrated by the author, and especially for those who would like to make the journey, as Mr. Garrison did, his book will prove instructive and interesting. Christian Publishing Company, St. Louis.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

—The following card from Charles Reign Scoville indicates the success of this evangelist wherever he goes:

Gainesville, Tex. June 8, 1900 —Closed at Kansas City with 201 added; 667 added in the East—total of 868. Left the church building here for tabernacle on account of great crowds. Spoke Sunday night in the tabernacle for the first time, and fully 3,000 people heard the Word. Seating capacity, 2,200; 32 added to date, making exactly 900 so far this year. The gospel is the power of God. I. Walter Wilson, singer.

—The summer school of Butler College, Irvington, Ind., for 1900 is worthy of special attention. The entire faculty, with one exception, will participate in the work. There will also be some special lectures, including the state superintendent of public instruction. There will also be offered a course of Bible study in the English Bible. The class will be conducted by Prof. Coleman, of Butler College. President Jenkins, of the University of Indianapolis, will give occasional lectures throughout the course upon Paul's life and his relation to the development of the Christian church. Classes in all the leading branches will of course be formed and ably taught. For full particulars, however, it would be best for you to send to W. J. Karslake or Chauncey Butler, Irvington, for circulars, literature, etc.

—In the very interesting report of the Christian Literature Society for China, for the year 1899 the following words from Mr. Owen are quoted, in which a large field for useful missionary work is revealed:

The extent of Christian influence must largely depend on the measure in which we meet the growing demand for a Western education among the upper and middle classes, and the demand for a high class Christian literature among the scholars and officials. . . . One of the most urgent needs of our work in China to day is for a larger and better literature. We want a series of well-considered, well-written books on Christianity in its great historical, social, moral and doctrinal aspects. . . . The Christian Literature Society, under the able superintendence of Mr. Richard and Dr. Allen, is doing most valuable work in this direction. But the society's resources are small. Much more should be done. We want more newspapers, more magazines and more books. Every missionary society working in China should immediately set aside one or more of its older and abler men for literary work.

—All the roports from England give enthusiastic accounts of Prof. Willett's visits and Bible lectures in our churches there. Bro. Willett also writes us that he has had a delightful time with the English brethren. He expects to return home soon.

—Our friend, John A. Lee, of the Central Christian Church in this city, whom we mentioned favorably as a candidate for the nomination for lieutenant-governor several weeks ago, received the nomination at Kansas City last week along with Hon. A. M. Dockery, of Gallatin, who was nominated for governor. These are two good men, whatever one may think of the platform on which they were nominated.

Personal Mention.

J. L. McJenkin, superintendent, reports $20 raised in all on Children's Day in Keota, Ia.

John Ballinger reports $12.50 raised on Children's Day at Garden City, Kan.

The East Side Church, Denver, Col., A. F. Holden, pastor, recently made the best offering in the history for the state work—$63.

D. L. Dunkleberger, pastor of the Church of Christ in Marion, Ia., reports work at that point in a prosperous state. Sunday-school growing.

Thos. J. Dickson has accepted the pastorate of the church at 7th and Garfield Streets, Kansas City, Kan. He was at the Westport Church.

"Salvation for the Body" is the title of a new tract on health, by Edwin H. Spring, pastor East End Tabernacle, Gloucester, England.

Geo. A. Taubman's Christian Messenger, now far into its second year, is among the best of local church publications that we have yet seen.

W. H. Kern, pastor of the Church of Christ in DuQuoin, Ill., reports $25 raised on Children's Day for foreign missions. Apportionment was $5.

W. H. Waggoner reports a fine institute recently closed at Lebanon, Mo. He says that Bro. Berry is doing a splendid work there.

The memorial services conducted by the church in Rochester, Minn., had a good effect upon the people of that city. C. A. Burridge is the pastor.

Harmon Utterback, of Willow Springs, Mo., is desirous of making an engagement with some evangelist in need of a competent singer. Good references will be furnished.

H. H. Peters, Rantoul, Ill., delivered memorial sermons at Rantoul and Dewey. They also raised $25 for Home Missions at Rantoul and $13 at Bethany.

Paul H. Castle, pastor of the Christian Church at Virden, Ill., delivered the Decoration Day address to a very large and appreciative audience; it was published in full in the Virden papers.

Bro. H. H. Halley, former pastor of the Church of Christ of Kalkaska, now of Kalamazoo, delivered the baccalaureate sermon before the graduating class of the Kalkaska high school, June 4th.

Arthur M. Growden, pastor of the Church of Christ in Findlay, Ohio, preached the baccalaureate sermon before the graduates and faculty of the Findlay High School in his church. The sermon was printed in one of their city dailies.

A. A. Hunsaker, of Winslow, Ind., knows of a good church where a consecrated young preacher who can begin on a salary of $500 is wanted. The outlook for growth and enlargement is good. Applicants should address as above, with references.

W. H. Book, of Clifton Forge, Va., recently dedicated a new church in Dinwiddie County, Va. J. C. Reynolds is the pastor. There was a large crowd present and two confessed Christ. The meeting will continue.

J. W. Holsapple, editor Christian Visitor and Minister, Central Christian Church, Sherman, Tex., preached the baccalaureate sermon for Carr-Burdett College June 3. He preached the sermon for this college last year.

J. B. Jones, president of Daughters' College, Fulton, Mo., paid his respects to this office while in the city last week. Bro. Jones is very happy over the work of the school during the year just closing, and especially over its greatly improved future outlook.

The Troy Record, New York, June 1st, contains a lengthy report of an excellent sermon recently preached in that city by Geo. B. Townsend, pastor of the Church of Christ in Troy, upon "A Creed that Needs no Revision." We are glad to see the secular papers reporting such sermons.

W. H. Willyard, pastor of the church at Mankato, Minn., has recently resigned, which was a great surprise to the church. The church is in better condition than it has been for some time. He will do the work of an evangelist after he returns from a tour in Europe and Palestine. Dorcas Helena Willyard is the name of the little daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Willyard, of Mankato, Minn.

As we predicted, the people in Ohio, among whom Prof. J. F. Richard, of Washington, is sojourning for awhile, are making good use of him. The Record, Fulton, June 1st, contains numerous notices of his appearance before large audiences as a preacher and lecturer.

John L. Stine, of Auburn, Neb., is at liberty to hold a meeting sometime in August or September. He would like to hold it for some congregation that has no pastor and think they cannot pay much for a meeting. He can furnish a singer and hold the meeting for the free will offerings.

J. E. Denton has closed his first year's work at Onawa, Ia., but before entering on the second year will visit for a month his former fields of labor in Minnesota. He delivered the memorial addresses at Onawa and Little Sioux, also the baccalaureate sermon at Little Sioux. While the pastor is away the Onawa house will undergo some improvements.

I would like to hear from any individual or state board that has a tent to rent that will hold at least 800 people. It must be in good condition, and it will be needed for five months. We will tear down our old church building here in a few days so that we can erect a new edifice, and we have room enough on the lot to pitch a tent. Correspond at once with JAMES SMALL.
Bedford, Ind.

The ministerial students of Christian University by resolution most heartily endorse and commend Dr. Clinton Lockhart's work in the classroom, "the scholarly research displayed, the fair and impartial statement of every critical question and the argument on each side." They also express their appreciation of his Christian life and their regret at his departure from Christian University; "but hope that the future in his new field may hold for him a wider circle of usefulness and influence for good."

Through Dick T. Morgan we learn that E. M. Barney has tendered his resignation as pastor of the church at Perry, O. T., to take effect June 3. Bro. B. has accepted the place of territorial evangelist, under the support of the C. W. B. M. The church at Perry regrets to lose Bro. and Sister Barney, as their work has been quite successful. Since Bro. B. went to Perry the church has been permanently furnished, and some important improvements have been made and the church is in a prosperous condition. Bro. B. is a gifted young man and is held in high esteem by the citizens of that city. In his greater field he will have an excellent opportunity to use his talents to build up the cause in that rapidly growing territory. The church at Perry has already selected Bro. B.'s successor and expects to soon complete the arrangements.

The White Man's Burden

can be named in the single word—dyspepsia. It is the one disease, which more than any other, affects the American people. It is common to all classes and all conditions. It makes life miserable. It mars family happiness. It interferes with business and pleasure alike, and it discounts a man's usefulness just as much as it discounts his happiness.

There's a remedy for dyspepsia. Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery has lifted this burden from the bodies of hundreds of thousands. It cures ninety-eight out of every hundred who give it a fair and faithful trial.

"I used ten bottles of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery and several vials of his 'Pleasant Pellets' a year ago this spring, and have had no trouble with indigestion since," writes Mr. W. T. Thompson, of Townsend, Broadwater Co., Montana. "Words fail to tell how thankful I am for the relief, as I had suffered so much and it seemed that the doctors could do me no good. I got down in weight to 125 pounds, and was not able to work at all. Now I weigh nearly 160 and can do a day's work on the farm. I have recommended your medicine to several, and shall always have a good word to say for Dr. Pierce and his medicines."

Free. Dr. Pierce's Medical Adviser is sent free on receipt of stamps to pay expense of mailing only. It contains 1008 pages and over 700 illustrations. Send 21 one-cent stamps for the book in paper covers, or 31 stamps for cloth binding to Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y.

This book contains memoirs of Mrs. Harriet Newell, Mrs. Ann Judson, Miss Hattie L. Judson, Mrs. Josephine Smith and Charles E. Garst. The author is N. M. Ragland, pastor of the First Christian Church, Fayetteville, Arkansas. The book is published by the Christian Publishing Co., of St. Louis, Mo., and sells for $1.00. The author is well informed concerning all that relates to missions. He has made a special study of the workers concerning whom he has written in his book. He is in heartiest sympathy with every missionary and with every attempt put forth to evangelize the world. It has been in his own heart to join the missionaries on the field and to consecrate his life with all its energies to the missionary service.

Mr. Ragland is as full of poetry as an egg is full of meat. He has a fund of incidents and quotations from which to draw to illuminate his pages. He has written to relieve the fullness of his mind. He writes as a bird sings, because he cannot help it.

This is a capital book to put in the hands of those who are eager to inform themselves concern ing the missionary vocation and concerning the heroic lives of the missionaries. It will widen their mental horizon and enlarge their sympathies. It will make their hearts be t r. It will transmute indifference and opposition into the heartiest sympathy and the most active support. The author has done a good work in gathering up all the available facts about Miss Judson and Mrs. Smith and C. E. Garst. Our people will do well to inform themselves concerning these saintly workers.

Of Mr. Garst he says that he had "schooled himself to hardness as a good soldier of Jesus Christ." He had estimated the cost of a mission to the heathen. Hardships and dangers never moved him from his high purpose to preach Jesus Christ where he had not been named. He had a varied experience in bitter cold and in melting heat, in driving sun and in pouring rain. With eager feet and anxious heart he carried the Word of life to the multitudes who sit in darkness and in the region and in the shadow of death. His life in Japan is curiously suggestive of the well-known experiences of the Apostle Paul, mentioned in the eleventh chapter of the second epistle to the Corinthians. On one occasion Mr. Garst walked twenty-two miles to conduct the funeral service of a young Baptist minister who was a native Christian.

Kawamura San, a distinguished Japanese evangelist, says: "Often when on a trip together I would say to him: 'Mr. Garst, we will not care to go to such and such a place.,' Why so?' asked Mr. Garst. 'O, the inns are dirty and full of vermin and the food is very bad,' I replied. 'Are there people there who have not heard the gospel?' 'Yes, plenty of them.' Then Mr. Garst would say: 'We will go; that's what we are here for.' He frequently slept in wretched quarters and ate Japanese food at which many who criticize missionaries would turn away in disgust. He accepted every experience in the best spirit and turned it to gaod account. Whatever his feelings might have been he made no complaint. Writing to a friend he said: 'Lately, when out evangelizing, we were served dried grasshoppers. After eating about a cupful I felt like John the Baptist!' In him patience did her perfect work. This virtue he taught more by example than by precept. For eighteen months he suffered serious stomach trouble, brought on by exposure, overwork and bad food. All the time he was kept on the strictest diet, eating only a little meat, milk and charred bread. He never complained because of enforced abstinence. He ate what was set before him, happy in the hope of returning health and enlarged usefulness. The gentleness of his touch and the tenderness of his heart were felt in his dealings with the new convert from paganism and with those who sometimes lapsed into sin. He managed everything in the spirit of Christ and with consummate tact. Some of the natives who noticed this wondered if he were 'man or God.'"

The Orphans' Home.

Of the many vehicles for the conveyance of truth to the minds and hearts of the 123 children in the Christian Orphans' Home at 915 Aubert Ave., St. Louis, the meeting each Lord's day from 3 to 4 o'clock, presided over by that veteran in service, Bro. John Burns, holds an important place. For illustration, on last Lord's day, in addition to the gospel songs, Scripture reading and prayer, Bro. Burns illustrated the effect of obedience and its counterpart, disobedience, by a simple story of a boy and girl. The matron, Sister Mattie Williamson, by a series of questions, brought out the truth that faith and works were as essential to the Christian as two wings were to the bird. A number of the children read or repeated Scripture or other quotations. All were attenttve listeners. The discipline was all that could be desired, and compared favorably with that to be found in any well-regulated family.

Respectful attention was given to what the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST reporter said in response to Bro. Burns' invitation. Friends of the Home sojourning in the city over Sunday would find it profitable to attend this meeting. B. M.

H. W. Everest.

A feeling of deep personal loss has come to thousands of us in the death of Bro. Everest. No pen can write our hearts' fullness. Personally, whatever I am is largely due to him. He, with Dr. J. M. Allen, another of God's n bility, in a friendly conversation in a classroom in Eureka College, soon after my entrance, opened to me a new world in purposes and possibilities. From that day my plans had a new meaning and new impulses. More than any other man ever after, he was my counselor and true friend. I never had occasion to question his motives or sincerity, but uniformly found him true and noble and Christlike.

He had but few if any equals among us as an educator. His teaching was peculiarly a development. He gave information freely, but only after the student had done his best. He was not a stuffer, but a fer ilizer, a leader, an inspiration. His mind and action were possibly too quick for the greatest results as a disciplinarian, but in the class I have never seen his equal. He was often misunderstood, both by students and fellowteachers. Even many of his brethren at large needed the touch of a nearer fellowship to know of the great, warm heart that he truly had. If a student disliked Pres. Everest it was prima facie evidence that the student failed to understand him or was unworthy.

As a servant of Christ in the ministry as well as in the classroom he was most reverent and loyal. He believed in the Lord and the Holy Book. Neither, in his estimation, needed an apology. His book on Christian Evidences is, I think, the first to put the whole issue on the proposition: Is Jesus the Christ the Son of the living God? This he believed with all his heart, and every logical corollary was accepted with unquestioning fidelity. If Christ quoted Moses and believed him worthy as authority, he felt perfectly safe to do the same.

He had a master mind, logical, incisive, analytical. He never ceased to study and write. Often as we would stroll about Mackatawa Park, when too late, he tried too rest, he would talk on some great theme with the enthusiasm of youth and the brain of a philosopher. In mind, he was a giant; in body, broken down. Thank the Lord for such men. May he send us many more.

Thousands Have Kidney Trouble and Don't Know it.

How To Find Out.

Fill a bottle or common glass with your water and let it stand twenty-four hours; a sediment or settling indicates an unhealthy condition of the kidneys; if it stains your linen it is evidence of kidney trouble; too frequent desire to pass it or pain in the back is also convincing proof that the kidneys and bladder are out of order.

What to Do.

There is comfort in the knowledge so often expressed, that Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the great kidney remedy fulfills every wish in curing rheumatism, pain in the back, kidneys, liver, bladder and every part of the urinary passage. It corrects inability to hold water and scalding pain in passing it, or bad effects following use of liquor, wine or beer, and overcomes that unpleasant necessity of being compelled to go often during the day, and to get up many times during the night. The mild and the extraordinary effect of Swamp-Root is soon realized. It stands the highest for its wonderful cures of the most distressing cases. If you need a medicine you should have the best. Sold by druggists in 50c. and $1. sizes.

You may have a sample bottle of this wonderful discovery and a book that tells more about it, both sent absolutely free by mail. Address Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y. When writing mention reading this generous offer in this paper.

B. B. Tyler's Letter.

Boston is a progressive town. In March, 1834, the first train drawn by a locomotive ran from Boston to Worcester, a distance of forty-four miles. It is estimated that now in a single day 700 trains leave Boston carrying 100,000 persons. That first train, 64 years ago, created an excitement. There are men now living in Boston who remember the occasion. Not more than 30 or 40 persons could be persuaded to risk their lives on the new fangled concern. It made the stage drivers swear. They had everything their own way from September 7, 1792, when the first stages left Boston for New York, until the rail road came and spoiled their business. They predicted that the new methods of carrying passengers would not last long.

When Dr. Phelps conceived the idea of building a railroad to Albany the wise men said, Pooh! pooh! Here is a quotation from an editorial article in a Boston paper about this crazy scheme:

Alcibiades or some other great man of antiquity, it is said, cut off his dog's tail that quidnuncs might not become extinct from want of excitement. Some such notion, we doubt not, moved one or two of our natural and experimental philosophers to get up the project of a railroad from Boston to Albany; a project which every one knows, who knows the simplest rule in arithmetic, to be impracticable, but at an expense little less than the market value of the whole territory of Massachusetts, and which, if practicable, every person of common sense knows would be as useless as a railroad from Boston to the moon.

The inhabitants of Dorchester, now a district of the city of Boston, in 1842 resolved at a town meeting "that our representatives be instructed to use their utmost endeavors to prevent, if possible, so great a calamity to our town as must be the location of a railroad through it."

I heard Edward Everett Hale preach a few days ago. He is a majestic old gentleman. It is probable that he is the most extensively known living Unitarian minister. He is a man of beautiful spirit. Dr. Hale thinks that he has found the solution of the problem of Christian union. It is the Pilgrim Covenant of 1602. It was entered into at Scrooby before the pilgrims went to Holland. They simply, to use the quaint style of the olden time, "as ye Lord's free people, joyned themselves (by a covenant of the Lord) into a church estate, in ye fellowship of ye gospell, to walke in all his wayes made known or to be made known unto them, according to their best endeavours whatsoever it should cost them, the Lord assisting them." Dr. Hale, in the discourse above referred to, made much of the fact that the Scrooby Covenanters agreed to walk together and that in their covenant no doctrinal test was mentioned. They simply agreed to "walk together." I cannot soon forget how the dear old Doctor rang out these words. The way to union is simply to agree to "walk together." This is all there is of it. But the good man neglected to say that the agreement was to "walk together 'in ye fellowship of ye gospell' and to 'walke in his wayes.'"

Just before going to hear Dr. Hale I spent some time in the Unitarian headquarters on Beacon Street. There I saw a card, beautifully printed and handsomely framed, on which were the words:

OUR FAITH.

THE FATHERHOOD OF GOD.
THE BROTHERHOOD OF MAN.
THE LEADERSHIP OF JESUS.
SALVATION BY CHARACTER.
THE PROGRESS OF MANKIND, ONWARD AND UPWARD FOREVER.

This is supposed to be the present Unitarian faith. I think that I could subscribe to this declaration of belief myself—could not you? The words "salvation by character" may need explanation. As I would explain them I believe in that statement. But in this respect Dr. Hale's people, the Unitarians, do not agree with the Pilgrim Covenant, since there is what may be called a doctrinal statement.

The public schools in this part of the world adjourn when the mercury in Fahrenheit's thermometer reaches a certain point. This is well. I do not know what the point is; but school is not in session this afternoon and the mercury in the room in which I write is 82 degrees above zero.

I said to a gentleman of average intelligence, within a stone's throw of the Mother Christian Science Church: "Can you tell me where the Christian Science Church is—Mrs. Mary Baker G. Eddy's church?" He paused a moment, thoughtfully, and then said: "That is a new one on me. I never heard of that church!"

There is encouragement in this incident for the Disciples who are unable to understand why their special friends are comparatively unknown in such cities as Boston, New York and Philadelphia. One would think that every person in the United States has heard of Mary Baker G. Eddy, of Christian Science and of the Christian Science Church, but here in Boston is a man in business within a few minutes of the great Christian Science Church, "the Mother Church," as Mrs. Eddy's disciples call it, absolutely ignorant of the existence of such a person and ignorant of such an institution.

The Scientists are coming up to their annual meeting. A train load is reported as on the way from Cincinnati. Multitudes are coming from other distant cities. It is expected that not less than 2,200 persons will unite with the Mother Church Sunday. Four communion services are announced for the day in this place of meeting, that all who desire to do so may participate in this feast of love.

The annual meeting of the Disciples of Christ in New England approaches. It is not so formidable an affair as is the annual meeting of the disciples of Mary Baker G. Eddy, but in the end New Testament Christianity will outstrip this latter fad, and the Disciples of the Christ stand for the Christianity of the apostolic age—ITS CREED, ITS ORDINANCES, ITS LIFE. This is destined to win. New England needs it. The world needs it. Be of good courage.

A "Change" Breakfast

GETTING READY FOR WARM WEATHER.

A complete change in breakfast would, at this time of year, improve the health of any one.

Meat, potatoes and coffee become tiresome. The system calls for a change, but what to? Hot and half cooked pastry and starchy cereals are unattractive.

Vegetables taste good, but furnish too little nourishment to sustain until the next meal, particularly if brain work is required.

A most appetizing, convenient and healthful breakfast can be made on Grape-Nuts (a ready-cooked food), a little cream or milk, some fruit and perhaps two soft eggs.

(Pint tin cup of sharply boiling water, put in two eggs, not one, nor three, cover and set off stove, serve in just nine minutes. Whites will be like cream and half digested.) The Grape-Nuts food is concentrated and but three or four teaspoons should be used at one meal; that amount furnishes full strength and nourishment up to the next.

A change from the old breakfast to one like this will refresh and invigorate the system in a surprising manner.

Good food in proper variety and a contented mind, solves the whole health problem.

James B. Goff.

Intelligence of the death of this good man has come to me, and I wish to speak a word in memory of him, and put one flower upon his new-made grave. In 1899 I was called to the church at Austin, Texas. A little band was meeting in the old brick house on the corner of Eighth and Colorada Streets. In this faithful band were Bro. Goff, his devoted wife and their children. He was a deacon of the church, having held this office in various churches for more than 40 years at the time of his death. He gave me cordial greeting and I knew at once, as if by intuition, that he was a man upon whom full reliance could be placed, and who would give his loyal support to me in every effort to build up the church. My estimate of him was more than justified in subsequent association with him. Every preacher will understand me when I say that he was in the truest sense a preacher's friend and helper. He was this because he loved and served loyally and unremittingly the Lord Jesus, and therefore loved his church. A large legal business demanded his time and close attention, yet he was never absent from any service of the church, in which he took an active part, nor neglected any of its interests. He was a man of great strength of character, firmness of conviction, unswerving in his fidelity to the right, never compromising with the wrong, and yet gentle, kind and full of sympathy. His liberality was only limited by his ability. His response to all religious and philanthrophic calls was generous and unstinted. I sum up in one word a just characterization of him in the statement that he was a model Christian gentleman. If to any one the poet's words can be applied they can most justly to him: "None knew him but to love him, none named him but to praise."

It gives me pleasure to know that in his last hours he expressed an earnest desire to see me, for this was an intimation of his confidence in and respect for me, and to have this from such a man causes one to feel that after all he may possess qualities of head and heart worthy the esteem of the good of earth. I sincerely regret that I could not have been with him and his loved ones in this sad experience, but thank God that they and I and all his children may cherish the hope that in that home which death never invades we shall be gathered to part no more forever.

Bro. Goff was born in Chatauqua County, New York, March 4, 1837, near the spot now occupied by the famous Chatauqua, and was at the time of his death 73 years of age. He removed to St. Louis at the age of 12, where he lived until 1879, when he removed to Austin, Texas. In St. Louis he married Miss Sue E. Church, sister of the eloquent and distinguished Samuel S. Church, at one time pastor of the church in that city. Doubtless both of them are remembered by many of the older citizens now residing there. His wife and six children survive him. No husband or father was ever more highly favored with wife and children. They are all active, useful members of the church. Years ago I tearfully bade him and them farewell. Our hearts were then cheered by the glad hope that it was not forever. In heaven we shall meet again. And so I send to them in the far Southern home the sweet message that Jesus gave to his sorrowing disciples in the fourteenth chapter of John, and pray God to so lead them and all his children that we may meet our loved ones, gone before, in that blessed abode.

Chicago Letter.

Your letter-writer has had the privilege of attendance at the annual convention of the Disciples of Christ in Ontario, Canada, May 31 to June 4. The church at Guelph was the hostess. This congregation numbers about 100, under the leadership of Amos Tovell, a Hiram boy, loved and sustained for his sterling worth. He is ably seconded by Mrs. Tovell, who herself comes from a family of preachers. Both have the advantage of being Canadians. Surely, it is best to have a preacher "to the manor born." The convention was fairly representative, delegates being present from Toronto on the east to Owen's Sound on the west. It impressed a visitor with its orderliness and dispatch. There are many Scotch among the Ontario Disciples, and their firmness and sincerity are evident in all that is said and done.

There was a most interesting discussion over the educational problem, some favoring the establishment of a Bible Seminary in connection with Toronto University, and others favoring the support and enlargement of the college at St. Thomas. A committee was appointed to take the whole matter under advisement and forward the right thing. The Endeavorers of the province are at work. There are only about 40 societies, but they had made a heroic effort to raise a sum sufficient to sustain a missionary in a foreign field. Failing in this, they voted $300 to Dr. Osgood for a dispensary, and resolved to try again next year. H. T. Morrison, from "the states," is spending several months in Canada evangelizing; we trust the Canadians will treat him as well as he deserves. A. McLean attended the convention, and moved among them like a father. There was a fine local attendance Sunday afternoon and Sunday night.

Chicago Disciples have had a season of refreshing in a visit from Miss Adelaide Gail Frost and Miss A. M. Hale. Miss Frost stirred our hearts with her simple recital of facts as she finds them in the pagan city of Mahoba, India, and Miss Hale reminded us of the stern necessity of even further self-denials if we are to rescue the perishing. They were present chiefly for the quarterly C. W. B. M. convention, which met with the Irving Park Church, Geo. A. Ragan, pastor. No department of the Lord's work is better organized than the C. W. B. M. here in Chicago. If this splendid society did nothing except interest our Christian women and develop them, it would be well worth sustaining.

There are many books and pamphlets on "Christian Science" The booklet recently from the press of the Christian Publishing Company, St. Louis, entitled "Christian Science Dissected," by A. D. Sector (a dissector?) must take front rank. It is a distinctive, and as its title implies, a gloveless handling of the subject. After the carving is done there is little question about what to do with the remains, for there aren't any remains! Perhaps a little fetid gas and a memory of adulterated moonshine remains, but nothing needing the care of the undertaker. The characterlessness of "Mother" Eddy is shown up in such glaring colors as almost to evoke sympathy for the old lady; she is very energetically set down in the class of deceiving, dollar-chasing charlatans, to which she has always belonged. The strong points of the pamphlet are its clear, vigorous English, its keen analysis and its fearless challenge. In spite of its severity the work is done in the best of temper. "Christian Science Dissected" fills a place peculiarly its own. There is one trouble with it: dissecting a cloud is difficult; after it is done, the question arises, "Cui bono?" And yet, while it seems like dignifying this fake to notice it at all, there are times when impudence and quackery must be rebuked.

The tribes are beginning to assemble at Macatawa Park, Michigan. Already the families of Geo. H. Coombs and G. W. Muckley are installed in "Old Kaintuck," J. J. Haly's cottage, Burris A. Jenkins' family in the Bellamy Cottage and Dr. J. Clarence Lindsay's family in "Cecilia." Dr. Lindsay is chairman of the finance committee of the First Church, Chicago. Mr. E. M. Bowman, our church treasurer, has rented "Ole Virginny," J. Z. Tyler's cottage, and a number of other Chicagoans will join this increasingly popular Disciple Congregational summer colony. The program committee held a meeting recently and decided to invite Dr. Lloyd, of Oakland Theological Seminary, California, to give the Bible lectures this year, and arrange as strong a popular program for evenings as possible without any funds at their disposal. Word comes that the cottages are being taken earlier than common, and the prospects are that there will be a populous little city. Of course, J. H. Garrison and family are expected.

E. W. Darst has resigned as city evangelist of Chicago. He will remain in Midland, Texas, for a year or more. E. H. Kellar, recently from Jerusalem, Cairo, Paris, and other places, spent a few days in the city last week. Striking laborers are going to work for the contractors, and the beginning of the end seems to be at hand. Miss Frost left Chicago on the 7th for Indianapolis. Three large churches in this city have been burned in the last few months, the fire originating in every case in the organ. It is suspected that a fanatic incendiary is at work. FRANK G. TYRRELL.

A Letter of Commendation.

To the Christian Church at Large, Greeting:

This is to certify that Rev. Geo. R. Beardslee has served the Baptist Church of this place for the past two years His resignation was a total surprise to us, and entirely unexpected, as in it he informed us that after mature thought and searching for the truth as it is in Jesus he had come to the conclusion that as he was not his own he must follow the divine leading, and that leading had led him to accept the teachings of the Church of Christ. Believing in his sincerity, while we regret his leaving us, we bid him Godspeed.

We most earnestly and affectionately recommend him as a preacher of more than ordinary ability. He is possessed of zeal and energy stronger than most men, making him active, energetic and a power for good in any community in which his lot may be cast. He is also possessed of rare social qualities; a man deeply spiritual and of strong convictions; a good citizen, representing a true type of Christian manhood.

He is, therefore, recommended by the Baptist Church of Dansville to the loving confidence and esteem of any Church of Christ that may secure his services as pastor. Done by the order of the church. JAMES F. LEMON, M. D., Church Clerk.

Dansville, Mich., May 28, 1900.

Bro. Beardslee comes to us after four years of careful study. I believe him to be a man worthy of our confidence. He attended the Indiana State Convention at Valparaiso a few weeks ago and there took membership with the Valparaiso Church. Our preachers and others who met him at the convention were well pleased with him. Bro. Brandt invited him to fill his pulpit on Sunday morning after the convention, but he could not remain to do so. He desires to become a pastor of one of our churches. He has a wife who gladly takes her stand with him in his new church relations. She is an enthusiastic and capable worker in the church and will greatly aid her husband in any work to which he may be called.

Why let all your neighbors and friends think you must be twenty years older than you are? Yet it's impossible to look young with the color of 70 years in the hair. To those who followed Mr. Garrison in his entertaining articles in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, relating his experiences awheel abroad, it is a real pleasure to possess the connected story of his adventure and observation, in this very neat and tasty volume. Surely, there is none more competent than Mr. Garrison to undergo such adventure and record such observation. Athletic and enduring, capable of three century runs in three successive days from hill country to coast, with a broken pedal part of the time; capable of the heroic plunge into cold sea surf, and of the warm and sympathetic appreciation of rural and peasant life as well; capable of sitting up all night to finish photographs and of writing copy next day, and then of starting on a journey, as I saw him do—capable of all this, he is capable of producing and has produced an entertaining and attractive book. Lovers of travel will make no mistake in spending some hot afternoons this summer in company with W. E. Garrison.

B. A. JENKINS.

Training School Organized.

The organization of a school for the training of women to assist in the pastoral duties of ministers of the Christian Church is an accomplished fact. Its official name will be "School of Pastoral Helpers" and it will be located at the Central Christian Church, of which Rev. A. M. Harvuot is the pastor. Its auditorium and spacious rooms, including the pastor's study, were designated for that purpose by the official board of the church on the second Sunday in May.

The faculty will comprise the following: Rev. A. M. Harvuot, superintendent, who w also lecture on "Church Methods and Ministers; Geo. A. Miller, Covington, Ky., systematic Bible study. During the first term the Old Testament history and the Gospels will be studied; during the second, the Old Testament history and the New Testament church. Rev. Oliver W. Taylor, of the Norwood Christian Church, who took a special course in sociology in the Chicago University, will teach this branch, with special reference to city missionary work.

Miss Lottie S. Nichol, first assistant of the pastor of the Central Christian Church whose success in her work was the stimulus to the organization of the present movement, will assume direction of the practical work and will hold conferences on church methods and ministries.

Dr. David S. Schaff, of Lane Seminary, will give a lecture each week on "Church History."

Dr. Archibald McLean will deliver two lectures each term on "Spiritual Preparation for Christian Work."

Dr. G. R. Robbins, of the Lincoln Park Institutional Baptist Church, will deliver a lecture each term on "The Features of the Institutional Church."

Other leading city pastors will be secured for the educational work.

It is also contemplated to have a teacher for the kindergarten methods.

The special aim will be to make the school eminently practical with its background of theoretical training.

While it is expected that the majority of the young women at the school will be members of the Christian Church, those of other denominations will not be barred from the privilege of entering upon the course. These will be expected to do their practical work in churches of their own denomination.

The requirements for matriculation will be the following:

The applicant must be past 18 years of age; she must be equipped with an English education equal to that of graduating from a high school; she must bring satisfactory recommendation of her interest in church work from her pastor, besides a certificate of character.

As to the support of the training school, it will, for the present at least, come from voluntary contributions of the Christian Church at large.

The first term of the training school will be from Sept. 18 to Dec. 24, the second term from Jan. 15 to May 13.

A trial class of three was organized on March 1, and these will finish their first term to-morrow. Their teachers were Rev. A. M. Harvuot, Mr. Geo. A. Miller, of Covington, and Rev. Oliver W. Taylor, of Norwood.

MOVEMENT'S HISTORY.

The completion of the work, which opens a wide and useful field in the Christian Church at large, is largely owing to the personal efforts of the Rev. A. M. Harvuot, pastor of the Central Christian Church, and his assistant, Miss Lottie S. Nichol. Miss Nichol, in her successful work, is the best illustration of how much good can be accomplished by the training school of women for the ministry.

Rev. Mr. Harvuot, with whose pastoral work she has been associated for several years, was so well convinced of this that more than a year ago he communicated on the subject with some fifty city pastors and college presidents, and received many answers favorable to the project. In his letters he referred to the successful work of Miss Lottie S. Nichol.

At the Jubilee Convention of the Christian Church in this city, last year, there were two conferences on the subject and the matter was seriously taken under consideration.

The first important public conference on the subject was held Dec. 21 last, at the Palmer House, Chicago, in pursuance of a call issued by the Chicago Ministerial Association. It was, in fact, a mass meeting of citizens of the Christian denomination, and the idea, as proposed by Rev. Mr. Harvuot, was emphatically indorsed. At that meeting the following executive committee was appointed to carry out the project:

Dr. F. G. Tyrrell, chairman.
Dr. A. B. Philputt, Indianapolis.
W. H. McClain, St. Louis, Mo.
Rev. T. E. Cramblet, Pittsburg.
J. E. Pounds, superintendent Christian Endeavor Society, Cleveland.
Pres. J. H Hardin, of Eureka College, Eureka, Ill.

Maritime Provinces.

About three years ago the members of the Coburg Street congregation at St. John, N. B., Canada, began mission work in the North End of the city. Notwithstanding many and severe difficulties, the work has continued to grow and develop until a lot was purchased and a church building begun. Soon after this fire reduced to ashes a large part of the North End and the mission was thus deprived of financial assistance that would otherwise have been available. Nevertheless, the work was continued until it is now well along toward completion, but after every effort and sacrifice to finish it the building is now at a standstill.

All who are acquainted with the Maritime Provinces know the important position of St. John and will understand the powerful influence that will be exerted throughout these Provinces by the success or failure of this effort to plant a congregation for the teaching of apostolic Christianity. In this time of need a call is made to the brethren who have gone from the Provinces to settle in the United States. The work of Christ in their old home land may be greatly built up by the ready and liberal response of those who have gone out from her. We therefore most earnestly appeal for immediate help from all who read this.

A friend of the work has generously given a large number of the "Acadian Vistas" to be used for the benefit of the new building. It is a beautifully printed book, six by nine, and contains about a hundred views of the Maritime Provinces. These views are excellent in every way and cannot fail to be appreciated by any one who has visited or lived in the Provinces. A copy of this book will be sent, postpaid, in acknowledgment of contributions of a dollar or more, and all moneys received will be devoted to the completion of the new building.

We have made arrangements with the management of the Christian to send this paper for one year to all non-subscribers who are residents of the United States and who contribute as above to this much-needed and important work. The Christian is an eight-page monthly, giving news of all the churches of Christ in the Maritime Provinces.

Briefly stated, all who will send one dollar will receive the 100 views of the Maritime Provinces and one year's subscription to the Christian free.

It's a rich treat to us to receive and read the CHRISTIAN EVANGELIST. It comes to us heralding the joyfulness of salvation of many precious souls. Its columns, too, are richly laden with articles containing good, strong and nourishing mental food, as well as soul-comfort and consolation.

Work of the Lord in Northeastern Pennsylvania is onward. Accessions to churches are regular and numerous. Besides, good and successful religious revivals were held in many of the churches.

We love to hear of constant and regular increase of the churches, not alone in revival meetings, but also in regular religious services. Converts gained thus considerately usually are the more permanent and become the more active Christian workers. This is as it should be. Having heard the Word read and expound d, Christ and teachings should be accepted and obeyed and a Christ-life, conformed to Christlikeness in this world, will secure a home in the blessed future.

Arriving here late amid the inclement weather, no series of meetings were held. But the regular services and Bible readings were carried forward regularly. Good interest prevails. There were two conversions, baptisms and accessions to the church; two added by letter and one, a Free Baptist, by statement.

The Disciples of Christ of Bradford, Tioga and Sullivan Counties, Pa., will hold their annual meeting here. A good program has been provided. Expect a good attendance and a blessed convention. Yes, we look forward for a good mental and spiritual feast.

The various missionary offerings arranged by the Christian Missionary Society, are being taken by the churches. But there has been a departure in these regions.

While the various missionary offerings, asked for by the general board are taken, conference in East Pennsylvania district so ordered that the off ring on each occasion be divided as follows: Fifty per cent. be given to the East Pennsylvania district, 20 per cent. to Foreign Missions, 20 per cent. to the American Christian Missionary Society and 10 per cent. to the Church Extension Fund. Thus we are somewhat handicapped. We cannot specially emphasize any one department. This plan is not generally satisfactory. Some of the churches send the money to the treasurer of the board for which purpose the money was raised on said occasion. This is right and proper. In our judgment all annual, district and state conferences or conventions should harmonize with the plans adopted by the General Board of Missions. It is to be hoped that at our next annual meeting we will so change our policy as to fall into line with the workings of this great and rapidly growing brotherhood.

We rejoice at the progressiveness of the work of the Churches of Christ over the land. As per reports that appear in our various papers since January 1st, if similar success continues during the year there will 100,000 or 125,000 additions to the Churches of Christ during the year. For this marvelous success we should thank God and take courage and still more completely consecrate ourselves to God and his work. God is in the midst of Zion.

We publish the Le Roy Messenger monthly. It serves a good purpose for this church and appears to be well appreciated.

May God's blessings richly attend the workers and work all along the line.

Yours in the Master's work,

R. H. BOLTON.

The Acme.... Smelting and Refining Company

Offers to Investors for a Short Time Unequaled Advantages.

IT IS A WELL-KNOWN FACT

That a custom smelter, properly equipped and operated, is the most certain source of revenue in the mining business.

ITS SUCCESS

Is not contingent upon the output of any one mine or group of mines, but draws its support from a large number of mines in the district where it is located. There are 100 producing and paying mines within a convenient distance of our smelter site and at least 200 more would be developed if there was a custom smelter conveniently located to which ore could be shipped for treatment.

A CUSTOM SMELTER

Bears the same relation to mining that a grist mill does to an agricultural district, with the profits greatly in favor of a custom smelter. The usual net profits of a custom smelter are about $3.00 per ton.

WE HAVE GIVEN YEARS

Of careful study to our plans and know that we are warranted in our undertaking—the erection of a custom smelting plant. Risks which exist in all ordinary mining operations have been carefully eliminated from our plans. We have water, fluxes, an inexhaustible supply of ore and a clear field.

WE CONTRACT NO DEBTS. OUR MOTTO IS: CASH or NOTHING.

A CUSTOM SMELTER HAS THESE ADVANTAGES OVER ALL KINDS OF COMMERCIAL BUSINESS:

1. The product of a smelter invariably sells for cash.
2. The ore smelted is ample security for the expense of smelting.
3. Profits are always large, often reaching 50 per cent. annually on the par value of the stock.
4. Charges for smelting are always collected before the "matte" or refined ore is delivered from the smelter.
5. A custom smelter has no bad debts.
6. A gold smelter's out-put never fluctuates in value.
7. A gold smelter is absolutely independent of any financial stringency, business stagnation, political disturbance, or other calamity which jeopardizes all ordinary classes of investments.

Our Board of Directors is a Guarantee of Safety to all Investors.

—It is composed of

HON. C C. COLE, Late Chief Justice of Iowa.
HON. WEBSTER STREET, Chief Justice of Arizona.
HON. EMIL GANZ, President of the National Bank of Arizona.
H. M. CHAPMAN. Secretary of Phoenix and Maricopa County Board of Trade.
N. C. WILSON, Rarge and Successful Merchant.
CALVIN OGBURN, Evangelist.
T. T. POWERS, LL.B.

AMONG OUR STOCKHOLDERS are U S. Senators and Members of Congress, Ex-Governors, High Naval Officers, College Presidents.

YOU ASSUME NO RISK

When investing in the stock of the Acme Smelting and Refining Company.

1. All the conditions are favorable for the erection and operation of a custom smelter.
2. The Board of Directors are all men of high moral and business standing.
3. The officers are all required to furnish bond.

The par value of the stock is $1.00 per share.

For a short time we are offering a limited amount of stock at 50 cents a share—one-half payable in cash, and balance in five equal monthly installments, or where the entire amount is paid in one payment 45 cents a share. Stock is issued full paid and non-assessable. Most respectfully,

Bethany Assembly Encampment Meetings.

The Bethany Assembly Association will hold its series of encampment meetings for 1900 on the beautiful grounds at Brooklyn, Ind., 20 miles southwest of Indianapolis, commencing on July 19, and closing August 14.

Bethany Assembly is an organization of the Christian Church, not a private institution. It was organized by the largest convention of Disciples ever convened in Indiana. Its annual assemblies are on a much greater scale than any other conducted by the Christian Church. All the conventions of the church, except the State Missionary Society, are held at the Park during the sessions of the Assembly. All the old features that have hitherto made the meetings so popular will be continued this year, and many new and attractive features will be added. The grounds, always beautiful, are far more attractive than ever before. The hotel, annex, cottages, sanitarium, tabernacle, headquarters of the different organizations, will be in better order than ever before. The special days are increased; the sermons on the four Lord's days will be by distinguished preachers; the lectures, addresses, concerts, entertainments, stereopticon lectures, etc., etc., will all be of a very high order. The medicinal water from the mineral (artesian) well is as free to all as the air or sunlight. Boating, bathing and fishing are among the attractions. In a word—pleasure, rest, recreation, innocent amusements, sociability, music, oratory, art, literature, religion—all these combine to make Bethany the ideal place for your summer outing.

The admission to the grounds and to all exercises of the encampment, the board at the hotel and all other necessary expenses are lower than at any similar institution in the United States.

Next week we hope to give the readers of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST the calendar of the Assembly, and the full program and announcements will soon be published.

Parties wanting any information concerning the Assembly will please write to Howard Cale, Indianapolis, Ind., and he will be very glad to give you all needed information. L. L. CARPENTER.

Eats Anything

SINCE LEAVING OFF COFFEE.

"I wish to give my experience with coffee for the benefit of other people. I used coffee for several years and was a terrible sufferer from dyspepsia. The doctor told me not to use coffee or tea and put me on a light diet, and I felt better.

"Then I commenced to drink coffee again and had the same trouble come on.

"One day I told a friend about it, who said if I would stop drinking coffee altogether I would feel better, and advised me to use Postum Food Coffee in its place.

"I tried the Postum but did not like it, so I told him about it and he said I didn't cook it right, that is, didn't boil it enough, and that I should use cream instead of milk, and to make sure I would use it he sent a package to the house.

"After I used that package, I would have no more coffee in the house. Now I don't know what it is to have dyspepsia and I can eat anything. I also give Postum to my two children and they are the healthiest children you could find anywhere. The youngest is a boy 13 months old and we have been giving him Postum for seven months, three times a day. He weighs 30 pounds, and I know that Postum is what keeps both of them so healthy.

"I think all people who have dyspepsia get it from coffee drinking.

"Yours truly, Mrs. Jno. Stringer, 29 S. Florida Ave., Atlantic City, N. J."

Alabama Notes.

So far I have taken up four offerings for Foreign Missions; in the aggregate they more than double those of last year. The churches thus giving are Furman, Snow Hill, Richmond and Cambridge (Tasso).

"Ashley Johnson Day" is the 5th Sunday in April. Richmond sets the pace by observing it on April 15, and sends in a liberal little offering to the "School of the Evangelists," Kimberlin Heights, Tenn.

Selma is on the boom. A new edifice is in the air. E. V. Spicer and wife are leading the hosts gloriously and gracefully.

Birmingham, O. P. Spiegel in charge, is lifting up its head. A new building is on the way there. Williamson, the only Williamson, is in a meeting here now, with best of prospects.

Plantersville has a new church. Membership enthusiastic and up to date.

Cleveland's Mills (Sprott) and New Hope (Plantersville) are taking on renewed energy, they have substantial generous leaders.

Educationally, our state has recently made a great stride forward. Under the new law about half the teachers have been refused certificates to teach. Teachers' salaries have increased 25 per cent., and the public schools are running four or five months as against three and four heretofore Politically, Senator Morgan and Governor Johnsonare locking horns for the United States Senate. Morgan, as he deserves to be, will be returned.

Racially, the blacks and the whites are generally on amicable terms. All talk of race war is humbug. The better class of white people and the blacks understand one another and keep their places and there is mutual respect between them. When the lower class of whites give the negroes most of the social liberties, they are liable to take the rest; thence comes rapes and lynchings, etc.

Selma, Ala. CLARIS YEUELL.

Iowa Mission Notes.

Three-fourths of our missionary year is gone, calls are multiplying, not more than one-third of the churches have contributed to the work and our treasury is empty. What shall we do?

There is no better mission field in the world than Iowa, and our people know it, because we have sent an envelope filled with information to every preacher in the state. We have had our hearts set on securing an offering from every church in the state.

Iowa is one of the most beautiful states in the Union, more than one-half of her people live on farms. Iowa built more miles of railroad last year than any other state and on these new roads scores of new towns are being built, in many of which lots could be secured and congregations organized at but little cost.

Let us study the field a moment; and while we do so we will take a ride across the state on the C. M. & St. P. R. R. Beginning at the Mississippi River we travel westward through the northern part of the state until we reach the Missouri River. The soil is very rich and the country is beautiful to behold. In this delightful ride we have passed through 73 towns, only 14 of which have Christian Churches. In a number of the 59 churchless towns we have 10 or more disciples begging us to come and help them, assuring us that a good congregation can be organized for a small outlay of labor and expense. It is a pity that these Macedonian calls must go unanswered.

Evangelist Lawrence Wright has half enough money raised and the new church building well under way at Waterloo. We expect to dedicate the new building June 17th.

Your secretary dedicated a neat $3,000 building at Spring Hill, May 20th. Eight months ago we had neither congregation nor building we now have both and an excellent work is being done in the community. F. E. Butterfield is the pastor.

Bradyville congregation has let the contract for their new building, and all departments of the work are doing well.

Bradyville is another one of our mission points that has been opened within the last year.

Pastor J. H. McSparran has the subscription at Audubon large enough to let the contract for their new building.

The new church at Pioneer is well under way. A congregation will be organized and a new church building will soon be erected at Wheelerwood; in fact, all of our missions are in excellent condition. We have the names of some excellent evangelists that could be secured for meetings. If you can use them let me know.

Let the Iowa brethren take notice that the state convention will meet at Des Moines, Sept. 3-7, and the national convention at Kansas City, Mo., October 11-18. B. S. DENNY.

Des Moines, Ia.

Southern Illinois Ministerial Association.

The session of this association for the present year was held in East St. Louis, May 22-24. James F. Rosborough, of Sandoval, presided with grace and dignity. The secretary, W. C. Swartz, was detained at home on account of sickness. A good program was provided, but unfortunately a number on the program were absent for various causes. The time of the meeting was changed about two months earlier on account of July being too hot to hold such a meeting in East St. Louis, and the church there not being able to entertain the delegates after the summer hegira to the watering-places and to the country sets in. The association had to meet there in May or select a new place for the meeting. It was decided to hold it with the East St. Louis Church as above.

The change of time kept a number away who had made other engagements before they knew of the change in time. Another hindering cause was the change being announced so late that time was not given to those on the program to prepare regular papers, and as the most of preachers would rather not appear at all then to try to fill the place without preparation. In this the change was unfortunate, and the association is harmed on account of it.

But the substitutes responded with a good will, being determined that the convention should be a success. Most every place on the program was filled creditably. One session was made up almost completely by substitution, and some of the visitors pronounced this session one of the best. This demonstrates what can be done by those who are willing to do their best.

The preaching for the three evenings was in the hands of able men, and they did not disappoint their audiences. The preachers were J. H. Garrison, editor of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, St. Louis; J. J. Harris, evangelist, Marion; F. O. Fannon, pastor First Christian Church St. Louis. These brethren had good, appreciative audiences, and they preached magnificent sermons.

The leading subjects treated were: The Church, in six fifteen minute speeches, led by the undersigned; The Minister, in six fifteen-minute speeches; Our Attitude to the Liquor Traffic, a conference, led by J. J. Harris, of Marion; Our Attitude to Capital and Labor Questions, a conference, led by W. W. Hopkins, assistant editor CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, St. Louis; City Evangelization, by O. A. Bartholomew, of St. Louis; County and Village Evangelization, by E. E. Hartly, Toledo, Ill.

Any one can see from the above that the sessions of the association were helpful to those who attended. The discussions were fraternal and dignified. They were helpful to every preacher there.

The East St. Louis church, led by W. A. Meloan, its faithful pastor, had prepared for more delegates than came; and their entertainment of those who were so fortunate as to get there was all that could be desired. This church is coming to the front, as well as the city of East St. Louis. They are planning for greater things, and they deserve to succeed. J. H. SMART.

Centralia, Ill.

Ohio Notes.

The state convention is passed. Few conventions in the history of our Ohio Christian Missionary Society have reached any larger success. The report of the year created enthusiasm on the part of all who were in attendan e. On the roll of honor there were more than 280 churches that had contributed to Ohio missions. The total receipts of the year were $13,734.43. The convention passed a resolution making the standard for the coming year $15,000. With the increased enthusiasm for Ohio missions that is manifest on every hand we shall doubtless be able to reach this amount. While Ohio has been doing excellently within its borders, no state in our Union has done so much for redeeming the world.

The following paragraph quoted from the report of the board outlines the extent of our work in this regard:

Our giving for work beyond our borders has been largely increased. We report in our financial statement $20,477.28 raised for the American Christian Missionary Society in its three departments, general work, church extension and ministerial relief. In addition to this, the gifts of Ohio Disciples for Foreign Missions amounted to $25,919.72 and the Christian Woman's Board of Missions reported in its last annual report $16,725 41 from our Ohio sisterhood and brotherhood as received by their general treasury. In addition to this the state C. W. B. M. has raised for the expenses of its work $1,-745 45. This makes a grand total of $62,122.41 for help to save the world outside of Ohio, and for all mission work of $78,702.29.

Funds are already coming in for the work of the new year and the outlook is very hopeful.

Quite a number of pastors have changed their locations recently.

L. A. Warren has taken a new work at Orchard Street and Rossford, Toledo.

W. H. Applegate has accepted a call to Greenwich.

Bowman Hostettler has taken a work at Mt. Oreb and Buford.

J. G. Slayter began work with the High Street Church, Akron, on April 1st and is already making a marked success.

J. W. Kerns has changed from the Broad Street Church, Akron, to Steubenville.

J. W. Gorrell has removed from New Philadelphia to East Liverpool, and Walter Mansell has located at Salem.

W. R. Moffett has closed his labors at Sandy Lake, Pa., and located at Belle Centre, O.

We shall be ready to announce the dates of the fall district conventions next week and are confident that this series of conventions will be the largest and most enthusiastic in years.

Work on the material for the Ohio Day offering has already begun and it will not be long before we shall be agitating this matter strongly. We shall put forth a mighty effort for the greatest collection ever gathered for Ohio missions on Sunday, Nov. 4th.

Let all our churches and pastors begin to get ready for it. S. H. BARTLETT, Cor. Sec.

The Siege at Vicksburg.

The sword of the Spirit is unsheathed in the hand of the Christian legion at this place, and a forward movement is on against the strongholds of sin and wickedness in high and low places. The siege is being pressed with unabated zeal; the fortress of the devil is trembling from end to end. Our reconnoitering place is under the gospel tent at the corner of Washington and Belmont Sts., and our numbers increase all the time The capacity of the tent is often tried by the throngs that come nightly to hear the everlasting gospel of a loving Savior. The preaching is listened to with great eagerness and anxious men and women are inquiring after the Lord's way in salvation. The question box is becoming an interesting feature in the meeting, the questions so far being pertinent and to the point.

Bro. D. B. McCanon's inspiring solos are surely uplifting. The audiences often weep while he renders pathetic songs that bring close together the troubled hearts of the living and the happy spirits of the departed with death's narrow stream passing between. He has a choir of fifty voices and his peculiar management of old songs makes them enjoyable to every one. He is a power in song.

The meeting is now thirteen days old and eight have been added in this time; five to be baptized this afternoon. The meeting needs no further advertisement in this city. God is with us; the gospel is the power of God; people are hearing, believing and being baptized. We wish the earnest prayers of all the brethren who read this. We need money to help us in this field, and we desire those who can to visit us and encourage us with their prayers, presence and money. All who have subscribed to our state work are earnestly solicited to send in as soon as possible their amounts to Miss Lutie McKay, Madison, Miss., or to me at Jackson, Miss. You have my thanks in advance for remittances.

The brethren will take notice that the convention of the Christian Church of Mississippi will take place at Water Valley, July 10-14, and govern themselves accordingly. All the preachers in the state are asked to work up a large delegation in their respective places of labor. We want the largest gathering our people have ever held in Mississippi. Everybody begin to get ready to come.

We are rejoiced to hear that Ira M. Boswell is assisting Bro. Finley in a meeting at West Point this month. Bro. Boswell wrote a few days ago that six souls had been added to the church. The Lord be praised.

NATHANIEL G. JACKS, State Evangelist.

CHRISTIAN PUBLISHING COMPANY,

Tonawanda, N. Y.

Yesterday closed our first year's work here. We were called by the church some three months ago for another year. When we came here the church was in a somewhat discouraged condition, but they are now rejoicing.

Our annual roll call and yearly reports were read yesterday. A large number were present. the encouraging reports, of which I give but a a skeleton here, were inspiring and full of interest.

The Ladies' Aid reports 44 members and $74.40 raised during the year. The C. W. B. M. reports 36 members and $53.11 raised during the year. Mission Band reports 18 members and $29.24 raised for the year Junior C. E. Society reports 75 members and $13.03 raised for the year. Senior C. E.s report 35 members and $39.86 raised for the year. Sunday-school reports 199 average attendance and $39.86 raised for the year. The treasurer's report shows that $182.70 has been raised by the church for all missionary purposes and that every missionary day has been observed by a sermon on each particular theme and an offering.

The treasurer's report also shows that the total amount of money raised by all departments of the church for the year was $3,382.48.

The pastor's report shows that he has preached 136 sermons, conducted eight funerals, united in marrriage 15 couple, added 36 to the church, made 641 calls, issued 14,500 exponents, issued 350 church directories and had printed for city distribution over 8,000 tracts.

There are many unmentionable items that cannot be herein tabulated. Five additions have been recently received into the congregation. The future of the church is brightening and plans are being completed to remodel the church building.

Over $800 was raised yesterday, in cash and good pledges, to wipe out an old debt that has been hanging over the church for years. It has been done and we are all happy, and now are pushing forward, facing a bright future for the glory of the Redeemer's kingdom and the salvation of precious souls. A. M. HOOTMAN, pastor.

Commencement Louisville Bible School.

The Louisville Bible School is an institution for the free education of colored men for the ministry of the Word. It was established by the Board of Negro Education and Evangelization of the Christian Church in 1892, beginning its first session Oct. 1 of that year in the city of Louisville, with one student in attendance. President Garfield once said that his conception of the essential of a university consisted of a log with a student at one end and Prof. Mark Hopkins at the other. Instead of the log in this instance was the side room of the little Christian Church on Hancock St., and in place of Mark Hopkins was Prof. A. J. Thomson. The one student sat at the feet of his instructor all alone for six weeks. This one student was twenty-eight years old and had previously enjoyed just two years of education in his childhood. But others came and the school has steadily grown in power and efficiency, and has dealt with an average of about 30 students per year, doing a noble work of education and Christianization in the midst of seemingly insuperable difficulties.

The eighth anniversary was celebrated with appropriate commencement exercises on Thursday evening, June 7, in the Hemeret St. Church, where the school begun in '92, and where the old Bible School taught by Jephtha Hobbs some thirty years ago did its humble but beneficent work. The church was beautifully decorated for the occasion by the ladies of the church and the music for the occasion was also furnished by these ladies under the supervision of Mmes. Mead and Bonner, assisted by a well-trainad body of singers. These ladies did their part well and deserve great credit for their success.

The church was filled with a fine audience, among whom were quite a number of the white friends from Louisville and New Albany, including Bro. Wynne, minister of the New Albany Church, and several other preachers. The only white Louisville preacher present was S. M. Bernard, of the Parkland Church. Promptly at 8:15 Prof. Thomson set his program in motion. I would like to give the program in full had I space and time, with detailed comments, for I never listened to one more worthy of notice. But I can only speak of it here in general terms. Eleven young men took part in the exercises, each with a short sermon or address of from ten to fifteen minutes in length These young men seemed to be from twenty to thirty years of age. There was not a weak or bad-looking man among them, and their performance was in every case a gratification and surprise to the friends of the institution who were present. The addresses were promptly delivered and every one kept strictly within the time allotted. In delivery and manner as well as motive these addresses were remarkable. There was no ranting or bombast, not a useless or merely ornamental word, the greatest simplicity and directness of expression and the very few gestures simple and appropriate. What surprises me most was the almost absolutely correct English and clear, distinct enunciation. Not a word was lost, mumbled or slurred. The fact is that the negro has natural oratorical genius and with patient criticism, and unrelenting discipline of such a man as Prof. Thomson, wonderful results may be produced.

Another remarkable characteristic of these addresses was the broad-minded nobleness of the ideas expressed. There was the glow and fervor of the negro character—zeal and intenseness, but neither sectarianism nor bigotry. The addresses showed accurate and full knowledge of Bible history, of the contents of the Word of God, as well as good knowledge of general science.

Whatever anybody North or South may believe or say about the capacity of the negro for mental and moral development, here, right before our eyes, was absolute demonstration of clear thinking, sound reasoning and noble feeling—a perfect group of the essential elements of Christian doctrine and the power of self-control discipline. The simple truth is that all that is required for the education and perfect Christianization of the negro is time, patience and devotion on the part of his teacher. This is given him in the Louisville Bible School. No more difficult task in education was ever set before the teacher than has confronted Prof. Thomson in this work to which he has given his life and powers with absolute devotion for the past eight years. These students come to the school in mature years with almost no previous education in most instances, and the little they have received having been often more of an injury than advantage, many utterly unable to write, read or spell, or speak a word of Eeglish correctly. They are awfully poor, not more than two or three of those who have come to the school since its beginning having been able to pay their way without daily work of some kind in the city. They get work wherever they can find it as house servants, stable boys, janitors, waiters, sleep, eat and clothe themselves as they can, under all manner of hardships, but stick to their purpose heroically. They are in the midst of a great city with all its evil influences and temptations, and yet in the eight years of the history of the school there has been the very smallest element of trouble in the line of moral conduct or discipline. They come with all the faults and disadvantages of their ignorance and poverty, but with earnest hearts and spirits that thirst and aspire, and they yield to patient instruction and devoted toil of the teacher marvelous results. Those young men who spoke to us Thursday night were men—serious, intelligent, modest, sincere—the negro clothed and in his right mind, a group full of all the promise and hope which an earnest believer in and friend of the work could desire. If the work of the Christian brotherhood through the Board of Negro Education and Evangelization had resulted in no other harvest than these eleven or twelve young ministers it would fully justify all its cost and more. The establishing and maintenance of this school has beed marked by wisdom, prudence and good judgment at every step of the way. With rigid economy, sleepless vigilance and patient devotion its work has been carried on to this present. It has an ideal servant and director in Prof. A. J. Thomson who, with his assistant, Octavius Singerton, is building here the foundation of a grand work for the world's redemption. No nobler, more promising, more wise and Christlike work is before the energies and zeal of Christian people to-day than the work of the Louisville Bible School.

Lord God open thou the eyes of the Disciples of Christ to see it and their hearts to keep it, to know their day of opportuniny! W. J. Loos.

Commencement at Add-Ran.

The commencement exercises of Add-Ran University have just closed. They began June with a piano recital, followed by programs giv by the departments of elocution and music, and joint entertainment given by the literary s cieties. A beautiful exhibition, given by the a department, was also a feature. The baccalaur ate sermon, by Acting President A. Clark, was d livered June 3. The address was a strong one.

The closing exercises were held in the chap June 5. David Walk, of Sherman, Texas, d livered the commencement address, choosing his theme, "Character." Bro. Walk is a veter on such occasions, and this effort was fully up his high standard. Four men received the degr A. B., one was graduated from the Business C lege and two ladies received diplomas from t Music Department.

A great wave of enthusiasm swept over t audience when the trustees announced that wo on the new Girls' Home would begin at once. Th means a long step in advance for Add-Ran. T plans call for a large, handsome, three-sto brick structure, trimmed with stone. Although may look small side by side with the mammo four story edifice, the main building, it will be ornament to the campus and the pride of Ad Ran's friends.

Financially the university is seeing bet times. The former debt has been reduced, a there has been practically no deficit on the curr expenses of the past year.

The prospects for next year are encouragi Nearly all the old students are expected to turn and many will bring others with them. T senior class will probably number at least a doz candidates for the degree A B. The decision the authorities to give A. B., for the cour in Ancient Classics, Modern Classics, Science a Bible has met with unanimous approval.

A number of the professors will study in t University of Chicago and other institutio during the summer. There will be little char in the personnel of the faculty. A president h not been secured, but the trustees hope to a nounce their selection in a few days.

The College of Law, a new department, h been added to the University, and will begin first session next September. Prof. E. R. Co rell will be dean, and able assistants have alre been secured.

Add-Ran has a splendid body of consecra business men for trustees, the faculty is aggr sive and harmonious, and the student body is cellent. Frank H. Marshall

Zimmerman, of Cotner University, is the industrious and efficient pastor and a true yokefellow in the work. He is making a great sacrifice for the cause at Dassel and is doing a great work. Brethren, let me hear from a number who will give from one to five dollars to the cause there. It will help him greatly to get the work on a solid basis. They have taken every missionary collection for the year, and each one has been a good one. The people are poor and few are actual members at present. The town has voted out the saloon and the mayor, a very estimable man, is on the side of reform. We have the only English-speaking church in the town and numbers of our religious neighbors will go into it if they can have assurance of permanency. We have a good house and are out of debt. Brethren, how many will come to the front and help them? You cannot find a better place to give your means.—W. H. WILLYARD.

Bro. John Burns' Whereabouts.

As early as 1862 Bro. John Burns began to be known in the activities of the Church of the Disciples in Missouri. Nowhere has his hand appeared more conspicuously than in the counsels and work of the Sunday schools. He was our first Sunday-school missionary in the state, and whether devoting himself wholly to such effort or to making a livelihood in the commercial world, and spending all the time, he could consistently to the church, he has been found in the front ranks, not only at convention time, but in the interim as well. Many know him as the founder of the John Burns Book Company, of other days. He has to a most unusual extent preserved his youth and has almost constantly been identified with leading business interests. Very recently he associated himself with the Smithers Undertaking Co., which dates its career, under a slightly different name, back to 1850, and which during all these years has served the purpose of its existence in a manner most acceptable to the citizens of St. Louis and all who have occasion to call upon it from many parts of the country Its rooms are now at 1415 Olive St., St. Louis, and may be reached by either local or long distance telephone. It is needless to say that this company has laid under tribute approved appliances and modern methods, and is prepared for any emergency.

The Knight of the Bittersweet.

GRACE PEARL BRONAUGH.

He was a knight of modern days,
His shield was faith, his banner praise,
His sword was truth, and it was sure
(She was a woman good and pure);
And in the tournament of life
His soul was dauntless in the strife.
He feared no danger, no defeat,
This noble knight of bittersweet,
Of bittersweet, of bittersweet.

The bittersweet was bright and red
The day they parted, and he said:
"Dear love, the path of life is steep,
Since I must leave you I would keep
Some token of your constancy
To carry with me till I die."
She paused to find a token meet,
Then plucked a bunch of bittersweet,
Of bittersweet, of bittersweet.

He took the gift and left her then—
He never saw her face again.
The bittersweet grows on her grave
And still he keeps the gift she gave.
It nerves him on to noble deeds,
Her type of faith it daily leads
Him upward where all true hearts meet.
Ah, loss is bitter, love is sweet,
The bittersweet, the bittersweet!

He says: "Let faith my watchword be,
Faith in the Father and in thee;
For faith has wings by which we rise
To meet our lost in Paradise.
This world is bitter in a sense,
But sweet is Heaven's recompense
To all who walk with willing feet;
The bitter first, and then the sweet—
The bittersweet, the bittersweet!"

Romance and Romanticism.

MARY E. WARE.

Rome, Roman, Romance, Romanticism! Twenty-five centuries of human effort lie hidden in the history of those words.

In the early dawn of civilization, one city by its powers and patriotism became strong enough to lift its head above its neighbors and the name Rome was respected by all.

This city, after two or three centuries of warfare, conquered all of the rest of Italy. The people of these subjugated provinces demanded the same political rights and privileges that were bestowed on the residents of Rome. They fought for these principles and were victorious. Then the word Roman, as applied to political rights, had as much significance as the word Rome.

The Roman legions crossed the Alps and carried the Roman language and civilization wherever they went. These became the bases of new languages and new civilizations called the Romance.

Then came the renaissance, that great intellectual awakening along the classic lines. This was followed by a reaction in the latter part of the 18th century. Students revived the study of the romance of the middle ages. This revival is called Romanticism.

How many migrations there were of the Aryan people to Western Europe is not known, but at the beginning of authentic history the Celts were in Southwestern Europe. They were subjugated [by the Romans. Both in turn were conquered by the Teutons. You can see what a commingling of languages this produced! The Roman language remained the basic element, because the laws of its structure and idiom were fixed in standard literature. Besides, it was the language of the cultured in all countries. One scholar had but to speak in the pure Latin idiom to know that he would be understood by another scholar. Then, too, it was the language of the church, for the liturgies and the Bible were written in it.

Several dialects founded on the popular Latin idiom were soon developed: Spanish, Portuguese and Catalan in the southwest; French in Northern France and Western Switzerland; Provencal in Southern France and Northern Italy; Italian in Central and Southern Italy, and Romanian in Romania.

France was the leading country in Europe during the Middle Ages. Her language was the first of the Romance to be crystallized into a native literature.

The Spanish and Portuguese languages were later in development and were not so evenly sustained. The Catalan was little more than a Spanish dialect and in the 15th century was merged into the Castilian.

Dante's Divine Comedy did for the Italian what Luther's translation of the Bible did for the high German, and what Shakespeare's dramas did for the Middle English dialect, that is, made it the standard for all time.

The Provencal of Southern France reach such a degree of perfection in the 10th century that its lyrics became the models for all of the neighboring countries and continued to be so until the 13th century. Southern France was the home of the Albigensian heresy. The power that uprooted the hersey stilled forever the voice of the troubedours, and the beautiful Provencal language degenerated into a patois.

The literary education of the day is very incomplete; that is, if such an education implies the study of the growth and development of all literature. Because the classic, the renaissance and the modern are studied, while the Romance is neglected. Spencer and Milton are full of references to this literature; Shakespeare borrowed largely from it for his dramas; Lowell and Longfellow delight in its imagery, and Tennyson's Idylls of the King is the imperishable monument of the Romance literature.

We cannot afford to miss the study of this literature. It cultivates the imagination. It broadens the sympathies. It gives an opportunity to study how modern literature developed those characteristics which distinguish it from the classic.

The important romances of the Middles are grouped in three cycles, though there are some subordinate ones. Those about King Arthur are prevalent in France, Germany and England; those about Charlemagne, in France and Italy, and those about Amadis de Gaula, in Spain and Portugal.

When the Teutons overran and conquered the Roman Empire, they brought with them two customs that had great influence in shaping the political history of Western Europe and the form of modern literature. One was the homage they paid to their warrior leaders. In this lies the beginning of feudalism, knighthood and chivalry. The other was the custom of maintaining professional singers, whose songs on festive occasions in praise of these warrior heroes gave rise to the mass of semi-historical legends which form the greater part of the material used in these cycles.

The maintenance of these singers dates very far back in their history. Facitus in speaking of the Germans says: "Their songs were the poetry and history of the people." Reference is also made to them in Beowulf, the oldest of the Saxon poems. Each singer made whatever change he chose in singing his song-epic, adding to or omitting from according to the pleasure of his hearers. In this way the heroic annual soon became the heroic legend.

Before the Germans left the banks of the Rhine they had a well-advanced heroic poetry, and Ulfelas had translated the Bible into the Gothic language.

Of the three Germav people that entered France before the sixth century the Franks were the strongest. They drove the Visigoths into Spain, and the flower of the German poetry blossomed a new in the Spanish soil.

In 711 the Moors conquered the Visigoths, possessed themselves of Spain and threatened France. In the face of this great danger the national antagonisms of these Christian Germans were forgotten. They were now one people, struggling against the onward march of the Mohammedans. The deeds of the old pagan heroes were no longer of any interest to them. New songs were sung. These were purely French, representing Christian heroes defending the

DRUNKENNESS CURED.

An eminent St. Louis physician has given a positive answer to the oft asked question, is drunkenness a disease, or is it simply a temptation that cannot be resisted by a vast number of the human race? The physician in question is Dr. Ozias Paquin, who for years has been a practicing physician in the City of St. Louis. He has answered this question by taking five of the worst drunkards that could be found and cured them of all further appetite for intoxicating drinks. The five cases were all beyond middle age and they had sunk into the deepest pit of drunkenness, with the odor of drink about them so obnoxious that it was almost impossible to stand within speaking distance. He not only cured them of all desire for intoxicating drink, but at the same time placed upon their cheek the flush of health, and into their eyes the light of happiness, and took from their person the odor of whiskey. It was almost a miracle, for he had raised five cases from degradation into the sunshine of health and happiness. Dr. Paquin has cured hundreds of patients who were relapses from other treatments, and in every instance he cured these patients, and they have remained cured for months and years. It can therefore be said that the Paquin Treatment is a permanent cure, and not a temporary one, for the patient never relapses to his former condition. We know of no more humane work being done at the present time than that which Dr. Paquin is doing, and it is the duty of every reader to assist Dr. Ozias Paquin in his noble work, and if any reader has brother, sister, husband, father or friend in whose system lurks the disease of drunkenness, he should at once send their name to Dr. Paquin or see that they either visit or place themselves in communication with the Ozias Paquin Immune Co., Suite 1113 Chemical Bldg., St. Louis. The reader that does this will certainly be doing a christian act, for no matter how hopeless the case may seem, and no matter how many other treatments have unsuccessfully been tried, the method known as Ozias Paquin Treatment will perfect a cure, dispelling all desire for drink, and at the same time will place the constitution in a robust and healthy condition.

cross. These songs form the starting-point of the Charlemagne cycle.

Charles Martel, who stopped the advance of the Mohammedans at the battle Tours in 732, was the first hero in this cycle. His son, Pelun, expelled the Lombards from Northern Italy and gave the conquered territory to the Pope. By this campaign he not only laid the foundation of the temporal power of the Pope, and caused the Franks to regard themselves as the champions of the church, but he added the religious element to the cycle. Charlemagne, the third of the line, laid such a hold on the imagination of the people that became central figures around whom all the legends clustered.

The real Charlemagne spent much of his time in warring against the pagan Saxons, and in holding the Mohammedans at bay. He organized a strong central government, and established schools that were the forerunners of our modern education. He tried to renew the glory of the old Roman Empire, with France as the center, but at heart he was a German. For he had the Saxon ballads collected and written, thus opening the way for ballads being written about himself.

There were nearly two hundred of the song-epics. Those sung in the ninth and 10th centuries are lost. The 11th century produced the "Song of Roland," the greatest poem of the Middle Ages. For two centuries these song-epics were sung from village inn to castle hall by the wandering ministrels, who accompanied their songs with the music of an old harp or crude violin.

In the 13th century some effort was made to arrange these songs into a cycle. Pulchi, Boiardo and Ariosto were the first to see the literary value of this great mass of material and to reduce it to artistic form. According to their arrangement the Charlemagne cycle is subdivided into three great divisions, each having many subordinate parts. The first represents the history of Charlemagne, his family and the adventures of his peers. The second is about the conquest of Narbonne, and the third was about the defeat of Roland at Roncevalles.

Whatever touches the hearts of the common people becomes immortal. This is why the Song of Roland was sung, not only at the battle of Hastings, but in every tongue in Western Europe; yea, it crossed the stormy Atlantic and found its way into the sagas of Iceland.

It is based on the historic fact of Charlemagne's expedition against the Basques, not the Saracens, as the legend has it, in 778. The rear of his army was commanded by Roland. Through a treacherous arrangement with the enemy by Ganelon, every peer, to a man, was killed. Roland, just before his death, blows a tremendous blast upon his horn to warn Charlemagne of the treachery. The description of this and its effect on the king and his army is the finest part of the poem. Charlemagne's charge upon the Basques and the punishment of Ganelon make up the remainder of the cycle.

Not the king, but the brave individual, was the hero of the age. The mass of humanity has ever been democratic in its sympathies. It must have been this injustice that appealed to the hearts of the common people.

Advice to a Boy.

BY DAVID STARR JORDAN,
President Leland Stanford, Jr., University.

The best time to be a boy the world has ever known is just this time—just at the outstart of a great, vigorous, forceful, wisdom-loving century. And just the best place to be a boy is right here in the United States, the one part of the earth where a boy can grow up with a reasonable chance of making the most of himself. "America means opportunity," says Emerson, and to the right kind of a boy this is the main thing.

Now, to the right kind of a boy, a boy with something in him, the best advice that anybody can give is summed up in these two sentences: Keep yourself clean. Go to college.

As to the first, cleanliness is strength. The various forms of evil mostly show themselves as short cuts to happiness. Gambling and stealing are short cuts to wealth. But they do not often lead thither, and when they do wealth does not bring happiness. You cannot have a really good time in life unless you earn it, unless you deserve it. So with immorality and intemperance in all their various forms. They promise pleasure; they do not bring happiness. A spurious pleasure is not permanent; it leaves "a dark-brown taste in the mouth;" "it is different in the morning." Real happiness makes room for more happiness. The joy of action, the beauties of nature, the pleasure of accomplishment, the charm of congenial society, the strength of being clean—all these delights grow on us with our enjoyment of them. They take nothing away, but leave us with still greater strength.

"We may," says President Ripley, of the Santa Fe Railroad, speaking of the demands of "a soulless corporation" on its employees, "we may be perfectly sure that the man who walks with truthfulness, sobriety and morality, who is what the world calls straight, and who can look everybody in the eye, will command the respect of his neighbors and himself, and will be infinitely happier in the world than the man who does not."

To go to college is to seek the training which will fit for the duties of life. It should be to find the secret of power. A man may be educated, and well educated, without darkening the college doors. But he is educated in the longest and slowest way. He has lost valuable time and wasted much effort.

A college is a device to bring students together that they may educate each other and that older and wiser students may educate them. "It brings," says Emerson, "every ray of genius to its hospitable halls, that their combined influence may strike the heart of the youth in flame."—Saturday Evening Post.

A Mother's Love.

JEAN STEELE.

An angel came down to the earth one day,
And wishing to carry some treasure away,
Back to the gates of the heaven above,
Where all is perfect, and all is love,
He looked about him for something fair,
Something that would with heaven compare,
Something that even in that pure light
Would still be faultless, pure and bright,
Something that never could know decay—
This he would bear from the earth away.
He found himself in a garden old,
Where lilies pure white, with anthers of gold,
Lifted their heads o'er the garden beds.
"These are perfect, they shall be mine," he said.
Then chasing the shadows across the ground,
A sunny-faced child was the next he found.
As he caught the smile from the baby's face
He said, "Ah, how perfect 'twill heaven grace!"
And again he found a jewel rare,
A mother's love and tender care.
Then the angel went back to the gates above
With the flower and smile and mother's love.
But before he passed through the gates of gold
He paused a moment these gems to behold.
The lily no longer was white and gold,
But lay there withered and sad to behold.
The smile once bright on the baby's face
Had faded, and now had lost its grace.
But O! as he looked at the mother's love,
He found it as changeless as heaven above.
"I have found but one treasure on earth," said he,
"And this I will take through the gates with me."

Mother, Home and Heaven.

My mother, Rachel Husband, was born in Somerset County, Pa., June 12, 1812, and departed this life at her home in Randolph County, Ill., Jan. 3, 1900, being 87 years, 6 months and 22 days old. Her maiden name was Younkin, the oldest of ten children born to Henry and Elizabeth Younkin. March 31, 1833, she was married to Harmon Husband. To them were born ten children—five sons and five daughters—among whom were two pairs of twins, the writer and his mate being the youngest of the family. In 1843 they moved from Pennsylvania to West Liberty, Iowa, where they lived one year and then moved to Randolph County, Ill., settling on the old homestead Feb. 21, 1844. June 21, 1876, mother was left a widow, father having been suddenly thrown from a horse and killed. She remained on the farm with her children till the day of her death, above noted. Mother was baptized into Christ by Chancy Forward, about 1835. She was a faithful Christian and had a grasp of the history of the Reformation equaled by few. Her accurate knowledge of events from the beginning has ever been a source of strength and blessing to the writer. She did more than any one living to encourage and help me in my early efforts in the ministry. When called to various places to preach, mother would always say: "Go and help them all you can." Hence, what is without a mother? For years it has been my delight to visit the old homestead and pay my tribute of respect and love to the center of the household. But my visit in midwinter was a sad one, for home had lost its charm and center of attraction.

The winter of death had laid his icy hand upon mother, and we followed her through the orchard, beneath the branches of the apple trees, where we laid her in the quiet family resting-place on the hill. The funeral services were simple but impressive, the entire service being conducted by my children in the gospel, whom I baptized three years ago. Thomas J. Holloman, my son in the gospel, preached the sermon from Rev. 14:13. Thus, amidst our grief and tears we were comforted by the songs, prayers, words and voices of loved ones in the Lord. Thank God, "in the room of this grief-shadowed present there shall be a Present in whose reign no grief shall gnaw the heart, and never shall a tender tie be broken."

That evening the four only living children gathered round the old family fireside to share each other's sorrows, talk of former days and of the prospects of the life before us, here and hereafter. After a few days' visit we divided momentoes of the old home and separated, Charles and Hattie to their home in Carbondale, Ill., the writer to his home in Minnesota and Joseph, my twin, remaining on the old homestead.

The bright memories of home are: a Christian father and mother, the family altar and family Bible, a well-selected library, the family religious paper, the Shunamites upper room for Elisha the prophet and the pure and holy atmosphere of a country home.

"Home! home! sweet, sweet home,
Be it ever so humble,
There's no place like home"—except

HEAVEN.

"What is there beyond?
Hear what the wise and good have said: Beyond
That belt of darkness still the years roll on;
More gently, but with not less mighty sweep
They gather up again and softly bear
All the sweet lives that late were overwhelmed
And lost to sight, all that in them was good,
Noble, and truly great, and worthy of love—
The lives of infants and ingenuous youths,
Sages and saintly women who have made
Their households happy; all are risen and borne
By that great current in its onward sweep,
Wandering and rippling with caressing waves
Around green islands with the breath
Of flowers that never wither. So they pass
From stage to stage along the shining course
Of the bright river, broadening like a sea.
As its smooth eddies curl along their way
They bring old friends together; hands are clasped
In joy unspeakable; the mother's arms
Again are folded round the child she loved
And lost. Old sorrows are forgotten now,
Or but remembered to make sweet the hour
That overpays them; wounded hearts that bled
Or broke are healed forever. In the room
Of this grief-shadowed present there shall be
A Present in whose reign no grief shall gnaw
The heart, and never shall a tender tie
Be broken; in whose reign the eternal change
That waits on growth and action shall proceed
With everlasting concord, hand in hand."

J. BRECKINRIDGE ELLIS.

And God did bless Frank Douglas, as he blesses all his children. She found her Kentucky home more then she ever dreamed of, when she had dreamed of home; and her father and mother were dearer and nobler than she had ever thought to find. She was surrounded by love and refinements, and every day was full of brightness, because a light burned in her heart. And she continued to be a sweet influence in the lives of others; for she let the happiness which she received shine through her transparent soul into other lives. Thus the pleasures which brought smiles to her pure face caused smiles to light up in the faces of her friends, for she did not live to herself. But prosperity had not changed her. She had been happy and she had given happiness when all seemed dark and well-nigh hopeless. Before finding her parents she had been comforted by God's promises to his lonely ones; now she was enjoying those fulfilled promises. That was the only difference. And there was a wide porch that ran all along the front of the house, with a brick wall built up as high as her waist and beautiful vines covering it so snug and tight you could not see one speck of red from the outside. I wish you could have seen her as she used to stand leaning upon the wall, looking out upon beautiful Broadway. She made one of those pictures that are so bright and sweet and restful, you can forgive the electric car its hideous shriek and even think well of the scissors man, who goes about jangling his bell.

And her school days! I wish I could tell you about them, and how she learned all the principle soda fountains on Main and Broadway, and how she got acquainted with the children who live in those delightful homes on Third Street and Short and Fourth Street, and how she used to go along Main Street, nearly a mile west, till she came to the great park where they held Chautauquas and have barbecues with burgoo and speeches. During one Chautauqua season she camped out there in a tent with her father and mother and Mrs. Dew and Brother Wilton. She saw Frank Beard draw pictures as fast as he could draw, and she heard Sam Jones preach two hours without anybody going to sleep, and she felt so sorry when the president begged people to attend the meetings of the "Round Table," that she used to go and make the seventh in the audience. She was glad she lived in Lexington! And there were walks out to the cemetery, which was so beautiful with its water lilies, that you didn't mind dying so much, after all! Well, one morning Frank woke up and found that she had graduated and that she was no longer a little girl. And I would have kept her a little longer—yes, forever! But she would get big, and she would put on long dresses, and she would put up her hair and become a young lady! Oh, Frank, how could you, when you knew all the time I liked you better as a little girl!

Not many days after her graduation a young man came to Lexington expressly to see Miss Frank, as I suppose we must call her. I wish, for my part, he had stayed at home. You could never guess who it was, but I will tell you it was Ronald Clarmont, so you will not be kept in suspense. He had actually come to stay three weeks! And he had the effrontery to declare that the time seemed cruelly short! He had so much to tell her, and she to tell him. Mrs. Clarmont had learned that her former housekeeper, Mrs. Dew, was her husband's sister; and that had humbled her pride. (Some people's pride is built upon such queer foundations.) She had discovered that it was Mr. Clarmont who had robbed the housekeeper of her little comfort, "Emily Dew." Clara had married an old gentleman who had the gout and a fortune. He was so close-fisted, or prudent—yes, that is a pleasanter word—that she got small benefit from his fortune; but she had the full benefit of his crossness and bitterness, resulting from the pain of his gout. She might just as well have had the gout herself; and as for him he should have been more careful in his eating. Vega was still in a school which had been founded for the benefit of the deaf. She had progressed rapidly in her life work as an artist, and she intended to go to Paris next year to perfect herself. She was happy and contented because she loved her work.

Miss Frank told the young man how the gold watch had been found in the leathern pocket of the old cradle, and that Nance was living in the city. She kept a small restaurant on North Upper Street, not far from the university. She said the students made a pet of Nance, because she was so uncommonly ugly and benevolent. Sometimes Nance sent her special dishes which taught the palate why it had been put in the human body—even Mrs. Dew had ceased to suspect poison. Brother Wilton made them a yearly visit, which was a time of festivity and love and fond recollections. And Miss Frank and Ronald indulged in recollections on their own account; particularly of the morning when he accidentally shot himself. They went to that little restaurant on North Upper, where they bought a half-moon pie. And as he and the young lady were eating it, just as if they were children, Ronald told Nance he was the boy she had grabbed up in her arms, and put upon her horse. And he said that as she dashed away with him he had been as terrified as if she had been an old witch whose broomstick had developed legs and a tail! "And I hope you'll excuse the liberty," said old Nance, twitching her nose.

Well, one evening, as those two sat in that small patch of green called, for fun, "Fayette Park," Ronald asked her if she remembered how he had promised to come to see her when he was grown.

"And I said at that time," he faltered, as if he had suddenly grown afraid of her, "that I would tell you what you have been to me. But that cannot be told. So instead, Frank, I am going to ask you to be even more to me than ever you have been." Did you ever hear such impudence? I know what I should have said to him! Well, he tried to get courage to go on—I wish for my part, he had gone on home where he belonged! And Miss Frank said: "What more can I be, Ronald?" You see she was willing. I have always wished Miss Frank had kept still and let him flounder along as best he might. But that helped him out. And he told her. And they married. And the next year they went with Vega to Paris, and after that all three lived together, and Vega painted famous pictures. One of them was called "The Imprisoned Huguenot." Perhaps you have seen it. It represents the interior of a prison, which the Huguenot, sentenced to life-confinement, has adorned with the works of art. Flowers bloom along the walls. Books are strewn about. Musical instruments abound. In short, all is bright and beautiful in that prison, and brighter and more beautiful than all, is the expression of the life-prisoner. Through the bars you catch a glimpse of the world. And out there, winter has killed the flowers, and the passers by look cold and unhappy, and freedom does not cause them one smile. But the prisoner wears a smile as he sits in a day-dream, one hand lightly touching the head of a beautiful dog that lies stretched at his side. There is an open book upon his knee. It is the Bible. Well, that life-prisoner is Vega. And her prison bars are her misfortunes. Never for her will the birds sing, for her sense of hearing is destroyed. And yet those who look upon her with pity are no happier than she. For she has adorned her soul with the flowers of contentment and patience, and in her heart is treasured the book that lies open upon the Huguenot's knee—the only book that could explain the magic of that smile.

THE END.

A GOOD COMPLEXION

Depends upon Good Digestion.

This is almost an axiom, alth ugh usually we are apt to think that cosmetics, face powders, lotions, fancy soaps, etc., are the secrets for securing a clear complexion. But all these are simply superficial assistants.

It is impossible to have a good complexion unless the digestive organs perform their work properly. Unless the stomach by properly digesting the food taken into it furnishes an abundance of pure blood, a good complexion is impossible.

This is the reason so many ladies are using Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, because they promptly cure any stomach trouble, and they have found out that perfect digestion means a perfect complexion and one that does not require cosmetics and powders to enhance its beauty.

Many ladies diet themselves or deny themselves many articles of food soly in order to keep their complexion clear. When Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets are used no such dieting is necessary; take these tablets and eat all the good, wholesome food you want and you need have no fear of indigestion nor the sallow, dull complexion which nine women out of ten have, solely because they are suffering from some form of indigestion

Bear in mind that beauty proceeds from good health, good health results from perfect indigestion and we have advanced the best argument to induce every man and woman to give this splendid remedy a trial.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets can be found in drug stores and costs but 50 cents per package.

If there is any derangement of the stomach or bowels they will remove it and the resultant effects are, good digestion, good health and a clear, bright complexion.

SECOND QUARTERLY REVIEW.

(Lesson for June 24.)

The lessons of the past quarter cover a period of something less than one year of the life of our Lord. Beginning with the Sermon on the Mount, delivered in the early summer of 28 A. D., they end with the feeding of the five thousand in the spring of 29. Most of the events occurred in the province of Galilee and many of them in and about Capernaum. This was the year of Jesus' greatest popularity, and there were times when it seemed as though the whole nation would go after him. But at its close the storm clouds began to gather over his head, and the studies of our next quarter will show this opposition gathering itself for the attack which will end only with his death. The year that remains to him for his earthly ministry will be one of increasing sorrow, as he finds himself misunderstood by his own people and hated by the leaders and teachers who ought to have been first to accept him. We can give but a brief paragraph to each of these beautiful lessons which we have been studying, we trust, with increasing interest and profit to our readers.

1. The Beatitudes (Matt. 5:1-12). The law of the Jewish kingdom had been spoken from the summit of rugged Sinai amid thunders and lightnings and was written on tablets of stone. Its language was that of stern prohibition and curses mingled with its promises. The law of the kingdom of heaven was spoken on the green hillside of the Horns of Hattin, amid the quiet beauty of a Galilean summer day; and its precepts were graven on the tables of human hearts. Its first words were blessings and its whole spirit that of love. Its opening beatitudes, eight in number, show us the perfect secret of a happy life. The humble, the sorrowing, the meek, the spiritually hungry, the merciful, the pure in heart, the peacemakers, the martyrs—these are the truly happy. How this reverses the world's ideals, and whenever adopted, transforms human society.

2. Precepts and Promises (Matt. 7:1-14). The harsh judge shall have little mercy shown him. He is best fitted to judge others who has first put himself to the severest test. If we will seek out our own faults we will have less time and still less disposition to criticise those of our neighbor. Yet, rebuke is sometimes called for. Let us not, then, hesitate to administer it lovingly. But we need not be discouraged if it is often ill received. As the dogs will devour the meat from the very altar, and then turn to rend the giver; as swine will trample under their feet the most lovely pearls, so will evil men do violence to our purest motives, and hate us for our sincerest efforts to win them from sin. God will not fail to give us the help we need, for he is better than our earthly parents, and they do not deny us when we ask. When God has heard our petitions and granted them we should in turn do good to our fellowmen according to the Golden Rule. Thus will we walk in the narrow way which leads to life eternal.

3. The Daughter of Jairus Raised (Mark 5:22-24, 35-46). The only daughter of Jairus, a ruler of the synagogue in Capernaum, lay dying. She was but twelve years of age, just budding into womanhood. Jesus answered the agonizing appeal of the father by starting at once for the home. On the way a poor woman was healed of a malady of long standing by simply touching the hem of his garment, her faith bringing quick response from the ever-gracious Healer. Before he reaches the home of Jairus a messenger comes to say it is too late, the damsel is dead. Saying to the despairing father: "Fear not, only believe," Jesus pursued his way and, entering into the house of death, transforms it into a house of life.

4. The Centurion's Servant Healed (Luke 7:1-10). Among the Roman military officers were many, doubtless, who regarded but lightly the social or religious privileges of the people over whom they exercised authority. But some were men of kindly heart, and a few at least learned from the subject Hebrews to know and reverence the true God. Such an one was this centurion at Capernaum who had shown his regard for the people of Israel and their religion by building them a synagogue. When his favorite servant was taken ill it was natural that he should send the Jewish elders to Jesus to intercede for him. Feeling his own inferiority as a Gentile he is also conscious of his personal unworthiness to receive within his roof this great and good prophet; so he asks that Jesus will merely speak the word without taking the trouble to come to his home, and his servant will be healed. His prayer is granted and the Savior utters a high encomium upon his faith, which exceeded that of the chosen people.

5. Jesus and John the Baptist (Luke 7:18-28). Soon after raising the widow's son from the dead at Nain, and probably while still in that vicinity, Jesus is visited by two disciples of John the Baptist who inquired for their Master whether Jesus is indeed the Messiah or whether they shall look for another. A prisoner in the dungeon of Machærus, near the Dead Sea, John for a brief time seems to doubt if he had rightly interpreted the divine oracle heard at the Jordan. But his doubt is forever set at rest when the messengers return and tell him what they have seen and heard of the wonderful works of the Lord. When the messengers have departed Jesus pays a gracious tribute to his faithful servant John, whom he declares to be the greatest of the prophets.

6. Jesus Warning and Inviting (Matt. 11:20-30). Pained by the indifference with which his message of life is received, even in the cities where most of his mighty works were done, Jesus utters his solemn warning against them, declaring that the heathen cities of Tyre and Sidon, and even the infamous Sodom, would not have so utterly disregarded the high privileges they had enjoyed. His loving heart ends this impassioned appeal with the sweet invitation that has charmed countless souls and led them to the arms of infinite love. "Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden and I will give you rest."

7. Jesus at the Pharisee's House (Luke 7:36-50). A wonderful contrast is given us in this lesson between the Pharisee, proud and self-righteous, and the sinful woman, humble and contrite. The former failed to understand Jesus or to reap any benefit from his presence as a guest, while the latter found her way, through penitence and grateful love, into the very heart of Jesus, and went from the house where she entered unbidden with pardon covering her shame and peace filling her heart.

8. Parable of the Sower (Matt. 13:1-8, 18-23). This is the first of seven parables in this chapter in which Jesus sets forth the coming kingdom in its various phases with marvelous skill. The central thought in the parable of the sower is that the effect of the Word of God upon men depends upon the condition of their hearts. The careless hearer is like the beaten wayside, into which the seed cannot fall. The shallow hearer, like the stony ground, will feel but passing impulses for good, which will die in a day. The preoccupied heart, like the thorny ground, cannot bring forth fruit, because it is busy with other matters and the truth cannot have a chance. The consecrated heart is like the good ground, hearing, keeping and obeying the truth and bringing forth much fruit for the glory of God and the good of man.

9. Parables of the Kingdom (Matt. 13:24-33). The parable of the tares shows us the kingdom of heaven in conflict with the enemy of man—the devil. Here the good seed are the children of the kingdom and the tares are the children of the evil one. It is a contest between righteous and unrighteous men with the assurance that righteousness shall conquer in the end. The two short parables of mustard seed and the leaven, set forth the growth of the kingdom in its measure and its manner. Though the beginning is small the end shall be great, as the tiny seed of the plant produces a great herb. And this result shall be brought about by the personal influence of the believer upon the unbeliever, as the little lump of leaven, through contact with the mass of meal, leavens the entire mass.

10. The Twelve Sent Forth (Matt. 9:35-10:8). The twelve disciples whom Jesus had some time before this selected from among his followers to be his ambassadors to the world he now sent forth on a short preaching tour throughout the country with instructions to imitate his work of teaching and healing. The measure of their activity was that of gratitude. "Freely ye have received, freely give."

11. Death of John the Baptist (Mark 6:14-29). About the time of the return of the disciples from this brief tour tidings reached Jesus of the murder of John the Baptist by the infamous Herod Antipas. John had rebuked the king and his adulterous queen, Herodias, and was in prison in the castle Machærus, near the Dead Sea. He refused to put the prophet to death partly because he feared the uprising of the people, and partly because he had still some respect for the man of God. But during a drunken feast the beautiful daughter of Herodias, Salome, danced before Herod with such grace as to draw from him the rash promise of any gift she might ask. Her guilty mother embraced eagerly the opportunity, and the brave witness for righteousness laid down his life and rested after life's fitful fever and arduous toil.

12. The Feeding of the Five Thousand (John 6:5-14). Leaving the territory of Herod Antipas Jesus passes over the Sea of Galilee into Philip's dominions on the northwestern shore of the lake. Followed by a multitude he pities their condition and, despite his weariness, teaches them and heals their sick. The night approaching and the people being too far from their homes to return for food without danger of fainting by the way, Jesus works the wonderful miracle of feeding them with five barley loaves and two little fishes. The remains of the feast fill twelve large baskets. No wonder the people said to one another with bated breath: "This is of a truth the prophet that cometh into the world." He has been, during all these ages since, feeding the hunger of the race.

TOPIC FOR JUNE 24.

OUR ETERNAL DESTINY.

(Matt. 13:47-50.)

There is, perhaps, no lesson which our age needs more to learn than that the wages of sin is death. Our time is better, possibly, than many previous times; but we lay a deal of emphasis on heredity, environment, custom, and so excuse ourselves for deviations from right. We need it thundered in our ears again and again—the wages of sin is death! It never fails to hold good. What a pity it is to know of a man or woman who is crippled by a death in a bone or an organ—a dead eye, or a lifeless arm, or a cancerous breast. And yet how many of us are just that much dead in our souls. What noble men and women we might be but for the death we nurse within us. It handicaps us, cripples us; but blessed be God, if a right eye offends us, we can pluck it out; a right hand, we can lop it off!

A sin, if fostered in our hearts—even a single thought of evil, if cherished—may betray us at some unguarded moment into something we will always blush to remember. "We cannot prevent evil thoughts, sometimes, from coming to our hearts." No, but we can prevent their staying. "We cannot prevent the birds from flying over our heads, but we can prevent them from making nests in our hair." Age-long shall be this fight with evil. Possibly it may last forever, in the largest sense of that word eternal. Possibly the process of seining in our souls for good and bad, of cherishing the good and casting off the bad, may go on forever and forever, world without end. Let us hope, however, that some day we shall altogether conquer, and be perfect.

This morning's paper gives a finger's space to the death of a young inebriate. He had struggled with his sin—trying to pluck out his right eye—and had finally taken the gold cure. Then he fell again and, discouraged, shot his brains out. He left a note expressing sorrow for the pain he had caused his mother. This last was the unkindest cut of all! If only he had lived to struggle on! If only he had dared to fall and fall, but still to struggle! No one's heart felt more kindly toward him than his mother's. No one would have so well understood his temptations, and his heroic fight; his heredity, perhaps, and his environment in childhood, his weakness and his hidden strength. And like as a mother pitieth her children, so does our Father pity us. Let us struggle on, Endeavorers. We shall not win in a day; but we've eternity to win in!

We do not know how long is the way of the transgressor, but we know how hard. Eternity means age-long. And how long is an age, or ages of ages? Who knows? God knows, and in his hands we may safely leave the knowledge. But the question with us is not how long, but how hard. There is no joy in the way of wickedness. There is no such thing as the primrose path of dalliance. There is the flinty road of wrong, and that is all.

It is hard because in it we lose our self-respect. To live at peace with one's self is more needful than to live at peace with neighbors, family or those in authority and influenne. There is nothing one can so ill afford to lose as his honest, humble satisfaction with himself. Yet, this one loses by sin. Death thus comes to all noble effort, worthy enterprise and telling zeal.

The way of the transgressor is hard because in it we lose the good opinion of others. Those who before had respected us withdraw from us, or look at us askance. The common condemnation of wrong-doing is a powerful deterrent, a painful punishment, and possibly is a portion of the age-long lot of the sinner. Separation is a most poignant anguish, if that separation be from those we respect and love. How keen must it be when we are separated from God—especially painful when we have come to know him well. It is a solace, though, to think that he more than all others understands, pities and aids.

There is but one way to regain self-respect and the respect of the community when one has sinned, and that is by turning into the narrow road of right. If we are faithful to confess to him our sin, he is faithful to forgive to us our sin and cleanse us. Let the effort be steady and uncompromising, and the future will care for itself.

As long as there is free will, it looks as if there might be wrong choices, and as long as there is wrong choice there must be punishment. And yet, on the other hand, as long as there is free will, it looks as if one might cease to do evil and learn to do well, and therefore find foregiveness. But our little "looks-as-if" reaches a very small distance in its scope. We can safely leave all the future to his care. It is enough that we cleanse our lives and perfect them, then there can be no doubt of Our Eternal Destiny.

WHAT HATH GOD WROUGHT? OR, MISSIONARY STATISTICS.

By W. J. Lhamon, Director.

The Ecumenical Missionary Conference in New York, last April, gave occasion for valuable statistical work as regards missions. It is to Rev. James S. Dennis that we owe the summary that is given in part below. The work is more fitting since we are so near the close of the century, and the statistics are quite fittingly called centennial statistics. There are times when one feels oppressed with the magnitude of work to be done. It is then that the work already done may come as a reassurance and as an anchor of hope. Historically considered Christianity gives no cause for discouragement to its most ardent advocates.

In considering the following array of figures, the student is asked to remember that in effect the story of modern missions belongs to our century alone, and that it has been the season of seed time, rather than of harvest. Time is a necessary element in the beginnings of all great movements, and there is much truth in the proverb: "Well begun is half done." At least we have the proof that the evangelization of the world is well begun and there is ground for the lively hope that the next century will see ingatherings vaster by far than have taken place in this, and that the twentieth century will be to the nineteenth as summer and autumn are to budding spring.

Here are some of the figures presented by Mr. Dennis. There are 249 societies reporting an income of $17,161,092. There are 5,233 mission stations and 25,586 out stations. There are 10,993 organized churches and 1,289,298 communicants. There is a grand total of 13,607 missionaries, 4,029 ordained native preachers and 69,300 native unordained preachers and teachers. There are 14,940 Sunday-schools and 764,684 Sunday-school scholars. Last year there were additions to the native churches to the number of 83,895 and the contributions from native Christians amounted to $1,833,981, or well-nigh two millions of dollars. The native Christian community including the communicants above given and the adherents, reaches 4,327,283.

These are the leading facts. But besides, there are societies co-operating with foreign missionary societies and there are independent movements which, when tabulated, considerably swell the above. We reserve for a future article the showing respecting orphanages, colleges, hospitals and other institutions, which have great influence upon native peoples and which serve materially to advance the cause of missions. It is a source of great joy that so much has been done, and it should inspire the armies of believers in lands such as our own to press toward the mark of the prize of their high calling in Christ, which calling is the evangelization of the whole world.

Literature

THE LIFE OF D. L. MOODY. By his son. Fleming H. Revell Company, New York, Chicago, Toronto.

Mr. Moody was a very remarkable man in many ways, coming up, as he did, out of poverty with many seemingly insurmountable obstacles barring him from success in life. During his boyhood and young manhood, especially, his environment was such as to deter all young men except those made of heroic stuff.

The work under review presents three distinct periods, without naming them, in Mr. Moody's life. Those who read this life of the great evangelist, if they get a full view of the subject, will see these periods.

The first period includes his early life, his living at home, his conversion, his business engagement in Chicago and his first attempts at Christian work. In this period he had a great struggle with himself and his surroundings. He gained the victory, and in doing so laid well the foundation for future usefulness. He was very fortunate in starting right.

The second period includes his abandonment of business, his activity in Sunday-school and Y. M. C. A. work. This was even a greater struggle for him than the first, for his business prospect was very flattering, and he was making money and knew he was on the way to financial independence. But he had the good judgment to see he could not do Christian work successfully and carry on business at the same time. He abandoned his business for Christ's sake.

The third period includes his evangelistic and educational work. This period is the one in which he has left his greatest impress for good. His evangelistic influence is known in all the large cities of the United States, and in England and Scotland, and thousands have been turned to Christ by his homely, powerful sermons. His meetings have produced, outside of immediate results, a great religious awakening beyond the Atlantic as well as in this country. The Bible Institute, at Chicago, and the Northfield schools are the creations of his force and genius. For he was a man of business as well as an evangelist. These are permanent results, and they will be continued, no doubt, to do the work contemplated by their founder.

The work is well written, is profusely illustrated, but is lacking in literary finish and editorial compression; for it manifests too great haste in its preparation. Yet, it is a fine biography of one of the greatest if not the greatest of the world's evangelists. J. H. S.

WHEELING THROUGH EUROPE by WINFRED ERNEST GARRISON: P p. 263. Price, One Dollar, published by St. Louis Christian Pub. Co.

This is a neat book, giving the incidents of interest in a wheeling tour through England, France, Switzerland, Italy, etc. The company consisted of Mr. Leslie Morgan and the author. The book is well printed on good paper, in new square-shouldered type. The execution is creditable to the Publishing Company as is the flow and diction to the writer. If his tire was punctured running over the rocks and ridges of Europe, the writing continues on nimble-footed and safe. Many of the places written up I have seen and and regard the description as very happy. He saw a larger number of places convenient for courtship than were impressed upon my mind. However, now that I think of it, he is probably right; at any rate I am not competent to join issue with him on a question of that kind. The delicate touches, that leave the historical blushes to adorn the modesty of modern civilization attest the art of the painter. One will get a good idea of peasant life in the countries visited by the young men, in an easy way, from these pages.

The work is a fine contribution to good literature, and is hereby commended to young and old; to one because it is harmless and helpful; to the other because it lends feet and hands to continue the romp and ramble of robust youth. In making a list of books write this at the head.

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE DISSECTED. By A. D. Sector.

This little keen surgical instrument came, in the mail to my table the other day, and it is a pleasure to say a word in its behalf. There is only one weapon to turn against certain things, so impregnable are they in self-assurance and their own infallibility, and that weapon is ridicule. Such is the case in dealing with Christian Science. The world knows that no one had so effectively opposed Christian Science, up to that time, as Mark Twain in his inimitable article. Now is added another effective effort by that trenchant writer whose productions may, by one who knows him, be occasionally recognized in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. He wields a ready and sharp pen. This little book is worthy of him, at his best, and will be of great value to any who are pestered with "scientists." B. A. JENKINS.

CORDRAY.

Sister Cathren T. Cordray departed this life May 22, 1900. She was born in Osage Co., Mo., July 18, 1842. She was married to J. S. Cordray, Oct. 20, 1862. Unto them were born eight children, three of whom reside in Oklahoma and one in Missouri. The other four are sleeping beneath the clods of the valley. Sister Cordray obeyed the gospel in March, 1888, and her husband followed her good example in July of the same year. Sister Cordray lived a devoted Christian life

GEO. F. WOOD.

CROCKER.

Clarence C. Orocker was born in Exira, Iowa, on the 12th day of February, 1879. In the autumn of 1892 he obeyed the gospel of Christ, whom he followed with unswerving loyalty to the end. A stranger to the vices that curse the world, he was a lover of the beautiful, the pure and the true. He graduated at the high school at Anamosa, Iowa, in 1898, carrying with him the honor and esteem of the entire faculty. His herbarium, which he carefully prepared and preserved, speaks of the diligence with which he entered into the study of the wonderful works of God. Thorough and diligent as a teacher, he was inspired with an unflagging zeal for the progress and welfare of every pupil under his care. In the moments of his delirium, he was with his school, hearing recitations, making suggestions and giving directions. On one occasion he seemed unusually weary and exhausted, and turning to his father, who was watching over him, said: "Pa, I wish you would dismiss the school for me." His sufferings were excruciating, and yet, no word of irreverent complaint escaped his parched lips. At one time, turning to his mother so wearied in her watchcare over him, he exclaimed: "There is no one like a mother." Near the close of the struggle, he broke forth in a feeble voice: "Let Him come in. Let Him come in. Let the dear Savior come in." The fierce battle with pneumonia was fought and lost. In one short week the relentless enemy had silenced the batteries of medical science, scaled the battlements and reached the citadel of life. On the 22nd day of May, with no clouds in sight, while the sun's slanting rays touched the verdant hills, he peacefully sank to rest in the arms of his broken-hearted father. His spirit had answered to the call of the Commander-in Chief of men and angels. His funeral took place in the church at Lafayette, Ia., where he had been a worshiper and a worker, Sunday-school teacher and president of the Christian Endeavor. Eld. D. L. Dunkleberger, of Marion, Ia., delivered an excellent address, full of helpful, consoling thought. The choir sang in sweetness and in sadness. The entire community seemed to be in mourning. The floral offering and tearful good-bye of his school was intensely touching and impressive. In the cemetery near the church he was tenderly laid to rest to await the final victory over death.

LENTZ.

Margaret J. Lentz, wife of Peter Lentz, born was born in Stanley County, N. C., January 3, 1843. Sister Lentz united with the Christian Church January, 1872, and continued a faithful Christian until death. She filled all the relations of life with dignity and honor. She loved the house of the Lord, and was always punctual in her attendance upon the worship of God while her health would permit. On May 23, 1900, after a brief illness she was peacefully called away, aged 57 years, 4 months and 20 days. She leaves a husband and six children and a host of mourning friends. Funeral conducted by the writer in the presence of a large audience of sorrowing friends.

CURRENT EVENTS.

As we go to press the Republican clans are gathering at Philadelphia for their National Convention. So far as the nomination for the presidency is concerned, that seems to be a foregone conclusion and the interest has centered about the vice-presidency for several weeks. Gov. Roosevelt has been frequently mentioned in this connection, but has steadfastly declined to be considered, and has even gone so far as to say that he would decline even if nominated. At this writing, however, it looks as if Mr. Roosevelt would be nominated on the ticket with President McKinley, nolens volens. The pressure has been so heavy on the New York governor that he has gone so far as to say that if he is nominated in spite of his protest, he would not feel at liberty to decline, as that would seem to cheapen the high office, and would probably mean his political death. There is no question but that Mr. Roosevelt is sincere in his desire to avoid the nomination, as his political aspirations lead him in another direction. He prefers to be governor of New York for another term and then to take his chances for political promotion after that. The feeling has been strong for some time that a New York man should have the nomination to counteract the increased strength which it is believed will be given to the Democratic ticket in consequence of of the co-operation of Tammany with that party in the coming campaign. Other names in New York, have been mentioned besides that of Mr. Roosevelt, but Senator Platt, of New York and Mr. Quay, of Pennsylvania, seem to have combined their forces to secure the nomination of Mr. Roosevelt. It is not unlikely that Mr. Platt wants Gov. Roosevelt out of the way in New York, and this is one reason why Gov. Roosevelt hesitates to accept the vice-presidential nomination. Aside from this, however, there is a popular feeling throughout the country that the New York governor would add greatly to the strength of the Republican national ticket, and it looks now as if he would be nominated in spite of himself. It is too early, however, to predict with certainty what the outcome of this political game will be, but it will be known to our readers before this reaches them.

There have been no startling developments during the past week in connection with the South African war. The Boers have been driven from Natal. The raiding forces which interrupted Lord Roberts' communications have been repelled and it is now believed that Lord Roberts' plan is to divide the Free State forces from those of the Transvaal and to deal with them separately. Another part of the British plan of operations appears to be the cutting off the communications of the Boers with Delagoa Bay and thus stopping their supplies. It is rumored that Lord Roberts is engaged with Pres. Kruger and Gen. Botha in arranging terms of peace. There are indications, also, that the British commander in South Africa regards the end of the war as close at hand. The dismissal of a part of the troops which have seen hard service is one of these indications. The situation in China is such as to make it exceedingly desirable to the British Government to close the war in South Africa as early as possible, that it may be the better prepared for exigencies in the Far East. It is not unlikely that this fact has induced Lord Roberts to open communications with the Boer leaders looking to the termination of the war. Such a consummation, with the largest measure of home rule for the Boers that is consistent with the demands of the situation, would be highly gratifying, not only to the people of this country, but to the whole civilized world.

Affairs in China continue to assume a graver aspect. The relief column of 2,500 marines, under Admiral Seymour, is said to be halted at Lang Fang on its way to Pekin, and has been engaged in fighting with the regular troops of China, and that the railroad has been destroyed, both in front and in the rear of them. Admiral Seymour is probably waiting for reinforcements before pressing forward to Pekin. Rumors have disturbed the civilized world to the effect that the Foreign Legations in Pekin have been destroyed, and that the German minister has been killed. These rumors have not as yet been confirmed, but as communications have been destroyed between Pekin and the outside world, there is no opportunity of proving them to be untrue. The Chinese Government is said to be in a quandary as to whether to suppress the Boxers or to take sides with them against the foreign powers. Should the latter course be determined on, the fate of China will be sealed. Its existence under the present empress will be of short duration. Japan and Russia are the only two powers that are prepared to furnish a large number of troops on short notice. Gen. McArthur, in command at Manila, is said to have ordered the 9th infantry to proceed from Tarlac to Manila, whence they will be sent to China. There is less suspicion attached to the use of American troops in connection with China than those of any other nation, because of the well-known fact that this government has no designs on Chinese territory. Its only interest there is the protection of its citizens who are engaged in missionary work or otherwise, and the preservation of the open policy in that country. On this account it is not unlikely that the United States Government will be an important factor in solving the future destiny of the Chinese Empire. There is scarcely room for doubt that the outcome of the present agitation will be the overthrow of the reactionary forces which have been at work of late in China, and of setting that nation forward on a new career of civilization and of Christian development.

Since the foregoing paragraph was written, important news has been received of developments in China. On the 16th inst., the admirals of the foreign powers, in port at Taku, seeing the place undergoing additional preparation for hostilities, demanded the surrender of the forts by two o'clock the next morning. At 12:30 A. M. the forts opened fire on the gunboats which replied, silencing the forts and compelling their surrender at 8 A. M. The particulars of this engagement have not yet reached us. Taku is the port for Tien Tsin and Pekin, and is located at the mouth of the Pei Ho River, which empties into the Gulf of Pechili, an arm of the Yellow Sea. This is an event of tremendous importance. As a dispatch from Dondon expresses it: "Two worlds are at war. A battle has been fought between a powerful Christian fleet and the Chinese forts at Taku. The civilization of Confucius and the civilization of Christ have opened a war for supremacy. There has been no formal declaration of hostilities, but the irresistible march of circumstances has reached the point that statesmen and scholars have for generations discerned in the grim future. No diplomatic artifice can smooth away the fallen fortresses, and no bland Oriental obsequiousness can atone for the lives that were lost and the blood that was shed in the battle at Taku. The inevitable struggle has come, and far-seeing observers declare that it will be reached only with the assertion of the suzerainty of the powers, in some form or other, over the Chinese Empire." Another report is to the effect that the relief column, under Admiral Seymour, has returned to Tien Tsin for supplies. The country waits impatiently for news from Pekin, and especially for a denial of the report that the Foreign Legations have been taken. If this should prove to be true, it involves perhaps the massacre of the foreign element in that city, an act that would send a shudder throughout the civilized world.

The report of an election in Cuba may not be of special interest to some people, just now, but the fact that an election has just been held without the least sign of a disturbance anywhere in the island is a matter worthy of more than a passing notice. What looked strange to Americans in the island was the absolute indifference of the people in the matter. It is said that there was no crowd waiting to hear the result, not a cheer raised, nor any demonstration or excitement of note. In Havana the National party elected its entire ticket, the mayor, eighteen councilmen, the treasurer, one correctional judge and three municipal judges. Gen. Rodriguez was elected mayor of Havana. It is thought that the victory of the Nationalists is due to the fact that they were the first in the field and had the benefit of a well-disciplined organization. The total number of votes cast in Havana fell 4,500 below the registration. Such an election looks tame by the side of some of our city or state elections, but it is to be hoped that some of the American election ways will never become familiar to the Cubans.

Last week Samuel D. Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor, came to St. Louis and endeavored to restore peace between the St. Louis Transit Company and its ex-employees, but failed. He first met the strikers and secured an agreement from them to leave the matter of the reinstatement of the men to arbitration. This being the only point in former negotiations in which they had failed it was hoped that the agreement to arbitrate this matter would be acceptable to the Transit Company. But when the matter was presented to the Transit Company on last Saturday by Pres. Gompers it proved unacceptable to the company. The Transit Company agreed to arbitrate this point provided the new employees be represented in the arbitration board, but this Pres. Gompers said he could not ask the strikers to accept, and so all negotations were declared off. The Transit Company rejected Pres. Gompers arbitration on the ground that it would interfere with its contract with men employed to take the strikers' place. Pres. Gompers then reported the non-acceptance of their proposition back to the strikers en masse on Saturday night and advised them to continue the fight against the Transit Company by all lawful methods, but warned them against any unlawful conduct. He also assured them of the sympathy of all labor unions throughout the United States in their struggle for their rights. It is said that less than one hundred of the strikers have returned to the company and that the body of them are as united and firm as at the first. The Transit Company now has about all its lines in operation again, but not all of its cars; neither is it carrying its former amount of passengers. The labor unions and their friends will not patronize the Transit Company's cars and their patronage is by no means a small item. There is talk of establishing a system of bus lines by the unions of the city, but how successful this can be made remains to be seen. As things now stand there is every indication of an all-summer warfare against the Transit Company.

JESUS AS A TEACHER.

At this time of college commencements, when the theme of education is in the air and in the minds of the people, and when churches are holding their conventions in the interest of religious culture and training, it might be well to direct attention to the great Teacher, to the end that we may gather both inspiration and instruction from Him as to how and what to teach. Whatever opinion men may hold on the question of Christ's deity, there is virtual unanimity of sentiment concerning His superiorty over all the religious teachers of the world. There is, indeed, between Him and all other teachers a chasm so wide that He must forever stand alone as the one supreme Teacher of mankind. In this article we direct the attention to a few of the elements which gave Him this prominence as the world's great Teacher.

The first and most obvious element of His supreme power as a teacher is the fact that He placed Himself upon a level with the people whom He was to teach. As the author of the Hebrew letter puts it: "Since the children are sharers in flesh and blood, He also Himself partook of the same." Again "For verily, not of angels doth he take hold, but He taketh hold of the seed of Abraham. Wherefore it behooved Him in all things to be made like unto His brethren that He might be a merciful and faithful high priest in things pertaining to God, to make propitiation for the sins of the people. For in that He Himself hath suffered, being tempted, He is able to succor them that are tempted." Not only was it necessary, in order to perform His priestly function, that He should take upon Him our nature; it was necessary also in order that He might become the world's ideal teacher. The missionary to the South Sea Islands who, finding himself out of touch with the slaves whom he would reach with the gospel, because of the difference of his lot from theirs, and who, to bridge this chasm, sold himself into voluntary servitude and went down into the fields of toil with the slaves, in order that, while sharing in their poverty and bitter servitude, he might make known to them the message of a Savior's love, had caught the true spirit of the great Teacher. The teacher to-day, whether he calls himself preacher, professor or teacher, in the day-school or Sunday-school, who would accomplish the highest results in teaching, must put himself in sympathetic relation with those whom he would teach. He must do this in order to look at life and its problems through their eyes, see and realize their difficulties, and to deal intelligently with them. This the great Teacher did. He was in the beginning with God and was God, but He emptied Himself of His glory and became man that He might the more effectually reach us with His truth and love. "The Word became flesh and dwelt among us."

Another element of power in the success of Christ as a teacher was the fact that He exemplified His doctrine in His life. He was the embodiment of the divine ideal. His was the divine life, lived under human conditions. Abstract teaching would not suffice.

> "And so the Word had breath, and wrought
> With human hands the creed of creeds
> In loveliness of perfect deeds
> More strong than all poetic thought."

"In Him," says his most intuitional and spiritual biographer, "was life, and the life was the light of men." It was not solely nor chiefly Christ's words that made Him the great Teacher, although He spake as never man spake. It was the life incarnate among men that has ever been the light of men. What the world needed was, not a new book describing the divine life, nor a new law setting forth right rules of conduct, nor a new philosophy explaining the causes and reasons of things; it needed the divine life embodied in human form. It needed the truth of God, the love of God, the whole character of God, clothed with a human personality. In a word, it needed "God manifest in the flesh."

It is a remarkable fact that Christ wrote no books, nor did he formulate any system of theology or philosophy. He taught a few great principles which He dropped like seed-truths in the heart of humanity, and above all He lived a life of such transcendent beauty, of such moral perfection, of such sublime heroism, of such divine unselfishness as to conquer the admiration of the whole world, and to become a beacon light to lead humanity on to nobler heights. The supreme secret of Christ's power as a teacher lies in the fact that He translated doctrine into life and creed into conduct. He was the Way, the Truth and the Life, not in the abstract, but in the concrete. The world is influenced more by example than by abstract teaching. Blessed is the teacher that can say to all who learn of him: "Follow me." Here is where most of our teaching and preaching breaks down. It fails to find a concrete illustration in our lives.

Christ was a free teacher. He was no hired pulpiteer, voicing the sentiments of those who employed Him, nor of those with whom He was associated in religious work, but He conceived of Himself as standing in direct relation to God, and responsible alone to Him. His message, therefore, was not modified by the popular opinion of His time, except by way of adapting it to their needs. As a matter of fact His teaching was far above the ethical standard and the religious ideals of His time, and brought Him into antagonism with the religious authorities among the Jews. But if His teaching as embodied in His life had not been beyond the moral life of the men of His time it would have had little value for the world. What prophet, seer or great religious teacher has not been in advance of his age? This is the very reason why God calls him to be a prophet or teacher. It was one of the great sorrows of Christ's life that the people of His own nation would not receive His message, and that even among those who professed to follow Him many turned away and forsook Him, because they could not receive His doctrine. Perhaps no religious teacher has a greater sacrifice than when in being loyal to the truth which God has given him he must do it at the expense of many friends and friendships. But after all it was this very quality of moral heroism in the great Teacher that has made His doctrine endure through all time as the highest standard of morality and as the supreme authority in religious faith and duty. One must work very close to the Master and share very deeply in His spirit if, like Him, he is to be loyal to the truth as God enables Him to see the truth.

Jesus possessed the power, as no other teacher of the world has ever possessed it, to discriminate between that which is vital and enduring in religion and that which is merely incidental and transient, though this has been a characteristic of every great teacher. He knew human nature and its needs. He knew God and His gracious purposes toward men. This enabled Him to lay hold of those vital truths and principles which bring men into right relations with God and with one another. The forms and ceremonies of Judaism, in which the priests took such delight, and subtle refinements and speculations, in which the doctors of the law were so much interested, the traditions of the elders and the scribes, which had made of none effect some of the commandments of God—all these He brushed aside, substituting therefor the simple, child-like trust in God as Father, a pure heart, a clean life, hungering and thirsting after righteousness, seeking the welfare of others and the extension of the kingdom of God among men—a kingdom consisting, not of meat and drink, but of righteousness, of peace and of joy in the Holy Spirit. This, of course, was contrary to all the ideals of the Jewish teachers. But He went steadily forward, declaring that "every plant which my Heavenly Father hath not planted must be rooted up." The temporary, the incidental, the purely national must give place to that which is spiritual, universal and abiding.

Jesus was the greatest optimist who ever lived and taught among men. With the spiritual penetration which enabled Him to look into the hearts of men which no other teacher ever possessed, and to discover depths of iniquity which no eye but His could see, He cherished the largest hope for humanity and predicted its return to God with a boldness of utterance which, even yet, seems rash to the timid, conservative orthodoxy of our time. It was characteristic of Him to see, even in the worst of men, the possibility of salvation and of future greatness. Here is where many teachers fail. They are discouraged with the superficial view of man's sinful condition, and lose heart and hope. Not so Christ. He saw the good along with the evil and He believed in the potentiality of the good over the evil. He sought to find out the good in human nature and to develop that, and by so doing to cast out the evil. His method was to work from within, outward. He saw that the heart was the strategic point in human nature and His plan was to take possession of that and fill it with pure aims, pure thoughts, holy ideals, lofty aspirations and trust these to drive out whatever was evil from the heart and life. He minimized the ills and misfortunes of life and magnified the value of the soul and its immortal destiny. He emphasized those truths which give life a cheerful outlook and opened up for the race a future of never-ending progress. He took poor, sin-cursed and sin-wounded humanity by the hand and bade it arise and look up to the heavens and say: "Our Father."

These are only some of the elements of power in that great Teacher, at whose feet kings and emperors, statesmen, philosophers and scientists are glad to sit as pupils, and who is fast subduing this world to Himself. Let us catch something of His spirit, something of His method, that we may share with Him in bringing about the triumph of truth and righteousness in the earth.

Hour of Prayer.

THE CHURCH'S DUTY TO EDUCATION.

(Deut. 6:4-9; Heb. 5:12-14.)

(Uniform Midweek Prayer-meeting Topic, June 27.)

CENTRAL TRUTH: In both the Old and the New Testaments the principle of education is not only sanctioned but inculcated, and the duty of imparting this instruction is laid upon the religious people under both dispensations.

Human beings are born into the world with a number of latent faculties which need to be developed to their fullest capacity. This process is called education. Education has been defined, according to its etymology, as a drawing out. It is necessarily the drawing out of what is in man in germinal form. The scope of education, therefore, depends upon what is in man, in his natural constitution. If he have only an animal nature, then an animal education will answer his needs. If he be an intellectual being as well, then his intellectual nature must also be drawn out or developed. If, in addition to this, he have a moral and religious nature, this, too, must be drawn out, or else we have a defective education.

The Bible looks at man chiefly as a moral and religious being, and the education for which it specifically provides is of a moral and religious nature. It does not, however, by any means ignore man's rational or intellectual nature, but on the contrary it presupposes such a faculty. The fact is, the two elements of man's nature are so blended that we cannot neglect the one without doing injustice to the other. This fact is made apparent in this command to Israel, cited from Deuteronomy. The statement: "Hear, O Israel: the Lord our God is one Lord," is one of the sublimest generalizations in literature. It is an announcement to Israel that all the manifold phenomena of nature and all spiritual phenomena have their origin in one great, original source, in one divine personality. The command which follows: "And thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, with all thy soul and with all thy might," it will be seen, implies the development, not only of the affections, but of the intellect as well. This command, as given by Jesus in Matthew 22:37, is: "Thou shalt love thy God with all thy heart and with all thy soul and with all thy mind." To love God with the mind implies a knowledge of God, not only of His character, but of His will, of His works and of His laws. Here is a demand for the highest possible education, for the more we know of the material universe and of the innumerable forms of life which have been upon the earth and are now here, and of the vast forces of nature, and of man, and of the movements of history, the more we know of God and the better prepared we are to love Him with all our mind.

It is never to be forgotten that God requires, not only submission of the heart, but loyalty of the intellect as well. But it is not a blind submission of the intellect which He asks or which He will accept, but an intelligent, enlightened surrender to Him, because He satisfies the highest demands of reason. We can never love God with a whole mind until that mind is educated in the ways and works of God.

Let it be remembered that these things were, not only to be learned by the people of Israel, but they were to teach them diligently unto their children. There was to be a succession of knowledge from parents to children, from teachers to pupils, until it should become the common possession of all.

It was no class education. Here was provision for the training of all the people. Great emphasis is laid here upon parental instruction. There is a dispositionin our day on the part of parents to transfer this responsibility for the religious training of their children to the Sunday-school, but it ought to be understood that parents can in no way evade their resposibility in this matter. The first lessons at least in divine things should be learned by the child at home, and the home will be forever more sacred in the child's thought and memory by reason of this fact.

One of the most common faults, not to call it by a severer name, of Christian people, is the lack on the part of so many of them of making any progress in the knowledge of spiritual things. The author of the Hebrew letter administers a severe rebuke to Hebrew Christians for this lack of growth. He said to them: "For when by reason of time ye ought to be teachers ye have need again that some one teach you the rudiments of the first principles of the oracles of God; and are become such as have need of milk and not of solid food." This reproof was given, not on account of any moral defects, aside from their failure to develop their knowledge of the divine principles of the gospel. How widely this rebuke may be applied to the church to-day we need not say. The writer goes on to say that every one that partakes of milk is "without experience of the Word of righteousness, for he is a babe; but solid food is for full-grown men, even those who, by reason of use, have their senses exercised to discern good and evil."

There is a suggestion in the foregoing that there is a knowledge of things spiritual which can only come through experience and by the exercise of power of moral discernment in deciding between good and evil. This is confirmed by our Christian experience and observation. It is those who do that know. It is clear, also, from the foregoing that no one having the opportunity for the development of his powers can claim ignorance as a shield for his wrongdoing, for the ignorance itself is a fault that must be accounted for.

The great religious reforms which have blessed the world in the past owe their origin and their successful prosecution to educated men. In the very nature of things this must be so. Christianity has its sources in languages known now only to scholars. In its earlier years it was influenced by social, political and religious conditions which are familiar only to students of history. The past is being uncovered by modern researches as never before. All this knowledge is available to scholarship, and without it there is lacking the necessary data for the most successful advocacy of Christianity.

It is evident, then, from the foregoing that God desires the fullest enlightenment of men, the fullest development of all his powers and faculties. It is equally evident that the responsibility for this moral and intellectual training is laid on those who know and do the will of God, which to-day means the church of God on earth. On the church, then, rests the responsibility of establishing and endowing institutions of learning which will see to it that every part of our human nature is properly developed and trained for the highest usefulness in life. That we who call ourselves Christians or Disciples of Christ have been negligent in this respect and have failed to do our duty in the way of Christian education is, we think, too manifest to need argument. Has not the time come when we must make amends for this neglect by revival of zeal for Christian education and such revival as will lead the church to fulfill its obligations to our schools?

PRAYER.

Our Father who art in heaven, we thank Thee that Thou hast created us with latent powers, capable of being developed to an almost unlimited degree, and that Thou hast placed before us incentives for such development. We pray Thee that the church may realize, to a higher degree, its obligations to Christian education, and may seek to discharge this obligation by seeing to it that our schools are properly endowed and equipped for the great work for which they were established. Bless, we pray Thee, the presidents and teachers connected with these institutions of learning and the students who attend the same, to the end that such instruction may be imparted and received as will develop the noblest types of character and accomplish most for the advancement of Thy kingdom. And this we ask in the name of Christ, our great Teacher! Amen.

Editor's Easy Chair.

During the past six weeks or two months the Easy Chair has extended its observations over a wide area of country, and has visited a large number of churches, schools and localities. Not for several years has the editor, within the same length of time, traveled so many miles, preached so many discourses, delivered so many special addresses or lectures as within the period just mentioned. This experience has made or deepened certain impressions on our mind. It would be a very unimpressionable mind that did not receive an impress from this contact with so many localities, so many kinds of people, and by the effort to adapt public discourse to the particular needs of these various occasions and communities. The first feeling is one of gratitude to a gracious Providence for health and strength to meet these public duties with some little degree of satisfaction, at least, to those whom we have tried to serve. There is nothing we covet more than the ability to serve our fellowmen, and assist in some measure in promoting the interests of the kingdom of God.

Another deepened impression is: What a glorious privilege it is to preach the unsearchable riches of Christ, and to make known to men the love of God and declare His will! One might well wish to live a thousand years if he could have his youth renewed, if he could grow with the growing demands of the succeeding centuries, that he might preach so glorious a gospel to so needy a world. The marvel is that men ever tire of it or turn away from it to preach the vagaries, the philosophies and speculations of man, or the barren negations of a cold and lifeless rationalism. When we have had some fresh experience in preaching this gospel of Christ we feel the conviction deepened within us that there is no calling more blessed, and that if we were choosing our llfe course over again we would, with even more alacrity than once before, turn away from callings that promise earthly emoluments to urge upon men the supreme value of the kingdom of God and His righteousness. There would be one difference. With the experience we have had we should make more thorough preparation that we might more adequately declare to the sinning and suffering world the tender compassion, the saving power and the redeeming love of our Lord Jesus Christ.

We have been impressed anew with the adaptation of the gospel as understood and preached in this Reformation of the nineteenth century, to the needs of men of our day and generation. We have a dispensation of the truth that is as much needed by the century in which we have lived and wrought as was the Lutheran Reformation demanded by the conditions of the sixteenth century. This truth needs to be more widely and deeply realized, especially by our younger ministers, who are taking their places in the ranks of those who are pleading for a return to the Christianity of Christ. The current movements of thought in the religious world, the readiness with which our plea for the return to Christ is accepted by the people and the remarkable increase which God has granted to the seed we have sown, leave no room for doubt that this is "the present truth" which our age demands. It has been our privilege to address, in different communities, people who are standing aloof from churches, and who make no profession of religion, but who have expressed their appreciation of a gospel so simple, so rational, so broad, so well adapted to the needs of our race. O that we might more worthily declare, and especially that we might more adequately illustrate in our lives the beauty, the power and glory of the simple gospel of the grace of God!

We are glad to testify that wherever we have gone we have seen evidences on the part of many of a hungering and thirsting after righteousness, of aspirations after the truer, deeper and richer Christian life. The love for disputation for the sake of disputation is well-nigh obsolete. Churches are everywhere asking and desiring a full and fearless proclamation of the gospel, faithfully applied to the needs of the age, but free from the spirit of contention and strife, and of denominational narrowness. The churches desire to be led forward into fresh pastures of living truth and by the still waters of the river of life. They have no thought of compromising the great truths we have been emphasizng, but believe they can best be emphasized by kindly, fraternal presentation, and especially by embodying them in the life of the church and of its individual members. One who has not traveled about among the people would be surprised to find how widespread this feeling is among private members of the church, both men and women, who are pillars in their local congregations. This class of members is not seldom in advance of the preacher in their conception of the Christian life and the needs of the church. It is often the failure of the preacher to minister to the spiritual hunger of the best members of his church that creates the necessity of short pastorates.

The things which seem to us to need emphasis among the churches almost everwhere are the cultivation of an increased spirit of reverence in the house of God, a more reverent demeanor on the part of the people, more attention to an orderly and impressive manner of worship and observing the ordinances, greater fidelity on the part of members in attending the regular meetings of the church, especially the prayer-meetings, more attention given to the devotional life of the church, an improvement of the methods of the Sunday-school, more systematic study of the Bible and greater emphasis on the religious life in the home. A wider reading of our religious papers would tend to foster these reforms and correct many of these evils. Much must depend, however, upon the wise leadership of godly, consecrated ministers of the gospel. Upon all our pastors, therefore, we invoke the blessing and guidance of Him who is the great Shepherd and Bishop of our souls.

Questions and Answers.

Does the Bible require an elder of the church to be a married man, or does the passage which says "the husband of one wife" merely forbid a plurality of wives?

J. E. Littrell.

The latter is the usual interpretation, though there is some difference of opinion on the subject. As a rule men chosen for the position of elder in the primitive church, we have no doubt, were men of mature age and were likely to be married men. The term elder indicates that men of age were generally selected for that positian. We do not, however, think that the New Testament intends to lay it down as a law that no unmarried man, no matter what his age, wisdom, character or experience in governing the young, should be made an elder of the church. The object of the passage referred to was probably to prevent the selection of men with a plurality of wives from holding an official position in the church. This would indicate, of course, that they were tolerated as members of the church, having married their wives before their conversion, although polygamous marriages, were, of course, forbidden.

1. Is it true, as I have heard, that there is hardly a minister of the gospel who does not belong to one or more secret societies?

2. Why do Christian people object to horse racing? An Inquirer.

1. We think it extravagant to say that there is hardly a minister who does not belong to a secret society. What proportion of them do belong to some such society we have no means of knowing, but we are sure there are large numbers—and especially among our own ministers—who belong to no secret society. This is probably true to a greater degree among us than among any other Protestant religious body, though of that we are not certain.

2. Because horse racing is ordinarily made the occasion of gambling. Take away the zest which comes from betting on the races and there would be very little horse-racing. The race track is a gambling institution, and as such deserves the condemnation of Christian people. Even if the element of gambling were eliminated it might well be condemned because of cruelty to animals.

My three brief queries concerning the "church" or "kingdom" bids fair to stir up some wholesome discussion along that line. Indeed, a little "noble strife" has already been provoked, and, mayhap, the end is not yet. The editor answers my questions about as I supposed he would, and correctly, as I think. Bro. Bays then comes in with an article, written with considerable force and cogency, criticising the position or positions of the editor and defending the old Baptist position in regard to the setting up or establishment of the kingdom or church, in which he presents a new thought or two —to me at least—to which the editor submits a rejoinder that I imagine even Bro. B. himself will concede is a perfect "squelcher" and complete confutation of the position assumed by him in his communication of the 7th inst., and triumphantly sustains his (the editor's) main thesis, viz., that the day of Pentecost was the "birthday of the church."

But there is another phase of this subject, which has not received as much attention as the other. It may be put in the form of an interrogatory, as follows: Is it essential, or even highly important, to the Christian to have correct views as to the precise time when the church was established? In other words, what particular advantage or advantages would accrue to the believer from possessing right conceptions on this matter? Please answer as fully as your space and the nature of the case will permit. C. J. KIMBALL.

St. Louis, Mo.

We would certainly not say that a proper understanding of the subject referred to, that is, the date of the beginning of the church of Christ, was essential to salvation, though we believe it is essential to a clear understanding of the Christian dispensation and its relation to Judaism. Unless one understands that the dispensation of the Holy Spirit began on the Pentecost following Christ's resurrection from the dead, and that the sermon preached by the Apostle Peter on that occasion was the first time in the history of the world that repentance and remission of sins were ever preached in the name of Jesus Christ, and the Holy Spirit promised on condition of obedience, he is likely to fall into all manner of errors concerning the nature of the church and the conditions of admission into it. Sometimes inquiring sinners, who ask the way of Christ, are told to read the Psalms or other pious writings of the Old Testament! These preachers of the Word do not seem to understand that a new dispensation was opened on Pentecost; that a new and living way of salvation was opened by Christ through His death and resurrection from the dead, and that the apostles, filled with the Holy Spirit, gave inspired directions, in the book called Acts of the Apostles, as to how men may obtain forgiveness in the name of Christ, the gift of the Holy Spirit and membership in His body, which is the church. Not understanding that the birth of the church dates from the coming of the Holy Spirit and is a spiritual institution, men make the mistake of supposing that infants may be members of it just because they were members of the Abrahamic covenant by natural birth or through circumcision. It is this failure to distinguish between the Jewish and Christian dispensations, which has given rise to theories about the union of church and state and brought so much corruption into the church. It is, therefore, a matter of no little importance to distinguish between the dispensations over which Moses was lawgiver and that over which Christ is supreme—a dispensation in which membership came by natural birth and one in which membership comes by spiritual birth. In a word, to be able to have a clear understanding of the introduction of the reign of Christ is to have a better understanding of the relation of the Old Testament to the New and of the relation of the several books of the New Testament to each other. The Old Testament was preparatory to the New. It is the shadow, of which the New is the substance. The Old Testament promises Christ; the New reveals Him. The four Gospels by their testimony bring us to faith in Christ; the Acts of Apostles directs us how to become members of the church which He established; the twenty-one epistles teach us how to be worthy members of that church, growing up into Christ, who is our living Head; and the Book of Revelation points out the glorious destiny of Christ's church. These truths are very helpful to us in a proper understanding of the Bible and of the progressive nature of God's self-disclosure to man.

Current Religious Thought.

In writing on "The New View of Labor" the Standard (Baptist) for June 16th says:

And it is idle to deny that the gulf is there. It is folly to say that because here and there you find a devout carpenter and a praying engineer and a pious plumber, therefore the church is reaching the laborers. By that term let us indicate those who practice a trade or work in factories, as distinguished from those who live by buying and selling, by the culture of the soil and by the so-called learned professions, by clerical work of any sort. We all "labor," of course, but the conventional use of the term as meaning manual labor, skilled or unskilled, is useful and should be maintained. Between the laborer, then, and organized Protestant Christianity there is defective understanding and sympathy. Let pastors analyze their congregations to discover how large a proportion is drawn from this class; let them also by inquiry and estimate learn how large a proportion of the members of trades unions are habitual worshipers in any and all churches of a given community. The figures are appalling. Why the workingmen do not come to church is a question that has been pretty thoroughly canvassed by able ministers, among whom we may name two of our successful Baptist pastors, Rev. Cortland Myers, of Brooklyn, and Rev. H. F. Perry, of Englewood. Such reasons as these are given by working men asked to explain the situation: The church represents the capitalist; the sermons are dull; theology is too remote from the needs of today; the laborer needs Sunday for recreation; the church people do not really want him, and similar excuses which, in the view of some, are merely subterfuges to conceal the fundamental enmity of the human heart toward any agency that convicts of sin and righteousness, and judgment to come. But there is another reason, a deeper one, which the laborer might give if he were sufficiently analytic, which the minister and church worker might admit if they were sufficiently candid: There is a feeling that the man who works with his hands is somehow less of a man than he who works with his brains alone. Not because of a difference in earning power, for many a railroad man or foundry worker earns more than the town lawyer or doctor. Not because of any artificial social distinctions, nor even because of a difference in intellectual culture. The sense of superiority that makes the lawyer or merchant (still more the lawyer's or merchant's wife) unconsciously look down on the foreman of the machine shop is due often to an unanalyzed impression that the machinist is a servant of somebody; that his work is lacking in the elements of freedom, variety and creativeness; that he is, in short, a mere machine himself. The impression is not altogether unjustified in regard to mere factory operatives whose daily tasks are of a minor importance in the working of the great machines they serve. But a generalization applied to the skilled trades and to the men who guide those mighty and marvelous machines which make up our modern industrial world it is inadequate to the point of absurdity. Not until we of the churches, clergy and laity, get beyond this crude provincialism can we expect to win the respect of that great army that earns for us so much of national prosperity, progress and power.

OUR RELIGIOUS POSITION FROM AN ETHICAL POINT OF VIEW.

W. T. MOORE.

Theology as a science is no longer a something with which to conjure. This may or may not be a healthy sign. It is undoubtedly a fact, and that is all that concerns me now. It is also significant fact, but there is no need to dwell upon it at present.

In the old controversies our religious position appeared to great advantage. It is not trammeled by recondite definitions. The whole platform is a plea for freedom. The very air about it breathes the spirit of liberty. It is Christ-centric. Everything converges into and proceeds from the personal Redeemer. He is everywhere the chief among the ten thousand, the One altogether lovely. In discussing theological questions the Disciples have sought to test everything by the Son of the living God. He has been the standard by which every doctrine has been tried.

And is he not equally the standard in ethical matters? Why should not all our conduct be settled by appealing to him? If this method were adopted, then, in any given case, the only thing to be done would be to determine just what the Master would have us do, and as far as possible do what we know would be pleasing to him. We must not be impracticable. It is ridiculous to assume that we can do everything just as Christ would do it. Nevertheless, there are many things we can do; and in all cases we can get much help by making our appeal to Christ.

But it may not always be easy to determine with definite certainty just what Christ would do in some cases. How far, then, can we be sure of our steps? The following inquiries may assist to a clear understanding of the whole matter:

(1) What are our limitations as regards the questions under consideration? It must be evident to the merest tyro in ethical teaching that our vision is very much circumscribed with respect to matters of duty. We cannot see afar off. Many of the limitations of our present environment crowd upon us at this point. Our perceptions are dull our, spiritual aptitudes are viciated, while our opportunities for realizing our high ideals are often very unfavorable. We must not, therefore, look for perfect work where there are so many things to hinder. Still, we must not have too low a view of our possibilities. We can accomplish much if only we have faith, and at the same time use our great opportunities wisely and well.

(2) What help is there in Christ's teaching? Teaching, as is well known, is only another word for doctrine. The same words in the Greek are rendered indifferently both teaching and doctrine. "Sound doctrine" is simply healthful teaching. But we have expanded "doctrine" (singular) into "doctrines" (plural); and this change is the foundation of human creeds. But if we go back to the original meaning of teaching we shall find much in what Christ has taught in words that will help us, if our minds and hearts are open to receive what he says. This is one of the ways by which we may know what he would do in a given case. When the case comes specifically under his teaching, then there can be no doubt as to what our duty is. Very many cases can be settled in this way. His teaching covers a wide field; so wide, indeed, that broadly speaking it really touches some part of every phase of human conduct. Of course, what the apostles teach is included in this estimate. With me the apostolic ministry is only an extension of the ministry of Christ. His apostles simply extended and continued what he "began both to do and to teach."

But in any case it is easy to see that our religious position is favorable to the highest possible ethical results. As a people we acknowledge no master but Christ. This gives us a definite ethical standard. Nothing in conduct could be more important than such a standard. Whoever traces the growth of ethical ideas will not fail to notice the constant need of an infallible rule to guide in all matters of conduct. No such rule can be found anywhere if it is not found in Christ. His teaching is infallibly right; and if we follow this teaching strictly we cannot go wrong. But just here is where we meet another need which can be supplied only by example. This brings me to ask another question.

(3) Is personality an important factor in the matter under consideration? This question touches the vital point in the Christian's ethical system. The world is not moved by even teaching, however true and wise that teaching may be. Nothing but personal influence will suffice to make character, and character is the only thing that is worth building in this world.

The great French philosopher, Victor Cousin, has truly said: "Two great wants are felt by man. The first, the most imperious, is that of fixed, immutable principles, which depend upon neither times nor places nor circumstances; and on which the mind reposes with an unbounded confidence. . . . . This is our first need. But there is another, not less legitimate, the need of not being the dupe of chimerical principles, of barren abstractions, of combinations more or less ingenious, but artificial; the need of resting upon reality and life; the need of experience."

This extract expresses substantially what is felt by every one who has carefully considered the matter of which it speaks. It is well known that "barren abstractions," etc., do not help us in ethics any more than they do in doctrinal matters. In short, we need personality to inspire and direct us, and without this we cannot make much progress in either doctrine or life. The history of ethics, from the days of Aristotle to the present time, abundantly proves the truth of this statement. The testimony of the ages is that we must have a personal leader in order to reach any high achievement.

Just here we touch the secret of power in the movement of the Disciples of Christ. The religious world had been living on abstractions; and when Mr. Campbell and his associates began to plead for a personal religion, it was like a new revelation to those who had so long groped in darkness. It changed the authority of human creeds to the tender, loving, sympathizing, personal Christ. The sad and weary world at once felt the warmth and inspiration of this new force, and soon there was evidence that this force had to be reckoned with in all the religious movements of the age.

What has been the result? In less than a century we have grown until to-day we represent perhaps the mightiest religious power of modern times. This power must not be measured simply by the bounds of the churches of the Disciples of Christ. Even from this point of view the power must not be despised. But the movement has more or less penetrated and influenced all religious denominations. This fact is so patent that it need not be discussed. Nevertheless, I think it quite probable that very few have apprehended or appreciated the great advantage of this movement from an ethical point of view. Indeed, I fear that the Disciples of Christ themselves have never fully realized their splendid opportunities for the best practical results in divine living. They have been so much absorbed in theological questions that the ethical side of their great plea has been sadly neglected. The average Disciple of Christ has yet to learn that—

Still, it must be conceded that in recent years there has been a great change for the better in this respect. Rapidly, I think, our people are coming to understand that the Sermon on the Mount is at least of equal value with the second chapter of Acts. This is a promising sign and clearly indicates a decided forward movement among our people.

But, notwithstanding this strong tendency, I feel sure that very many of our brethren are still unconscious of the great advantage which our religious position gives us as regards the ethical side of the Christian life. They understand how, from their strong position, they can meet and put the sects to flight; but now they need to learn that from the same position they can easily put the devil to flight. "He that is for us is greater than he that is against us." Our conflict with evil is personal, and consequently we have constant need of personal help. In Christ we find everything that is necessary to victory. He is able, he is willing, he is always ready to help.

Let us suppose a case. You are strongly influenced to act in a particular manner. What will you do? How can you decide? Finally, you reach the conclusion that you must at least be Christlike in your action. This at once turns your attention to the personal Christ. Can you determine definitely just what he would do as regards the matter under consideration? If you can, then you ought to act as you know he would act in any similar case.

But is it always possible to say with certainty just how he would act? In the first place, his teaching covers a wide ground of possible cases. Of course, we may know that he would act in harmony with what he has taught. But his personality is a better criterion than even his words. We know something of what he is, and that helps us to know what he would do in every conceivable case. What we know he would do we ought to try to do. This touches the center of the whole problem; and, considered from this point of view, it seems to me the position of the Disciples is impregnable.

This is the sum of the whole matter: If the position of the Disciples of Christ is what I have shown it to be, then the conclusion irresistibly follows that they should excel all other religious people in divine living. In my opinion the ethical side of their plea is quite as strong as its doctrinal side. Indeed, the former seems to me to have an advantage over the latter. But it is not needful to insist upon this particular fact. If the ethical position is only equal to that of the doctrinal, then there can be no doubt that we are under the most imperious obligations to set the religious world an example in the highest development of the Christian life.

At present are we not justified in asking: "What do they more than others?" Why is this? Is there no appreciation of the high platform occupied? Are we satisfied with simply doctrinal correctness? I think the difficulty is rather in the fact that we do not clearly apprehend the obligations which our position certainly entails. Can our people be made to understand this? If so, I do not doubt that the Disciples of Christ will soon lead in all benevolent and educational enterprises as they now do in the scripturalness of their theology and the simplicity of their doctrinal plea. When their ethical life shall correspond with their doctrinal position, then, and not till then, can they hope to take the world for Christ.

THE SPIRITUAL SIDE OF OUR PLEA.

The Real and the Formal.

A. B. JONES.

Compacts and covenants of importance, generally if not universally, have their real and formal aspects, their essence of meaning and their ritual expression. This fact appears with equal prominence in social, commercial, civil and religious life. The real is essential to the validity of the formal; the formal is useful and helpful to the real, to its practical adaptation and efficiency. The formal is important; the real is always the more important. The thoughts of my mind at present constitute the real; this writing is the formal expression of them. Without the thoughts this writing could not be executed; without this writing the reader would not perceive the thoughts. The thoughts inspire this written expression; the written expression stimulates and intensifies my thoughts.

The real and the formal thus act and react upon each other. There is a sense in which they are supplements, complements and counterparts of each other.

In the marriage compact this principle is seen and felt. It obtains here conspicuously. Through mutual acquaintance, admiration and affection two hearts are united and cemented together. They plight to each other their faith and love. They assume to each other the solemn vows of agreement and engagement of marriage. This is the real; all else is formal. With this heart-experience there comes a change over the views and feelings of the parties. The world is not now the same to them. They feel differently toward each other. They feel differently toward other people, toward society. They feel differently toward self. There is a transition, a transformation of mind, of heart, of life. They realize that they are, in fact, parts of each other, that they are one. Were it not for others there would be no need of a marriage ceremony. In the case of Adam and Eve I suppose there were no nuptial rites, no necessity for them. When society grew up it became necessary for the protection of society and of the parties to the marriage compact that the law should interpose a ceremony to regulate marriage. The rite of matrimony, however, is only a formal thing. The real marriage is in the heart and must actually exist before the ceremony, or else the ceremony is worse than mere form; it is a sham.

Two men decide to enter into partnership for the transaction of business. They first see eye to eye in the way of a clear understanding with each other. They repose confidence in one another and come to an agreement concerning the business. This is the real thing. But for mutual protection against untoward accidents and influences they commit this agreement to writing. This is the formal act.

A purchases of B a piece of property valued at $10,000. Their negotiations are all carefully gone over, every point clearly understood, a full agreement reached. An earnest of $1,000 is paid down. This is the real transaction. On the morrow they meet for the formal execution of the agreements and contracts of to day. A deed is drawn up reciting the terms of the contract; it is signed, sealed and delivered, and a check is given for the balance of purchase money. And as a notice to the public of this change and transfer in the rights of property this deed is filed in the office of record. The formalities answering to the real transaction are now completed.

The American people cast their ballots for president. A B receives a majority of the votes. This is the voice of the people. The vote is counted and the result announced. All understand the question is settled. This is the real thing. At the proper time the president-elect takes the oath of office and enters upon the discharge of his duties. This is the formal part of the proceedings.

America opens wide her portals to immigrants. The worthy foreigner is received with extended arms of national hospitality. He enters at once into the privileges of social and business life. He buys and sells, gets gain and builds him a home. Our courts protect him. Our schools and our churches are open to him and his family. He often outstrips the native in business, in learning and in popularity. In all the essential elements of life and its enjoyments he is really an American citizen. But there are limitations. For wise reasons it has been deemed safe and expedient to hold in abeyance his privileges of voting and holding office until he becomes formally naturalized. This is the formal thing. With this exception he has been a full fledged citizen from the start. He came with his mind and his heart panting after the liberties, the opportunities and the possibilities of America. He found them and entered at once into their possession and enjoyment. This was the real thing.

A man traduces my character, slanders me in a way that demands vindication. I enter complaint and file suit against him in the courts having jurisdiction. In the meanwhile the party becomes sensible of his mistake and the great wrong he has done me. He comes to me with explanations and apologies ample and satisfactory. I accept the amends which he makes and forgive him. This settles the matter between us in a personal way. I am assured of his repentance, which changes his moral state. He is assured of my forgiveness, which changes our moral relations to each other. But this is not all there is of it. We are members of the same society, of the same government. Others know of this matter, and there are relations we both sustain to the public. I have a suit in law pending in court against this man. He has not only wronged me personally, but he has violated the law. And this forgiveness that I have extended to him personally is not the forgiveness of law. I go before the court, make explanations and dismiss the suit. This is my legal, formal forgiveness. Our relations in law are now changed. Moral state and relations are first changed, then the legal state and relations are changed.

Let us now study this lesson in the light of God's nature and character as presented to us by the Savior in the parable of the prodigal son. The literature of the world has nothing on this subject equal to this beautiful story. It was given by our Lord purposely to convey to man an adequate idea of the nature of sin and of repentance, and the forgiveness of our Heavenly Father. The younger son grew wayward and left home, going into a far country, where he spent his substance and came to dire want. In his extremity he "came to himself." Every sinful life has its luminous hours! He remembered the home from which he had wandered. "I will arise," he said, "and go to my father." And he arose and went. What a picture of repentance! "But while he was yet afar off his father saw him and was moved to compassion and ran and fell on his neck and kissed him." Forgiveness, what forgiveness! O, what a father! He did not wait for a confession, for baptism, for anything. When he saw the son was returning, was penitent, that was enough. His own heart was "moved with compassion and he ran and fell on his neck and kissed him."

This is the "real" in forginess of sin. The "formal" is yet to come. It comes afterwards! "Father, I have sinned against heaven and in thy sight"—the confession. "Bring forth quickly the best robe and put it on him; and put a ring on his hand and shoes on his feet; and bring the fatted calf and kill it and let us eat and make merry." The formal reinstatement of the son in the family. He was already reinstated in the father's heart—already forgiven, "really" forgiven. Listen: "This, my son, was dead and is alive again; he was lost and is found." This is the gospel. Hear me: "Repentance toward God and faith in our Lord Jesus Christ" are the mighty moral forces in the human heart that cause the Heavenly Father to be "moved with compassion and to run and fall on the neck and kiss" the sinner with "real" forgiveness. Then come the formalities of confession and baptism and reinstatement in the family — the church.

Let us now place alongside of this parabolic illustration of the subject a real case of conversion and pardon, the most notable instance in the New Testament record, that of Saul of Tarsus, afterwards the Apostle Paul. Saul was a man of great force, of strong intellectual, moral and religious character, though not a Christian. His mental discipline gave him great intellectual strength; his moral training led him to "live before God in all good conscience," and his religious education as a Jew led him to be "zealous toward God," "persecuting the church." This man, "yet breathing threatening and slaughter against the disciples of the Lord," as he went from Jerusalem to Damascus had a remarkable experience, which resulted in his becoming the Apostle Paul, that mighty man of history.

Let us note carefully the facts in his conversion.

1. "Suddenly there shone round about him a light out of heaven; and he fell upon the earth, and heard a voice saying unto him, Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me? And he said, Who art thou, Lord? And he said, I am Jesus, whom thou persecutest" (Acts 9:3-5).

Christ, then, first introduces himself to Saul in an intelligent way.

2. "And I said, what shall I do, Lord? And the Lord said, Arise and go into Damascus, and there it shall be told thee of all things appointed for thee to do" (Acts 22:10).

Here is a clear case of self-surrender; of conversion, of mind, and of will, and of purpose.

3. "But arise and stand upon thy feet; for to this end have I appeared unto thee: to appoint thee a minister and a witness of the things wherein thou hast seen me, and of the things wherein I will appear to thee" (Acts 26:16).

Not only is Saul converted, but he is selected and notified of his appointment as an apostle of Jesus Christ: "He is a chosen vessel unto me" (Acts 9:15).

4. "But when it was the good pleasure of God, who separated me, even from my mother's womb, and called me through his grace to reveal his Son in me that I might preach him among the Gentiles," etc (Gal. 1:15).

Not only is Saul converted in an intelligent way—converted in mind and will and purpose; not only is he selected and notified of his appointment as a minister of the gospel, but he says: "It was the good pleasure of God to reveal his Son in me"—a clear, inward, spiritual experience.

5. "And Ananias laying his hands on him said, Brother Saul, the Lord, even Jesus, who appeared unto thee in the way, hath sent me that thou mayest receive thy sight and be filled with the Holy Spirit" (Acts 9: 17).

Notice now. Saul is converted, appointed the ministry, the Holy Spirit is given him, Christ is revealed in him. Is he still an unpardoned man? Has there been no adjustment of moral relations between him and God? Is the great heart of the great Father still closed against him? Has not God really forgiven Saul? Overcome by the presence of Christ, fallen to the earth, blind, believing, penitent, pleading—"Lord, what shall I do"—converted, appointed to the ministry, receives the Holy Spirit, has Christ revealed in him, and, yet, unforgiven!–?

But the record does not say that Saul was really pardoned before his baptism. No, nor does the record say that the baptism of Cornelius was for the remission of his sins, either formal or real. But Peter did say to him: "Whosoever believeth on him shall receive remission of sins;" and Cornelius also received the Holy Spirit before his baptism. As it appears to the writer, it is a moral and theological impossibility to believe that Saul and Cornelius were not accepted of God and really forgiven before their baptism. Their moral and spiritual recognition on the part of God precludes the possibility of any other conclusion than that they were really pardoned before baptism, and formally or legally remitted in baptism.

And this is what Alexander Campbell meant when he said in his debate with Mr. McCalla in 1823. "Paul's sins were really pardoned when he believed—formally pardoned when he was baptized." Mr. Campbell makes one statement in his book on baptism that at first glance appears to be inconsistent with this, where, on page 258, he says baptism is "for the true, real and formal remission of sins." Mr. C. said "the blood of Christ really cleanses us from sin." He also said "Paul's sins were really pardoned when he believed;" and here he says baptism is for the true, real and formal remission of sins. Mr. C. is here discussing the legal phase of this subject. When he looks at the divine side of the subject as the matter stands in the mind of God, he says "the blood of Christ really cleanses from sin;" when he views the human side in its relations to the moral condition of the sinner he says "Paul's sins were really pardoned when he believed;" and when he considers the matter in its legal relations to the divine government he says "baptism is for the real, formal remission of sins"—all real. But when Mr. C. is considering the question in both its moral and its legal phases, and placing these in contrast he says: "Paul's sins were really pardoned when he believed, formally pardoned when he was baptized." That this is the correct interpretation of Mr. Campbell's statement above quoted from his book on baptism is evident from the fact that in this same discussion he says on page 272: "Baptism, according to the apostolic church, is both 'a sign' and 'a seal' of remission of sins. In this sense only does baptism now save us. . . . Circumcision is said to have been, in one case at least, a sign and a seal." Here Mr. C. refers to the case of Abraham, of whom Paul says, in Rom. 4:11: "He received the sign of circumcision, a seal of the righteousness of the faith which he had while he was in uncircumcision." Notice carefully, Abraham had "the righteousness of faith," or remission of sins, before he was circumcised. And he afterwards received circumcision as a sign and seal of that righteousness. Of this Mr. Campbell on same page says: "Baptism, in the same sense and in a similar case is also both a sign and a seal—the sign, however, at most, is only indicative of what has been sealed"—the sins have been really pardoned on the grounds of faith, of which baptism, the sign, "is only indicative," says Mr. C. Again he says at the bottom of same page: "Baptism is a seal of the righteousness of faith, or the remission of all our past sins, through faith in his blood, then, and in that act publicly expressed and confirmed." Nothing can be plainer than that Mr. Campbell holds to real remission before baptism, and formal remission in baptism. This, however, will be more fully shown in subsequent pages. Let us now return to the main thread of our argument on the real and the formal.

Coffee Complexion.

MANY LADIES HAVE POOR COMPLEXIONS FROM COFFEE.

"Coffee caused dark colored blotches on my face and body. I had been drinking it for a long while and these blotches gradually appeared, until finally they became permanent and were about as dark as coffee itself.

"I formerly had as fine a complexion as one could ask for.

"When I became convinced that coffee was the cause of my trouble, I changed and took to using Postum Cereal Food Coffee, and as I made it well according to directions, I liked it very much, and have since that time used it entirely in place of coffee.

"I am thankful to say I am not nervous any more, as I was when I was drinking coffee, and my complexion is now as fair and good as it was years ago. It is very plain that the coffee caused the trouble. Please omit my name from public print." Mrs. ———, 2081 Ogden Ave., Chicago, Ill. The name of this lady can be given by the Postum Cereal Co., Ltd., Battle Creek, Mich.

Most bad complexions are caused by some disturbance of the stomach and coffee is the greatest disturber of the complexion known. Almost any woman can have a fair complexion if she will leave off coffee and use Postum Food Coffee and nutritious, healthy food in proper quantity. The food coffee furnishes certain parts of the natural grains from the field that nature uses to rebuild the nervous system and when that is in good condition, one can depend upon a good complexion as well as a general healthy condition of the body.

Our Budget.

—The flitting time is near.

—"Will you also go away?"

—Wars and rumors of war; but Christ marches on.

—If you can serve God best by staying at home, stay; if best by going away, go.

—But whether we stay or whether we go, let us endeavor to be faithful and to maintain a good conscience.

—Hiram College Jubilee this week. The editor expects to be there and will report his impressions.

—Gen. Drake, founder and benefactor of Drake University, has remembered it in his will to the extent of a half million dollars. May the general live to see his example followed by many others.

—The Outlook, of New York, in its notice of "Wheeling Through Europe," by Winfred Ernest Garrison, mentions two virtues which ought to commend it for summer reading. It is "not marked by excessive originality," and "it breathes the grateful aroma of health, freshness and youthful buoyancy." Price, $1.00.

—It is comforting to know that in spite of our St. Louis strike we have at least a model post office. In his report, Assistant Superintendent McCoy, after a thorough personal inspection of it praises it in all its departments and says in conclusion: "It is deemed only proper and just to state that in my opinion the post office at St. Louis is the ideal office of this department." Take that, you proud cities of the East, that think you know so much!

—E. C. Browning, of Little Rock, Ark., reports one of the best state convention ever known in Arkansas, closed June 7. The attendance was increased, pledges to state work increased and good done. The time allotted was too short. For what of time prayer and praise services were largely crowded out. Important interests were passed over too hastily. They will try to avoid this in the future. Over $1,000 in pledges were secured for the work of the coming year. Appropriations were continued to Pine Bluff, Hot Springs, Arkadelphia, Mena and the districts of Southwest Arkansas, Caddo Gap and Saline. They hope to be able to reach with permanent work other points.

—On the eve of starting to the Missouri Sunday-school Convention at California the editor, in order to force himself to think a little on the subject assigned him for an address there, for which he had found no time, dictated an editorial on the same general subject, believing that the thoughts therein would be equally well adapted to the larger audience reached by the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. This will explain to those of our readers who were at the California convention the similarity in thought between the leading editorial this week and the editor's convention address.

—There was a very profitable and fraternal conference held in Montgomery, Ala., May 29-31, 1900, between the conservative and aggressive Disciples of Christ. The conservatives present were J. M. Barnes, Dr. David Adams, Sam Jordan, W. J. Haynes, L. W. Smith, J. Harrison and T. J. Golson. The aggressive brethren were E. V. Spicer, Claris Yeuell and O. P. Spiegel. The general topic discussed was the method of doing evangelistic work. The conference was fraternal throughout and the descisions were satisfactory to both sides. Bro. J. M. Garrett, an elder in Montgomery Church, was chosen chairman. All desired to meet in another conference one year hence. Good will result.

—The first Sunday in June, in many parts of the country, was rainy. On this account many schools had to postpone Children's Day. In some parts of the country smallpox and measles are prevalent. For this reason other schools had to postpone their offering. It is greatly to be hoped that these schools will not postpone the offering indefinitely. On the first bright Sunday the exercises should be given and the offering taken. When the scourge of disease is passed the schools that have been obliged to postpone their offering on that account should observe the day. Every church and every school in the land should make an offering this year for world-wide evangelism. Neither sickness nor rain should be permitted to interfere.

—In the interesting article in our Family Circle last week entitled "Romance and Romanticism," by Mary E. Ware, there occurred two typographical errors. The name Facitus should have been Tacitus and the name Pelun should have been Pepin. Our readers will be glad to know that there will be three articles under this head by Sister Ware.

—The annual meeting the Grand River district, Mo., will be held in Jamesport, July 16 18. This district is comprised of the counties of Caldwell, Livingstone, Davies, Harrison, Grundy and Mercer. A good program has been prepared for the meeting and the church will furnish free entertainment for all that attend.

—A special dispatch to the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST from Washington C. H., O., announces 25 additions to date in the meeting now in progress in Music Hall of that city, conducted by Evangelists Wilson and Huston.

—The Alabama State Endeavor Convention, held in Huntsville, May 11-13, was the greatest in their history. O. P. Spiegel, of Birmingham, presided. On his refusal to be re-elected president, he was chosen world's vice-president. Dr. Ira Landreth and C. P. Williamson were the visiting speakers. The music was conducted by Prof. John Bromer, of Chicago. Of the many interesting features of the convention only one is mentioned—the sundown consecration, by the big spring in the heart of the city, which gushes forth 25,000,000 gallons of the purest water daily.

—The convention of the third Illinois district, held at Augusta some time ago was a fine convention. The addresses were vigorous and profitable. The next convention of this district will be held in Galesburg.

—Springdale Chautauqua, Springdale, Ark., opens June 24th to July 4th. There will be 33 lectures in the eleven days.

—The church in Volga City, Ia., recently sent $150 to the famine sufferers of India, through our Foreign Board at Cincinnati. This was a liberal offering for Volga. Many larger places have not done as well.

—Prof. Hewett, of Cornell, has exposed another attempted hoax on the world of scholars. Simultaneous telegrams from London and Rome announced the discovery of letters which passed between King Agrippa and Christ relative to the healing of the former. These letters were well known immediately after Christ's day, but have been lost 1803 years. Turning to Eusebius, Prof. Hewett demonstrated at once that the "discovered" letters were the apochryphal correspondence of King Abgar, of Edessa, which exists in Greek, Latin, Armenian and Syriac versions and even on a papyrus found at El Fayoum, in Egypt. It is not easy to deceive scholars in these days. They are able, as did Agassiz when asked what a prepared "bug" was, to reply at once: "A humbug."

"He That Stays Does the Business."

All the world admires "staying power." On this quality success depends. The blood is the best friend the heart has. Hood's Sarsaparilla is the best friend the blood ever had; cleanses it of everything, gives perfect health and strength.

Hood's Sarsaparilla
Never Disappoints

—The Foreign Society has received and forwarded to India for famine relief $9,169.31. Money is being received almost every day for this purpose.

—Did any Sunday-school in the land fail to give as much as its apportionment? If so, a second offering can be made so that the school shall have its place on the roll of honor. Some schools have given two or three times as much as they were asked to give. Their joy over this victory is great.

—Thus far our missionaries in the Yangtsze Valley have not been disturbed. Our workers in China are far removed from the zone of disturbance.

—If the offering was made on Children's Day it should be forwarded promptly to the treasurer at Cincinnati. Do not let it be forgotten. See to it that it is not divided with any other cause or diverted from the purpose for which it was intended.

—It is gratifying to know that the Foreign Society is receiving more money from Children's Day up to date than last year. The country is prosperous The schools are stronger in point of numbers than they were then. There is every reason why 4,000 schools should contribute this year not less than 50,000 dollars for Foreign Missions. The Society has more workers in the field than ever before.

—The Herald and Presbyter, of Cincinnati, in an editorial on "Doctrinal Preaching," calls attention to a series of sermons on the "Five Points of Calvinism," in Kansas City, recently, which was followed by forty-three members being added to the church on the Sunday morning following. From this circumstance the editor draws a conclusion as follows: "For our part we believe in preaching the Word and making no excuse for it. We believe that God blesses those who honor him." The conclusion is evidently sound and true, but just what connection it has with the circumstances mentioned it is difficult to imagine, unless the editor of the Herald and Presbyter identifies preaching the "Five Points of Calvinism" with preaching the Word. If this be his point, what can be said of that large part of the church universal which rejects the "Five Points of Calvinism" and yet, strange to say, have more additions than the Presbyterians? We only call attention to this remark to say that the line should be kept clear and distinct between the Word of God or the gospel and all our "isms" and speculative tenets.

—Geo. A. Griffith, who lately went from Ashtabula, Ohio, to Seymour, Texas, to hold a meeting, received a unanimous call to remain with that church and has taken up the work. He writes hopefully of the outlook. The church had a successful Children's Day, with an excellent program. He says: "Here are to be found as devout and hard-working band of Christians as can be found in the state."

—H. F. Burns has completed his college course at Liberty, Mo., and accepted work for the church in Hamilton, Mo., for full time.

—It is seldom that we have printed three more vigorous letters in one number than the New York Letter, B. B. Tyler's Letter and English Topics in this paper. They write on living topics and have dipped their pens deeply into the spirit-ink of the times. You cannot fail to be interested in each of these letters this week. Also read carefully the article on "Our Next National Convention" in this paper and see how energetically Kansas City is going about preparations for that great event. It is time now to plan for the trip—for large delegations, for transportation, for the largest and best convention in our history, the Jubilee Convention not excepted.

—Last week Bro. Harry M. Gregory, one of our boys from the Central Christian Church in this city, but now pastor of the Christian Church at Estherville, Ia., returned to the city on a very important mission. On Wednesday evening, at the Central Christian Church, he baptized his mother and Miss Katie N. Chapman, of this city. The next day, Thursday, the 7th, at 11 o'clock, he was married to Miss Chapman, at the residence of the bride's father, on Pendleton Ave., by the editor of this paper. Quite a number of friends were present to witness the ceremony and extend their congratulations. Bro. Gregory and his young bride left the city at 2 o'clock on the same day for their home in Estherville, followed by the good wishes of their many friends of this city, in which the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST most heartily joins.

—In a personal letter from Rev. Timothy Richard, president of the Society for the Diffusion of Christian and General Knowledge among the Chinese, written from New York, June 4th, he announces that he was leaving New York for Shanghai, China, the next day, the 5th. He had been in this country attending the Ecumenical Conference. Mr. Richard is one of the greatest men working for the redemption of China, and is in every way a man of large mold and clear vision. His address at New York was full of interest. He is deeply concerned for the welfare of the "Reformers of China," as he calls them, who, he believes, are the "spiritual offspring of the Christian church." He made his plea in their behalf before the executive committee of the conference, and also before Secretaries Long and Hay at Washington. Under the reactionary influence of the present Empress he feels that the lives of these men who have been seeking to advance China are in danger, and the results of Christian work may be set back many years. It is to be hoped that the outcome of the present agitation in China concerning the "Boxers" may result in some arrangement by which the great powers of the world will hold in check the bitter opposition of the Chinese Government and of the "Boxers" to all foreigners and foreign ideas. In his letter Mr. Richard says: "We have come to such a pass that it is useless to go on with the mission work if our own governments do not protect Christians, nor even their own citizens— a thing unheard of in the history of nations. If the Chinese are allowed to massacre more Christians than there are converts, our fifty years' work will soon be undone." We are sure that the civilized world will not tolerate this state of things very long. In his letter Mr. Richard refers in very complimentary terms to the address of the editor of this paper on the subject of Christian Union and Missions, delivered at the conference, and said he was "looking forward with much interest to reading it again in the report of the conference." This indicates his interest in the subject of a closer union among Christians in order to the success of the great work of evangelizing the world.

—Bethany College commencement will be held June 21st and that of Hiram College June 28th.

—The church at McComb, O., is in need of a pastor. Write F. A. Griffin.

—It might be well for any preacher wishing to go South to write to Mrs. Nora E. May, St. Petersburg, Florida. They are trying hard to secure a preacher at that point.

—The First Christian Church, of Tonawanda, N. Y., A. M. Hootman, pastor, is making extensive changes and repairs in its house of worship, the cost of which will be about $4,000.

—The Carlisle Mercury, Carlisle, Ky., for May 31 is a large illustrated edition celebrating the 100th anniversary of the organization of Nicholas County. The paper certainly does itself great honor in this splendid edition, both itself and the county.

—The new church building in Tower Hill, Ill., will soon be ready for seats and furnishings. The church in Tower Hill, J. T. Killam, pastor, would be glad to hear from church furnishing establishments and bids far a bell.

—D. B. Garrison, Supt. Bible-school, Olympia, Washington, reports $19 raised on Children's Day. Assessment, $15. Silver Bells program was well rendered and appreciated.

—W. H. Kern wishes the former report of Children's Day offering corrected to read as follows instead of what appeared: "We were apportioned $25; raised $40. At Elkville, seven miles south, they were apportioned $5 and raised $25.

—The Christian Courier is the title of a paper edited by Frank E. Mallory, pastor of Third Christian Church, Topeka, Kan., in the interest of that church. It is a well-edited paper.

—The report of the money raised at a missionary rally in Our Budget last week, credited to Mason City, Mo., should have been credited to Monroe City, where R. B. Briney now ministers the Word of life.

—I have always considered the C.-E. a powerful paper. Its genuineness, its honesty and deepness are worthy of the age in which we move. But lately it excels the laurels upon which it previously rested. If those three articles by A. B. Jones in the last three numbers could be printed every week and not only read but studied there would be more Christianity where there is now a mechanical churchianity. This in my estimation expresses the real living religion of the age.

MRS. J. B. MARSHALL.

Shoals, Ind., June 2, 1900.

Sister Marshall and other spiritually minded readers of the C.-E. will be glad to know that the articles referred to, by Bro. Jones, are only a few sample articles from a book he is preparing and which it is expected will be issued by the Christian Pub. Co. by the coming autumn.

—"Faith," issued by the Antikamnia Chemical Company, of this city, is a beautiful card-picture.

—The Indiana Christian has on its first page a beautiful picture of the beautiful lake Maxinkuckee, a new summer resort destined to become popular with the Disciples of Christ in Indiana and other states. J. V. Coombs is the president of the newly organized Maxinkuckee Assembly and he will be delighted to give you further information about this place.

—Wonderland is an elegantly illustrated book, descriptive of the region of country through which the Northern Pacific Railway passes, including more particularly the story of Lewis and Clark's exploration of the great Northwest. Not only is the story of Lewis and Clark one of thrilling interest, but also a wonderful revelation of the magnitude and marvels of the land included in the Louisiana Purchase. The pictures of natural scenery are inspiring and sharpen the appetite for travel; and in the publication of Wonderland the Northern Pacific Railway Co. has not only produced a magnificent book from the printer's standpoint, but a book that will be of value to a large variety of people. It is a book that ought to be of special interest to young people, and may be had by addressing Chas. S. Fee, G. P. A., Northern Pacific Railway, St. Paul, Minn.

Smile and Suffer.

That's the motto of many a woman's life. She manages the house, receives friends, entertains company, with a moan in the mouth which is stifled and a smile on the face which is a mask to cover up her pain. Only those who note the dark ringed eyes, the lines about the lips, the occasional pallor of the cheek, know the real story. Such women are among the most grateful for the cures performed by the use of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. To smile and not to suffer is something wonderful to them. Women suffering from female weakness, inflammation, ulceration or the drains that so weaken the body, may take "Favorite Prescription" with almost absolute certainty of cure. It's sure to help. It's almost sure to heal. It has cured ninety-eight per cent. of those who gave it a fair and faithful trial.

Mrs. H. A. Alsbrook, of Austin, Lonoke Co., Ark., writes: "After five months of great suffering with female weakness I write this for the benefit of other sufferers from the same affliction. I doctored with our family physician without any good results, so my husband urged me to try Dr. Pierce's medicines—which I did, with wonderful results. I am completely cured. I took four bottles of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, four of his 'Golden Medical Discovery' and two vials of his 'Pleasant Pellets.'"

Sick women are invited to consult Dr. Pierce by letter free. All correspondence confidential. Address Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y.

—The following paragraph from Chas. F. Gammon in the Bible Society Record for May throws some light on present conditions in China:

I need hardly say that under these circumstances all religious work is at a standstill in Shantung. It would be impossible for our colporteurs to work there now, and unless the powers act promptly and effectively all missionaries will be forced to leave that province in the early spring. Meanwhile, Chihli is affected, the movement is spreading and Christian work in the whole of North China is in danger. Within thirty miles of Tientsin the "Boxers" are drilling daily, and they have promised to attack us on the 15th of this month. I have just returned from Tungchou, Peking and vicinity and found that portion of the province quiet, though it is infested by robbers. Our colporteurs are now working mainly in Chihli, and sales have not diminished, but it is a critical time, the danger being not only for Christian lines of work, but for all foreign interests as well. In a previous letter I mentioned the fact that there had been an extreme drought during the summer and fall, and a consequent loss of the fall crops. Thousands of farmers were without food or employment, and it is this class of men, the backbone of the nation, which is filling the ranks of the "Boxers." We have prayed for the preservation of this empire in its integrity, but it now seems that nothing can save China but the division of her territory among the nations.

H. M. Gregory, of Estherville, Iowa, was in this city last week, visiting. He reports about 80 additions to the church since he began work there in January last. Bro. Gregory is one of the promising young men which the Central Church, of this city, has given to the ministry.

The baccalaureate sermon of the graduating class of the Prairie City high school, Ia., was delivered by Charles E. Wells, pastor of the Church of Christ in that city. He also preached the memorial sermon to the G. A. R. Post and the W. R. C., of that city.

Mr. Norman B. Wells and Miss Charlotte M. Blake, of Des Moines, Ia., were married June 2 at the residence of the bride's father, Mr. Orwell Blake. The ceremony was pronounced by Mr. Wells' father, Chas. E. Wells, assisted by I. N. McCash. The contracting parties will make their home in Des Moines.

The Pittsburg Press, June 4th, contains a sermon in full on "Creeds the Cause of Church Dissensions," by W. J. Lhamon, pastor of the First Church of Christ, Allegheny, Pa It is a strong condemnation of creeds as seen in history and a fine presentation of the simplicity of the gospel of Christ.

Rev. G. E. Shearer, who has been preaching for several years for the Church of God, united with the Church of Christ in Gerlaw recently. He is a young man with small family. The pastor, Harry E. Tucker, believes that he will do some church good work. If any church is in need of an able man he can put you in correspondence with one.

The degree of Ph. D. was conferred upon Rev. A. A. Hibner by Austin College, Effingham, Ill., at the close of its last commencement. Bro. Hibner is the pastor of the Church of Christ in Effingham. His baccalaureate sermon to the college on the 10th inst. was well received and published in full in both papers in that city. Austin College is a literary and business college where many of our young people in Illinois qualify themselves for teaching and for business, and while there assist in the work of the church.

Elder J. C. Reynolds, of Macomb, Ill., who was present at the Missouri Sunday-school convention, has gone on a visit to Tyndall, S. D., where he has two brothers and two sisters living, and his stepmother, whom he has not seen for many years. He goes by the way of Des Moines, near which place lives a sister whom he will visit also. He is enjoying improved health at present, and will be able to do some preaching while he is absent. We trust the brethren everywhere he may go will receive Bro. Reynolds with the Christian cordiality and welcome to which his high standing and his long usefulness in the cause of the Master entitles him, and will help him on his journey. He expects to return in time for the National Convention at Kansas City.

Charles J. Kemper.

The subject of this sketch, an excellent likeness of whom appears in this issue of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, was born at Port Republic, Rockingham county, Va. After attending the elementary schools he entered the Powers Classical and Scientific School, Staunton, Va., where he remained for two sessions. He then became a student of the University of Virginia, Charlottesville, where he remained several years and where he took a high stand, especially in the School of Mathematics. He then taught in Rappahannock Academy (Va.) for two sessions. Two years were then spent by him as co-principal in the male school at Waynesboro, Va., after which he returned to the University of Virginia to complete his course. After this he was principal of a female school in Harrisonburg, Va, where he remained until 1859, when he accepted the chair of Mathematics, Mechanics and Astronomy in Bethany College, W. Va. Upon the breaking out of the Civil War he resigned his chair to enter the Confederate army, and was engaged in the topographical survey of the lower part of the Valley of Virginia, in preparation of military maps for the use of Gen. "Stonewall" Jackson and its other defenders. He was transferred to the Bureau of Topographical Work in Richmond during the last year of the war. After this he established at his home in Louisa county, Va., the "Aspen Hill High School," mainly preparatory to the higher classes of the University of Virginia.

In 1874 he was invited to accept the chair of Natural Sciences in Bethany College but declined. The next year he was elected to his old chair in Mathematics, which position he accepted. He remained at Bethany until 1884, when he resigned and returned to his home in Virginia and re-established the Aspen Hill high-school. In 1889 he was tendered the chair of Modern Languages and Civil Engineering in Kentucky University, Lexington, which he accepted and where he remained until last year, when he again returned to his native state.

In 1878 Prof. Kemper published a work on Central Forces, mainly a discussion of the physical laws governing the solar system, for the benefit of advanced students in astronomy. In 1882 a larger work on mechanics, prepared in part under tents in the field upon paper captured by Gen. J. E. B. Stuart in one of his raids across the Potomac, was published by him, and is used as a text-book in several colleges.

Prof. Kemper is literary in his tastes, and has contributed articles at various times to educational journals, to a French paper, the Christian Standard, the Christian Quarterly, the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST and many others upon philosophical, scientific, religious and educational subjects. He is a deep thinker, a forcible writer and his frequent articles published in these columns have been read with great pleasure by the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST family. His present address is Cuckoo, Va.

HAIR HELP

So many persons have hair that is stubborn and dull. It won't grow. What's the reason? Hair needs help just as anything else does at times. The roots require feeding. When hair stops growing it loses its luster. It looks dead.

Ayer's Hair Vigor

acts almost instantly on such hair. It awakens new life in the hair bulbs. The effect is astonishing. Your hair grows, becomes thicker, and all dandruff is removed.

And the original color of early life is restored to faded or gray hair. This is always the case.

$1.00 a bottle. All druggists.

"I have used Ayer's Hair Vigor, and am really astonished at the good it has done in keeping my hair from coming out. It is the best tonic I have tried, and I shall continue to recommend it to my friends."
MATTIE HOLT,
Sept. 24, 1898. Burlington, N. C.

If you do not obtain all the benefits you expected from the use of the Hair Vigor, write the Doctor about it.

Missouri Bible-school Convention.

Our readers will find a report of the above convention elsewhere in our columns, written at our request, by a member of the company who was present during all of its sessions. It was the editor's privilege to be present only part of the time and we only characterize the convention in a general way.

It was the twenty-fifth anniversary of our Sunday-school work in Missouri. On this account special importance was attached to the convention and a fine pragram was prepared. The failure of a number whose names were on the program to appear was a regrettable feature and one that ought to be avoided in the future in some way. Missouri has had a series of great Sunday school, or as we call them now, Bible-school conventions. As a rule they have been marked by enthusiasm, unanimty of sentiment and the spirit of brotherly love and enlightened progress. In a few instances adverse influences have produced opposite results. But the California convention last week was fully up to the standard and was marked by the absence of any disagreeable element. We were delighted with the emphasis given to religious training in the home, to personal work and personal influence, to a deeper spiritual life, to the reaching out after the neglected classes and the necessity for a higher standard of teaching in our schools. The Christian Endeavor work was also well emphasized, though we were not present when that part of the program was carried out.

There were some able addresses by a number of leading brethren, and a large number of very profitable and practical addresses, by experts in Bible-school work. The spirit of the convention was in every way admirable. The entertainment was all that could be desired. California did herself proud in dispensing her hospitality without regard to church or party lines to the members of the convention.

It was good to be there. It was inspiring to look upon the large number of young ministers and other young people who are devoting their lives to the Master's work. It was good to review the past, to think and speak of those who have wrought so nobly in this state in the years gone by and who have gone up to their reward. The Sunday-school Board presented a good report and has managed the work in a most commendable way. Secretary Davis, who has been so long in the work and who has shown himself so proficient, feels encouraged by the outlook. The young chairman, C. C. Hill, the pastor of the church at California, discharged his double duties in a most satisfactory way. The next convention goes to Sedalia. Let the great work of training the young for Christ in the state of Missouri go on with increased zeal and wisdom.

Delightfully Original.

It has been a great pleasure to me to read "Wheeling Through Europe." The style is delightfully original and the subject-matter especially entertaining. The book has an added charm because of the personal element, which is never wanting from beginning to end.

I have ridden over much of the country described in the book, and I am glad to say that the chapters of the book make me look at these things with a freshened enthusiasm. The book is, therefore, well worth reading, both by those who have been abroad and by those who wish some of advantages without occupying disadvantages of a trip. It lays before us a picture of every-day life, makes us feel in a lively way the charm of such a trip and the ease with which it may be undertaken. The book is decidedly worth-while.

Columbia Bible College.

During the sessions of the Sunday-school convention, at California, there was a meeting of the trustees of the Missouri Bible College, located at Columbia. Dean Moore has recovered from his long confinement with a broken limb. Brothers Monser and Winders, who have been giving lectures to the Bible students most of the college year, reported their work. Vacancies in the board of trustees were filled. A new executive committee was appointed, which was charged with the work of completing the $50,000 endowment before the end of the present year and of planning for the continuation of the Bible college work. The sentiment in the state was never stronger in favor of the wisdom of this enterprise than at the present time. Let there be no faltering in carrying it forward to ultimate success.

Illinois Second.

Illinois is second in completing a series of a child support pledges, Iowa being first, as was published in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST a short time ago.

The following is the pledge and the names of the contributors:

Wishing to have a share in this Christ-given duty of providing for helpless and homeless children, I hereby authorize the corresponding secretary of the Benevolent Association of the Christian Church to call on me for $10 whenever seven other residents of this state agree to join me in providing for the support of one child for one year in the National Christian Orphans' Home at at St. Louis, Mo. Signed:

Mrs. P. O. Johnson, Belleville; J. W. McIntyre, Atwater; Clio Circle, Jacksonville; W. H. Smith, Dixon; A. C. Morrison and Y. P. S. C. E., Donovan; C. W. B. M., Hoopeston; Y. P. S. C. E., Ingraham; Mrs. W. C. Mercer, Robinson; Y. P. S. C. E., Clay City.

The second series will be ready for publication in a few weeks. Everywhere we go the churches receive us enthusiastically, every one seems in hearty sympathy with the work, and though the gifts received are small, yet we feel encouraged, since there are so many other interests by virtue of the plans of the church kept more prominently before the people. Recently we received some small gifts on the annuity plan; we would like to receive more.

May God bless the churches that are coming to the help of this noble enterprise Brethren, the work does not belong to the sisters of St. Louis alone, but to you and to me. The association is not for the care of the aged and orphaned of St Louis or Missouri alone, but for the aged of all the churches and the orphans of the whole land. This year especially let us remember this work, while our orchards and vineyards are groaning under their loads of fruit and our fields are burdened with grain.

Paris and the Exposition—II.

A GENERAL VIEW OF THE EXPOSITION.

Arriving in Paris late in the afternoon, the natural and inevitable order of procedure was: first, find a suitable stopping-place; second, get dinner; third, go to the Exposition. The first was not a difficult matter, for the crowd has not yet arirved and, contrary to the general expectation, prices have not gone up very seriously and visitors are not made the victims of legalized robbery—at least not yet, for the season is yet young. The second is always a delight in Paris, for in that happy city there are no poor cooks, so far as my own varied experience extends. The third, a ramble about the grounds of the Exposition, seemed to be the natural substitute at present for the stroll through the boulevards, with which the traveler ie apt to begin every visit to Paris.

The Place de la Concorde was the same vast and impressive square that it had always been. The obelisk in the center kept watch, as usual, and the fountains would have glistened in the moonlight had not the moon paled before the lights of the Place. On one side is the entrance to the Champs Elysees embowered in trees; on one side the Tuilleries Gardens with the Louvre behind them, and on one side the Seine with the Chamber of Deputies beyond. But there, in one corner, is a new and strange form, a vast structure of blue and gold, a triple arch of fantastic design and intricate ornamentation. It is the main gateway to the Exposition.

There has been so much discussion of the artistic merits of this structure that the layman in art may well hesitate to express an opinion of it. It may be beautiful. I will only venture to say that it is not beautiful to me. Whatever maybe said of the curious form and Oriental decoration of this "monumental entrance," it will at least be admitted as a general proposition, I think, that a gateway ought to appear to lead to something—unless it is in the form of a triumphal arch, which may have some meaning and value in itself apart from its function as a gate. But this is a gateway, obviously and unmistakably a gorgeous and pretentious gateway, through which one has a right to expect to step directly into a realm as gorgeous as itself. And yet, when one has passed through this ornate entrance, he finds himself in a shady lane of blossoming chestnut trees. There is not an exposition building in sight, except a vague glimpse of the Rue des Nations across the river. The gateway would perhaps be well enough if it opened immediately upon the Champ de Mars with its fairylike palaces, but it suffers by comparison with the chestnut trees. Its gilded splendor seems but gaudy tinsel in comparison with their simple and genuine beauty.

Passing through this shady way by the side of the Seine, one comes out presently into a large place where the new Pont Alexander III. springs across the river in a single arch. From this bridge one obtains perhaps the best general view of the Exposition. To the right runs the broad avenue upon which face the two Palaces of the Fine Arts, palaces in reality as well as in name. They have been built of sandstone and marble at the cost of millions and will be the permanent legacy of the Exposition Universelle to the city of Paris. To the left of the bridge the continuation of the same avenue leads through the center of the Esplanade des Invalides, flanked on either side by the ornate palaces of Various Industries. This exquisite vista is closed by the gilded dome of the old Hotel des Invalides, within which is the tomb of Napoleon. Looking straight ahead, down the river, one realizes that the real central thoroughfare of the Exposition is the Seine. Both banks are lined with Exposition buildings for more than a mile. On the right one sees the position of the city of Paris, the glass-domed Palaces of Horticulture and the picturesque buildings of Old Paris, wherein some streets of the mediæval city are reconstructed and made to live again. Beyond that rise the twin towers of the Trocaders Palace, a relic of the exposition of 1878, and one can catch a glimpse of the curious domes and minarets which crown the colonial buildings in the park of the Trocaders.

Keeping still the same point of view on the Pont Alexander III. the left bank of the Seine presents the most beautiful and varied view to be found in the entire Exposition. It is the Rue des Nations, where the national pavilions of all governments constitute a richly varied group of buildings in all colors and all styles of architecture. Beyond these, and still fronting the Seine, are a series of large and handsome buildings devoted to army and navy exhibits, merchant marine, forestry, fishing and the chase, but the gradual curve of the river cuts off the full view of these from our point of view. Back of these lies the Champ de Mars, a space which was large enough to contain the last exposition and which may be considered as the piece de resistence of the present one. Its palaces cannot be seen from where we stand, but the Eiffel Tower, which lifts its thousand feet of lacelike steel in the midst of the Champ de Mars, can be seen, not only from here, but from every other point in or about Paris. It is a glorious view from the Pont Alexander III., rich in color, rich in strange and wonderful forms and richer still in its varied suggestiveness; for one knows that those manifold forms are not mere vagaries of architectural phantasy, but represent the world in miniature.

A great exposition like this is valuable as illustrating how the æsthetic interests of life can be interwoven with the practical and commercial. One cannot admire its beauty of form without remembering that its material content is the product of the manifold industries of all nations. And one cannot study in detail the products of the world, without being made aware that the modern business world is not without its æsthetic and artistic value. In one aspect a great exposition is merely a great advertising show, but it represents business made beautiful. Its true symbol is the sample case and the palette joined in friendly union. I suggest this symbolical representation of the genius of an exposition; not a garlanded figure of Peace trampling upon War, not allegorical personifications of Prosperity, Science, Art and Literature; but the figure of an up-to-date traveling man, prepared to use every shrewd artifice to get his goods into the hands of the customer, clasping hands with an idealizing artist to whom beauty is everything and business nothing. These are the two sides of the matter.

But it must not be understood that this impression of the beauty and the richness of the Paris Exposition was produced by that first evening walk about the grounds. The view from the bridge was, to be sure, impressive, but the closer view was less inviting. The grounds were ill lighted. All of the more important buildings were completed externally, but many of them were nearly empty. Piles of building material marred the scene. There were not enough people in the grounds to keep the place from being lonely. In the long and narrow connecting link between the Esplanade des Invalides and the Champ de Mars there was no passage except under the elevated moving platform, which makes a circuit of the grounds on that side of the river, and one who was afraid of darkness and solitude might easily have found cause for alarm. It was here, stumbling about in the dark over piles of rubbish, that I came to the hasty conclusion that the Paris Exposition was a grand hoax. It is not that, but it must be said that there is more or less of a joke upon every one who came to see the whole show in the month of May. It was not there. Visiting the grounds in the evening, one is impressed with the fact that much of the exposition has not yet arrived, that the visitors have not yet arrived, and that Paris knows better than to waste its time in coming to see what does not yet exist. But a view of the place by daylight emphasizes the fact that there are a vast quantity of exhibits already in place, even though many are still lacking; that there are more foreign visitors here than usual, though not such a crowd as one expects to find, and that the Parisian populace is regular and enthusiastic in its patronage of the Exposition. English Topics.

Friends of Dr. Herbert Willett may like to hear that he is still busily lecturing in England. He is giving himself entirely to the service of our own churches during this short campaign of two months. His lectures are creating intense interest in each locality where he delivers them. G. F. Assiter is this very day to give his last address at Hornsey Tabernacle, my own sphere of work. He has given us his best and we have enjoyed it. He can sing splendidly and he preaches with the vivacity of most Englishmen who have lived for a time in America. I have noticed that any of us who cross the Atlantic and sojourn in the magnetic and stimulating atmosphere under Columbian skies, gain an accession of animation. The Englishman has the greater staying power; the American is quicker. An amalgam of the two temperaments is admirable. Assiter has it. But he will return to the West and purposes to evangelize in Missouri. It is unfortunate that Willett and Assiter should have struck our shores together. They came in the same ship. Now, our churches welcome every well-accredited friend who crosses over to see us, and they are all ready to employ as far as possible the services of any competent evangelist for protracted meetings. But it would be advisable for any who wish to visit us and to work amongst us to make careful arrangements beforehand by corresponding with Bro. Todd, our association secretary. When two preachers come at the same time we are, of course, anxious to have them both, but we are embarrassed. Only at certain seasons, indeed, can we attempt evangelistic campaigns in addition to our regular work.

ALEXANDRA PALACE.

Within sight of my home and only about a mile and a half from my door is the beautiful eminence called Muswell Hill, on which stands the grand building known as Alexandra Palace. We North Londoners are just beginning to feel the excitement which comes of anticipation in view of the approaching Christian Endeavor World's Convention, to be held at Alexandra Park and Palace in the middle of July. There will be a "City of White Tents" in the splendid park. Five thousand people will sleep in that great camp on the lovely hill. We expect a large contingent of our American Disciples to visit London for the occasion. I look forward to renewing acquaintances made at Cincinnati last year. Are you, Bro. Garrison, coming? Noted men and women from your side will be present to take prominent part. Mr. Sheldon, of Topeka, is expected. Muswell Hill is a romantic height. It overlooks the pretty suburb of Hornsey, where some famous men have lived and died. In the old churchyard is buried the poet who wrote many favorite religious lyrics, Rogers. At the foot of the hill is a sweet villa standing in a large garden, where the other and more noted poet, Moore, wrote "Lalla Rookh." Muswell Hill derives its name from the "Mouse Well," with which is connected a tradition. It is said that some soldiers were chasing some rebels in the days when the locality was far outside London. The pursuers were overcome with weariness and thirst and were about to give up the chase, when they espied a diminutive mouse scudding along. They hurried after it and it led them to a natural spring in the rocks, at which they were refreshed, and which afterwards gave its name to the hill.

THE LAND OF THE WINGED TIGER.

We are distracted in England by ever-increasing complications. While entangled in the present war our statesmen cannot pay the needed attention to a variety of matters which at other times would be most seriously regarded. One of these concerns the Far East, and it happens to be one of those affairs which in its future development concern England and America equally. We are a small nation, with a mighty empire on our hands, whose interests extend to every part of the globe. We are supposed by many Americans and by most Continentals to be a people affected by a mania for snatching fresh bits of this earth every morning. We have the repute of being insatiable expansionists. We are innocent of any tendency to either imperialism or expansionism. I know that this sounds ridiculous, but I know my countrymen very well. I never met an Englishman who wanted to see another acre added to our territorial empire. I have been many years looking out for such an Englishman. When I find him I shall reckon him the biggest fool on earth. The truth is that this British Empire waxes greater and greater simply by a process of involuntary and automatic accretion. The expansion is entirely predestinated by some mysterious providential decree. I am no Calvinist, but I thoroughly believe in the fixed destiny of nations. America has her destiny to fulfill. She must go forward, no matter what Mr. Bryan and certain anti-McKinleyites may say or do. You have some "Little Americans" and we have some "Little Englanders," and both may be theoretically right in their code of international political ethics. Nevertheless, they are not so "little" as they are going to be, for history in its making will snuff them all out. The small obstructive nations are destined to the doom of extinction, whether they are Boers or Venezuelans. Of course, they will not be exterminated as peoples. But they will, wherever they are presumptuous enough to fling themselves under the steam roller of progressive civilization, get their own petty independence crunched out. And pray, of what use is it? What has the Transvaal done with its liberty but to abuse it and to steep it in the bog of oligarchic corruption?

"LITTLE AMERICANS."

I must not presume, as I am only a "no-good Britisher," to express any decided opinion about things peculiarly American. But at any rate no American can say that I have ever disparaged or belittled America. I can honestly claim that I have gloried in the prospect of her incalculable greatness. Most Englishmen are of the same mind, though many Americans will not believe this. But I have recently, here in England, met with several specimens of the "Little American" species. Some of these are estimable Christian people; but I have been simply astonished at their virulent and vitriolic abuse of both America and England. I do not cease to wonder at these phenomenal Americans. I study them, listen to them, bear with their denunciations of "cowardly Britains," and find them insoluble altogether when I hear how they rave against your magnificent President I find that the war in the Philippines is the special subject of their objurgations. Well, the awkward facts remain that America did not declare against Spain, and Britain did not begin hostilities against the Boers, nor was she ever at any time prepared to do so. However, a big country has room for many sorts of people, and America is large enough to accommodate many "Little Columbians" without feeling crowded. But I wish you would not send too many of this "genus Americanorum" over to this side, for here we are so crowded that we run up against them and cannot lose track of them again. But now I am coming to talk a little about the subject indicated by my caption, "The Land of the Winged Tiger," of course meaning Korea. I have wandered for a moment because the "Little Americans" and "Little Englanders" worry me, and also because Korea happens to be a country about which they will before very long have much to say. There is a black cloud visible on the far Eastern horizon. Many Englishmen are filled with alarm at the news that Russia has gained from the king of Korea the concession of exclusive rights at Masampho, the finest harbor on the coast of that peninsula in the Yellow Sea, which is to be the bone of contention between Russia and Japan. Now it is certain that here we have the beginning of a tremendous struggle. Japan means to put under arms half a million soldiers, and she is making frantic efforts to increase her already splendid naval force, so as to be in a position to attack Russia should the latter power attempt to oust her from those equal rights in Korea which were agreed upon after the war between China and Japan. Who that has studied the history of Russian progress, aggression and diplomatic dealing can doubt for a moment as to what is coming? Now the importance of this incident at Masampho is that it touches the vital interests of Britain, Japan and America. Behind Japan must stand the whole Anglo-Saxon world. Destiny has inexorably written this down. No nation can now live unto itself only. Russian bureaucrats are so reckless that they are riding for a fall, but do not see it. They only perceive that Korea, like Manchuria, is an easy prey, and they cannot resist the temptation offered. When our war is over, as it soon must be, than the entanglement in the Far East will begin to absorb much of the attention of the English thinking people. That Japan is disposed to enter into mortal combat is certain. Korea is essential to her necessary expansion, with her increase of population at the rate of half a million every year. Moreover, for a long period Japan ruled Korea. She will risk her existence rather than allow Russia to monopolize influence there. Indeed, what else can she do? Infatuation must reign in the Russian councils or she would not have fired this pistol shot at the very heart of Japan. Masampho is exactly opposite to Nagasaki and is not more than a day's distance by steamer. Truly, the world's outlook does not promise peace.

THE VALUE OF CHARCOAL.

Few People Know How Useful it is in Preserving Health and Beauty.

Nearly everybody knows that charcoal is the safest and most efficient disinfectant and purifier in nature, but few realize its value when taken into the human system for the same cleansing purpose.

Charcoal is a remedy that the more you take of it the better, it is not a drug at all, but simply absorbs the gases and impurities always present in the stomach and intestines and carries them out of the system.

Charcoal sweetens the breath after smoking, drinking or after eating onions and other odorous vegetables.

Charcoal effectually clears and improves the complexion, it whitens the teeth and further acts as a natural and eminently safe cathartic.

It absorbs the injurious gases which collect in the stomach and bowels; it disinfects the mouth and throat from the poison of catarrh.

All druggists sell charcoal in one form or another, but probably the best charcoal and the most for the money is in Stuart's Absorbent Lozenges; they are composed of the finest powdered Willow charcoal, and other harmless antiseptics in tablet form or rather in the form of large, pleasant tasting lozenges, the charcoal being mixed with honey.

The daily use of these lozenges will soon tell in a much improved condition of the general health, better complexion, sweeter breath and purer blood, and the beauty of it is, that no possible harm can result from their continued use, but on the contrary great benefit.

A Buffalo physician, in speaking of the benefits of charcoal, says: "I advise Stuart's Absorbent Lozenges to all patients suffering from gas in the stomach and bowels, and to clear the complexion and purify the breath, mouth and throat; I also believe the liver is greatly benefited by the daily use of them; they cost but twenty-five cents a box at drug stores, and although in some sense a patent preparation, yet I believe I get more and better charcoal in Stuart's Absorbent Lozenges than in any of the ordinary charcoal tablets.

B. B. Tyler's Letter.

Reference was made in my last letter to the annual convention of Christian Scientists in Boston. The annual meetings are all held in this city. Attendance upon one of these national assemblies is an event never to be forgotten in the experience of a devout disciples of Mrs. Eddy. It is said that not less than 6,000 persons enjoyed the communion on this occasion in the "Mother Church," as the Boston house of worship is called. The audience room was filled five times. Neither bread nor fruit of the vine are used in this service—not even water. No material thing is used. The service is altogether spiritual. The communicants are supposed to think. What their thoughts are has not, so far as I know, been revealed. It is probable that if an effort were made to reveal them they would not be understood by the uninitiated. They are doubtless too profound for ordinary mortals.

The Christian Science Church in Boston is a disappointment to me. I have read accounts of it which left impressions on my mind that it is quite a temple. Such, however, is not the case. It is not a fine church when compared with Trinity, Phillips Brooks' church or the new Old South, the church in which Dr. George A. Gordon preaches. It is located in a fine residence district. The building can be seen from a Huntingdon Avenue car. It is on Falmouth and Norway Streets. It is a nice little granite building. The seating capacity is probably 1,200. This is a liberal estimate. The membership is more than 18,000. More than 2,000 united during the recent annual meeting. A person living in any part of the world can be a member of the "Mother Church." Those who attended this annual meeting were persons of culture. The delegates were well fed, well dressed, well behaved ladies and gentlemen. They do not belong at all to the class influenced by John Alexander Dowie in Chicago. It was a women's meeting. But few men attended. The few who were present were, in appearance, prosperous business men. There were no "working" men and women to be seen. This is one of the interesting features of this singular movement. Some things smacked of idolatry and blasphemy. There was a great crush about the door of "Mother" Eddy's room. Mrs. Eddy was not present, but a limited number at once was permitted to enter her room and spend a few minutes. The founder of Christian Science, or its discoverer, is placed on a plane of equality with Jesus Christ our Lord. There are mottoes on the walls of the audience room in the church—the sayings of Jesus and the sayings of Mary Baker G. Eddy alternating. To the right and left of the organ are pictures of books with the names of the books on the open pages: "Science and Health, with Key to the Scriptures" on one side and the Bible on the other side. There is a round window, in the center of which is a picture of "Science and Health, with Key to the Scriptures." On the rim of this window are representations of various things common to religious thought. The Bible is on this outer circle. "Science and Health" is in the center, the Bible is on the outside. There is a picture of a female, a young woman, a mural painting, wearing a crown bearing the legend: "Crowned Womanhood." This is supposed to represent Mrs. Eddy when she was younger than she is now. Do not these things smack of idolatry? Are they not near akin to blasphemy?

Mrs. Eddy is quite feeble. Her home is in Concord, N. H. I hope to be able to visit this place while I am in this part of the world. The delegates to the annual conference visited "Mother" Eddy at her country seat. She was able to be seen for the space of thirty minutes. What will be the effect on Christian (?) Science (?) when "Mother" Eddy dies?

It is said that when the church in Boston was built more money came in to defray the expenses than was needed. Money was returned to donors that was sent in to assist in the erection of the building. Is not this unique?

That man is bold to the verge of recklessness who says there is no truth in the teachings of Christian (?) Science (?) ! What do you know about it? Mrs. Eddy's book, "Science and Health," is absolutely unique in the literature of the world. It can be read from left to right and from right to left with equal facility and profit. One can begin in the middle of the book and read toward the front and toward the back and obtain as much information as to read it in the ordinary way, i. e., from left to right and from the first page to the last. In all seriousness, Mrs. Mary Baker G. Eddy's book, "Science and Health," is unrivaled in the literature of the world. The Decalogue does not forbid one to fall down and worship IT, for there is nothing like IT, neither in the heavens above nor in the earth beneath. Do not, my brother, say there is no truth in Christian (?) Science (?). Such a position is not safe. Do not take it. How do you know, how can you know, that there is no truth in the teaching of "Science and Health?"

There is good in Christian (?) Science (?). Of this I have not a doubt. For one thing the disciples of Mrs. Eddy pay for their churches. It is probable that there is not a building belonging to the Christian Scientists on which there is a debt. Is not this well? Not all the buildings belonging to the Disciples of Christ are free from debt. How do you explain this? Do the disciples of Mrs. Eddy love her better than the Disciples of Christ love him? If not, then have the disciples of Mrs. Eddy a wisdom superior to the wisdom possessed by the Disciples of Christ? If this is true, how did they obtain this wisdom? It may be said that Mrs. Eddy reaches men and women of means, while "our plea" reaches persons who are comparatively poor in this world's goods. But how does it come to pass that Mrs. Eddy reaches the class that she does and influences them in the manner and to the extent that she does, while the Disciples of Christ do not? These conundrums are left with you. Make out of them whatever you can.

One thing is certain: we need to make more of money and its use than we have made in our teaching. The business part of the Lord's work is too often carried on by his disciples in a haphazard way. This is certain. System is needed in this department. The Christian Woman's Board of Missions furnishes an object-lesson. Their work is carried on with greater steadiness and system than in any other enterprise in the brotherhood. Is not this true?

The value of systematic giving is evident from the following: A number of persons in the church on West 56th St., New York, agreed to "pay into the local church treasury not less than five per cent." of their "gross income." In three months the twenty-six persons who signed this pledge paid in the sum of $325.73. The same men and women under the weekly pledge system paid in, during the preceding three months, $173.12. Here is a gain of $152.61, or 88 per cent.!

Try something of this kind in your church and report results.

There is more than enough money in the hands of the Disciples of Christ to defray the expenses of the local church, to carry on even a larger mission work than we now have on hand and to liberally endow our colleges. How can this money be secured for these purposes?

New York Letter.

On Saturday, June 2nd, Bro. B. L. Smith sailed from this port for San Juan, Porto Rico, as the special joint commissioner of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions and American Christian Missionary Society, to look after certain features of mission work on that island, in which both these societies are interested. By previous appointment he preached on Friday night, June the 1st, at the Newark Mission, and conferred with them concerning the American Society taking it up as a specific work. This Bro. Smith will recommend his board to do, supporting a pastor at Newark, provided the Church Extension Board will buy a lot and help build a house of worship in that city. It is thought best to secure a good site and build a neat chapel on the rear, leaving the front clear for future buildings. We sincerely hope the Church Extension Board will comply with this request and make it possible for the planting of a good church in this important city very soon. In case this plan can be carried out, the Newark Mission has practically decided on the man to be employed. There is no doubt that a good, self-supporting church can be built up in Newark in the course of four or five years if the proper encouragement is given. It is an important city of 225,000 people and not a preacher in it proclaiming the simple New Testament way of salvation.

In the death of the Rev. Dr. R. S. Storrs, of Brooklyn, the American pulpit has lost one of its most conspicuous occupants and the cause of education and morality one of their strongest helpers. Dr. Storrs belongs to the old school of preachers rather than the new, being one of the most distinguished types of that generation of preachers who moved more people by eloquence and oratory than by practical and pointed appeal. Dr. Storrs impressed many people by his tremendous mental activities. There was something grand and stupendous, even Miltonic, in the majestic sweep of his mind and its operations. He was pre-eminently a preacher; he cared nothing for the accessories of worship, or what is sometimes called external enrichment of the services of the church.

The same may be said of Dr. A. J. F. Behrends, another distinguished Congregational preacher of Brooklyn, who recently died. He possessed a more masterly mind, perhaps, than Dr. Storrs, though he did not stand in the same high degree as an orator. Both stood in the very front rank of Congregational preachers and will be sadly missed by that people. They both stood by the inspiration of the Bible and believed in preaching it vigorously. Dr. Storrs was brought up a Congregationalist, and for more than fifty years was pastor of the Pilgrim Church. Dr. Behrends, on the other hand, was born and brought up by Lutheran parents, united with the Baptists and preached among them for many years, but afterward changed his views and became a Congregationalist. It will be remembered that he made one of the finest appeals uttered in the Ecumenical Missionary Conference on the sham of "comity," pleading for Christian unity.

The Methodist General Conference played havoc with certain salaried positions held many years by men in this city. Six prominent men were legislated out of office, four of whom lived in or near this city. Dr. A. J. Palmer, general secretary of the missionary society, one of them, was a prominent candidate for the office of bishop. Dr. W. T. Smith, another secretary, for twenty years in office, was left without an official position. Also Dr. J. L. Hurburt, for many years a leader in Sunday-school work of the church, was dropped. Dr. J. E. C. Sawyer, one of the denominational editors, also leaves his position. Some of these have already accepted calls to churches and others doubtless will do so soon. Dr. H. K. Carroll, who is not a minister but an editor (for many years on the Independent), has been called to the missionary secretaryship. Thus there has been a general turning about of the forces at the Methodist missionary headquarters in this city.

The third annual convention of the Federation of the Zionists of America is now in session in this city at the Educational Alliance. The reports presented shows that there are 135 Zionist societies in this country and about 10,000, Hebrews altogether, enlisted in the ranks. A letter of greeting was presented from Prof. Max Nordau, of Paris, in which he congratulated the American Zionists on the progress they are making. The federation has adopted a constitution at the present meeting in which the clause stating the object of the association places it in line with the declarations of the International Zionist Congress relative to the securing of Palestine again for the Jewish people. Another of the specific aims stated, by the constitution is to foster a knowledge of Hebrew as a living language.

Dr. Gottheil declared in a great mass meeting at Cooper Union last night that every true heart is naturally Zionistic, and further, that the movement is not a dream but more and more promises great and blessed realities for Israel. While it is true that many difficulties apparently beset the movement—difficulties religious, social, financial and political—yet stranger things than the accomplisment of the ends of the Zionist Hebrews are found in the history of this marvelous people. It may be a fulfillment of prophecy, and therefore a means in God's hands for their conversion to Christ, their own Messiah, and who, when they are turned to the Christian faith, will no doubt prove themselves the mightiest missionaries known in the annals of Christendom.

Among the Canadians.

The writer has now been in Ontario just one month. A number of places are asking for ing meetings, and it is possible I may remain a month or two longer. If I can get away from here before the summer is past I expect to visit my aged mother in Nova Scotia, and make a short trip to P. E. Island.

I have just attended the annual meeting of this province, held at the town of Guelph. It was in many respects a very interesting meeting. Upwards of one hundred delegates and visitors were in attendance. There are between four and five thousand Disciples in Ontario, considerably less than a few years ago.

It is difficult to make Disciples in Canada, and just as difficult to keep them aft r they are made. The constant exodus to the United States, not only of the rank and file of the members, but also of the preachers, has been greatly against our churches throughout the Dominion. Even the strong prejudice against what is American, that one frequently finds in Canada, does not prevent thousands of her most worthy sons and daughters from crossing over into the broad dominion of Uncle Sam. The constant loss of members in this way has greatly retarded our cause in the various sections of the Dominion.

Our fellow townsman, Frank G. Tyrrell, came to Guelph on Saturday, lifted upon the convention the light of his beaming countenance, gave three of his eloquent addresses and captivated the hearts of a thousand kenucks. It was Frank's first visit to Canada, and he deported himself so well that he was not classed among "the queer preachers" that come to this country from "the states." They considered Frank "as civilized al any of us."

A. McLean was at the convention, inspiring als with missionary zeal as perhaps no other man in the brotherhood can. No man living has a larger place in the hearts of our people in the Dominion than A. McLean.

I had the great pleasure of meeting Bro. Hodkinson, late of Iowa, but now pastor of our church in Hamilton, Ontario, B. H. Hayden, a fellow-student in Bethany College, whom I had not seen since we parted at Bethany thirty years ago. He comes from Ohio to take the oversight of the church in Bomanville, Ontario.

W. D. Cunningham, who has labored for several years in this province and who was provincial evangelist during last year, has returned to Pennsylvania, his native state. While at the convention he received the sad news of the death of his mother, which hastened his return. He had the sympathy of the entire convention in his sad bereavement.

The matter of establishing a college in Ontario has for several years greatly agitated the minds of many of the Canadian brethren, and has constantly been coming up in their conventions. Strong differences of opinion have arisen as to where and how their college should be established. But if an outsider can be allowed to express an opinion in the matter I believe they are now very near a solution of the diffcult problems.

Boxes of Gold

SENT FOR LETTERS ABOUT GRAPE-NUTS.

330 boxes of gold and greenbacks will be sent to persons writing interesting and truthful letters about the good that has been done them by the use of Grape-Nuts food.

10 little boxes, each containing a $10 gold pi ce will be sent the 10 writers of the most interesting letters.

20 boxes each containing a $5 gold piece to the 20 next most interesting writers, and a $1 greenback will go to each of the 300 next best. A committee of 3 to make decision and the prizes sent on July 3, 1900.

Write plain, sensible letters, giving detailed facts of ill-health caused from improper and nonnourishing food, such as white bread, hot biscuit, starchy and uncooked cereals, etc.

A change to perfectly cooked, predigested food like Grape-Nuts, scientifically made and containing exactly the elements nature requires for building the delicate and wonderful cells of brain and body, will quickly change a half sick person to a well person. Food, good food, is nature's strong weapon of defense.

Include in letter the true names and addresses, carefully written, of 20 persons, not very well to whom we can write regarding the food cure by Grape-Nuts.

Almost everyone interested in pure food is willing to have his or her name appear in the papers for such help as they may offer the human race. A request, however, to omit name will be respected. Try for one of the 330 prizes. Everyone has an equal show. Don't write poetry, but just honest and interesting facts about the good you have obtained from the pure food Grape-Nuts. If a man or woman has found a true way to get well and keep well, it should be a pleasure to stretch a helping hand to humanity, by telling the facts.

Write your name and address plainly on letter and mail promptly to the Postum Cereal Co., Ltd., Battle Creek, Mich. Prizes sent July 3.

Texas Letter.

Willie Denton College, Joshua, Texas, has just closed its first year. The enrollment was 260, and there were three graduates—all young men of promise. The school was inaugurated by Prof. H. C. Stubblefield, a Christian gentleman of culture and power. Much to the regret of the people, Bro. S. has accepted the chair of Pedagogy in the Ft. Worth University, a deserved promotion of a worthy young man. Prof. N. J. Clancy succeeds him.

About 600 people attended the commencement exercises and enjoyed them from first to last. I think I never spoke to a more appreciative audience; and the address, emphasizing the true idea of education, I trust will do good.

The school is named for the wife of the most liberal contributor to the building fund. This strikes me as a fine idea. Why not erect the monument while we live? And why not let it be some noble institution of learning, benevolence, etc., instead of cold, lifeless marble in the lonely graveyard?

E. W. Darst and wife, city evangelist of Chicago, on account of the health of Bro. Darst, have located at Midland. Thus the rigorous winters of the North have driven to our Sunny South two more useful and successful workers. I can sympathize with, encourage and congratulate them, for ten years ago my physician told me that I must make a similar move, or prepare to die. I made the move, and I am now in better health than I've ever been, and am doing more work than I ever did.

Jeu Hawk, well known to us all, spent a few days with us recently, and lectured. We enjoyed his visit and his lecture. He expects to do some postgraduate work on his medical education, and in the fall will return to his old home to tell the "old, old story" to the teeming millions in China.

Charles Reign Scoville and his singer, Bro. Wilson, are in the midst of a great meeting with J. B Sweeney and his good church at Gainesville. The audiences are large and the interest is intense, and a great ingathering must be the result. There have been additions.

J. A. Tabor has held a splendid meeting at Durant, I. T., and organized a church about 100 strong. This is an important town of 5,000 people, and the church has a bright future.

Galveston is rapidly becoming a great grain port. In 1898 she shipped 11,069,542 bushels of wheat, and 4,650,355 bushels of corn. In the year closing, June 31, she increased these figures to 22,553,802 bushels of wheat, and 8,244,528 bushels of corn. The reason for this is that it is cheaper to ship via Galveston than by Atlantic seaboard routes. Galveston on this account is destined to become the port for all products west of the Mississippi River which are to go to foreign markets.

S. M. Martin is to begin a meeting in Austin the latter part of August and continue till the Kansas City Convention. Dr. Lowber will have all things ready, and we may expect a great meeting. Bro. Lowber has decided not to accept the presidency of Add-Ran University and remain with his church at the capital.

L. G. Ament, after a successful pastorate of two years at Sabinal, has resigned, and will enter the university this fall. This example should be imitated by other young men.

Colorado, Texas, has a nice new house. It was dedicated without debt June 3, by Granville Jones. A local paper spoke of his sermon as a "gem." H. W. Laye, the pastor, had his cup of joy full, and his people were happy. D. D. Boyle follows with a meeting, which begins well.

I think I never saw anything more beautiful, pathetic, timely and comforting than this. At the close of a long and laborious life the mind of Lyman Beecher passed under a cloud, and the old giant became a little child again. One day when his son, Henry Ward, had preached the old man entered the pulpit and began to talk, but his words wandered. With much tenderness the son laid his hands on the father's shoulders and said to the audience: "My father is like a man who, having long dwelt in an old house, has made preparation for entering a new and larger one. Anticipating a speedy removal, he sent on beforehand much of his soul furniture. When, later, the day of removal was postponed, the interval was so brief as to render it unnecessary to bring back his mental goods."

CHRISTIAN PUBLISHING COMPANY. St. Louis. Mo.

Dedication.

The church at Henning, Ill., has completed and dedicated a beautiful and oommodious house of worship. It is built in modern style, with corner entrance, and is seated with opera chairs. It is well lighted, well furnished and makes an exceedingly comfortable as well as pleasant place of worship. Lord's day, June 3, was the time selected for its dedication. We spent the week preceeding the dedication with the church, preaching nights, and getting the work in hand for the Lord's day.

The weather on dedication day was ideal. The congregation taxed the house to its utmost, both morning and night.

The indebtedness was greater than had been expected. The giving was generous and prompt. All the indebtedness was provided for, and the joy of the brotherhood knew no bounds. It was a great day, not only for the church, but the community as well. We have never preached to more attentive audiences, nor received more hearty "God-bless-yous" than at Henning.

Bro. Frank Hollingsworth, a young man of much promise, is the pastor of the church and he greatly rejoices with the brethren in the sucessful completion and dedication of their house.

The field at Henning is ripe for a good harvest of souls, and we shall confidently expect to hear of a large ingathering into the fold of the world's Redeemer. We will not soon forget the great kindness of the brethren at Henning.

Wabash, Ind. L. L. CARPENTER.

A crowded house for Childrens' Day exercises. Churches in town kindly gave us "the right of way" for the night services. Collection, $31.47. This is extraordinary liberality. Most people in these parts lost their "earthly all" in the "freeze," yet they are determined to have fellowship in the spread of the gospel. We trust that in the sight of the divine Lord we are on the Roll of Honor.

The Missouri Bible-school and Christian Endeavor Convention.

It was a great convention; great in the manner in which it was cared for by California, great in the size of attendance, great in the results of the year's work as shown in the reports, great in the character of the program, but above all great in the deep, spiritual tone which pervaded it from beginning to close.

Four hundred delegates from outside of California were enrolled; fifty of these were members of the party carried by the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST special. The number of delegates from St. Louis was probably the largest which ever attended one of our state conventions.

The special left St. Louis at 9 A. M. Monday and arrived at California at 1:28 P. M. Returning it left at 1:55, and arrived at Union Station at 6:15 P. M., Thursday the 14th. Every one was well pleased with the accommodations furnished by the Missouri Pacific Railway and we shall hope to have twice as many passengers on the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST special next year.

In one respect the convention made a record in which there is no room for pride; and that was in the number of those to whom parts had been assigned on the program who failed to attend. Some even failed to notify the committee that they would not be present. Good reasons may exist in some cases for these failures; let us hope this is true in all of them.

Monday afternoon and evening as well as Tuesday forenoon were taken up with the sessions of the Christian Endeavor convention, Claude E. Hill, state superintendent, presiding.

The sessions during the C. E. program were bright, enjoyable and very helpful. The opening praise service at 2:30 Monday afternoon was led by D. C. Peters, pastor at Holden. Miss Myrtle Wood welcomed the visitors to California on behalf of the pretty and homelike little city, her speech being a very happy one. In the absence of O. A. Ishmael, of Drexel, W. F. Hamann, of the Fifth Church, St. Louis, responded to the kind words of welcome.

After the announcement of committees by the president, the convention listened to a heart-enriching, soul-stirring address by C. M. Chilton, of St. Joseph, and when the hour for adjournment came the prayer was in many hearts that the spirit of that address might be the spirit of the convention. The prayer was answered.

In the evening, after a service of song, led by F. A. Mayhall, of Vandalia, the state superintendent's report was read. This report might have been more encouraging and the address which followed it more flattering if Bro. Claude E Hill had not insisted on sticking to facts.

As a result of the showing, a conference was held at the Christian church after the close of the session on Tuesday afternoon (the sessions of the convention proper were held in the German Evangelical Church) at which it was decided to "put on more steam," get down to hard work, cooperate with the efforts of the superintendent and the district supeeintendents during the coming year and get ready to do our shouting next year. Just think, Christian Endeavorers: only ninety-two societies in the whole state made any report at all; and only fifty contributed the small sum of one dollar which is asked from each society!

What is your society going to do towards remedying matters? The report of the superintendent was followed by the address of H. A. Northcutt, of Kirksville (perhaps it would be more proper to say Missouri), on "The Bible Our Textbook." This was delivered in the quiet, tender way in which Bro. Northcutt usually does things. Tuesday morning's session brought several disappointments. D. R. Dungan, of Mt. Cabanne Church, St. Louis, was to have opened proceedings with a half hour's normal study on "The Relation of Bible Geography to Bible Teaching;" but he was not present. It was currently reported that he had double the excuse of the man in the Master's parable, for he was marrying a husband and wife. He however gave us this part of the program on Wednesday morning.

J. W. Coggins, of Odessa, also turned up missing. He was to have led the devotional exercises. E. J. Fenstenmacher, of Lexington, delivered a well-prepared and well-received address on "The Endeavor Idea." Miss Minnie A. Shaffer, of Sedalia, who was to lead a conference on "Practical Work an Endeavor Society May Do," finding herself unable to attend, sent paper on the subject to be read.

After reports of district superintendents, and they were very scarce, the convention was treated to one of its best addresses on the subject: "Wherein Does Christian Endeavor Help the Church," by W. A. Moore, of Beulah Church, St. Louis.

At 11 o'clock Miss Mollie Hughes, of Independence, made a short report of Junior work, of which she is state superintendent. This was followed by a conference on Junior Work conducted by Mrs. Pearl Lemon Deerwester, of Warrensburg. Mrs. Deerwester's management of this conference was creditable indeed and it was heartily participated in by junior superintendents and others. After announcements the C. E. sessions closed promptly on time, with a few minutes to spare.

BIBLE-SCHOOL SESSIONS.

The Bible-school sessions began at 2:00 P. M., Tuesday. The first name on the program was not first at all. S. R. Reynolds, of Rosendale, was to have led our devotions, but he could not—he was too far away from us. C. C. Hill, the pastor at California and president of the convention, delivered his address at 2:15, and after he had finished we felt so much like owners of California that we had serious thoughts about applying for a written deed to it. His address was cordial, clear, thoughtful and helpful.

When H. F. Davis, our secretary and treasurer, appeared on the platform there was considerable trepidation in some quarters lest he lose the weight of dignity which he always carries around with him everywhere. But thanks to the fact that he had managed to work off some of his feelings in sundry and divers charts, the wise counsel of solicitous friends and the calming presence of his wife (married men will understand) he succeeded in reading to the convention a report that, in many particulars, was the best in the history of the co operation, without giving vent to a single war-whoop of any size; certainly none that would rank with California's curfew whistle. He deserves credit for it— he report, of course. Here are some of the results as summarized: 275 places visited; 1,115 days' work done, 1,278 addresses made; 46 institutes held; 40 new schools organized; 15 new congregations organized; 35 mass meetings held; 27 protracted meetings conducted; new pledges taken for state work $613.45, cash for state work, $3,393.77; for local Bible-school work, $42.21; for buildings and repairs, $8,730, for preachers' salaries, $550; other purposes, $54.30; additions to the church by letter, 39; by baptism, 147; otherwise, 237. The number of schools contributing to the work this year was 406, last year 350; total receipts this year, $4,539.59; last year, $3,808.06; delinquent schools this year, 51; last year, 105; indebtedness at close of this convention, none; last year, $230.29. Many other items in the report are worthy of notice, but we must omit for lack of space. John Giddens, our evangelist in the southwest district, made a brief verbal report of conditions in his district with many encouraging features. The address of W. T. Henson, of Lathrop, at this point, was greatly enjoyed. It was both humorous and sensible. We then had another vacancy, J. A. McKenzie, of St. Joseph, being responsible for it. On Tuesday evening a split occurred in the convention. It could not be helped; one church would not hold them, so a double program was arranged. At the German Evangelical church G. L. Cook, assistant pastor of the First Church, St. Louis, led the praise service, followed by an address on "Bible-school Needs of Missouri," which was to have been delivered by Davis Errett, of Canton. Simpson Ely was called upon to perform the task as Bro. Errett was not in evidence. "Responses by the Convention" were on cards prepared for the occasion and read something like this: The Christian Bible-school at ——— promises to pay to the Missouri Bible-school Co-operation ——— etc., etc. At the Christian church, King Stark, of Lamonte, led the praise service. L. H. Otto, of Higginsville, delivered an address that was masterful in thought and in delivery, his subject being "Coworkers with Him." W. F. Richardson, of the First Church, Kansas City, had for his subject "Are We?" It caught us and we went expecting a fine sermon. Would you believe it? he made us do most of the talking! Rather, it was writing, and the cards were similar to those used at the other church. The pledges taken at both churches amounted to not quite two thousand dollars.

On Wednesday morning normal study, "The Four Evangelists," was necessarily omitted. If Clinton Lockhart, of Canton, was an evangelist at that time he had probably headed in the wrong direction; at least he did not reach California. The conference on "How I Interest my Boys" would doubtless have interested many of us "boys and girls," but J. M. Hosmer, of Maryville, was not there to lead it. The conference on "Teachers' Meetings," conducted by P. W. Harding, of Mexico, was good and helpful. W. F. Turner, of Joplin; Geo. L. Bush, of Windsor; C. H. Winders, of Columbia; J. W. Ellis, of Plattsburg, and others participated. The next conference, on "The Home Department," was to have been led by M. J. Nicoson, but Bro. N. is moving his "home department" and that's excuse enough for his absence. F. M. Rogers, of Webb City, conducted it, and with the help of G. E. Shanklin, of Stanberry, and Jno. P. Jesse, of Gower, gave us much light and help along the line of this kind of Bible-school work. Baxter Waters, of Central Church, St. Louis, then stirred us up in an address on "Boys' and Girls' Rally Day for America," urging the importance of this kind of missionary education.

One of the most interesting half hours of the convention was the one used by T. P. Haley (he lives in Kansas City, but belongs to us all), in reminiscences of "Twenty-four Years' Work." We so much need some one to tell us once in awhile of the struggle of the past, with their success and failures, for we "forget so soon."

The devotional exercises Wednesday afternoon would have been led by Miss Nora Kiernan, of Huntsville, but not having a proper long-distance telephone accommodation other arrangements had to be made. The entire afternoon was given up to the interest of the Primary Department. Mrs. F. P. Grant, of Jefferson City, exercised a general superintendence over the program, and it is needless to say everything moved along all right. "Problems in Primary Work," by Miss Jasper, of Mound City (supplying for Miss Maude Cole), "Primary Work Without a Separate Classroom," by Miss Lou B. Goodnow, of Kingston, and "How to Teach the Lesson," by Mrs. F. P. Grant, of Jefferson City, were the subjects for consideration. J. H. Allen, of Bunceton, led the song service on Wednesday evening at the German Evangelical church and this was followed by a strong and able address delivered by R L. Cave, of Independence. His subject was "A Great Work of God." At the Christian church Geo. H. Combs, of the Sixth and Prospect Church, Kansas City, delivered an address on "The Bible-school of the Twentieth Century," in which he pointed out many things in need of improvement in present church methods. On Thursday morning D. R. Dungan told the convention how to teach the next Sunday's lesson. It was a half hour full of interest and profit. After devotional exercises, led by R. L. Wilson, of Kansas City, and various committee reports, B. F. Glahn, of Palmyra, conducted a conference on "The Work of the Superintendent," being assisted by T. J. Smirl, of Craig; E. M. Smith, of Centralia; Dr. B. E. Dawson, of Belton, and W. E. Boulton, of Mound City. Out of five persons who were to take part in the next conference on "The Work of the Teacher" only J. B. Jones, of Fulton, answered "here" He used fifteen minutes of the time to such good advantage that we all wished he had taken longer time. J. H. Garrison, editor of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, then talked to us for thirty minutes about "The Great Teacher," telling us of the courage, patience and love of the schoolmaster of the world. It was a timely and fitting conclusion to all that had gone before.

Two splendid papers on Country Bible-schools: (1) "Their Needs," by W. S. St. Clair, of Columbia, and (2) "How to Meet Them," by R. H. Fife, of Weston, were listened to with interest.

In the absence of J. P. Myers, of Clarksville, B. F. Wharton, of Marshall, presented the banners as follows: for the greatest per cent of increase in offerings for missions and benevolences, Fourth Church, St. Louis; for the greatest per cent. of increase in offerings to state Bible-school work, Higginsville; for the greatest per cent. of increase in average attendance, Webb City; for greatest number of new schools, Cass County. Banners for the nine points of excellence were awarded to thirty-six schools.

W. E. M. Hackleman, of Indianapolis, led the singing with gratifying results. He left the convention Wednesday night, and before going was called upon to sing a solo. His selection was a tender and touching poem beginning with "If a Christian meet a Christian going thro' the world." If you have never heard him sing it you ought.

C. C. Hill brought the great convention to a close with a few parting words of farewell.

BUSINESS.

Next year's convention will be held at Sedalia, June 12. The church there will furnish all delegates with lodging, breakfast and supper; dinner will be served in the church at twenty-five cents.

The members of the Bible-school board were re-elected.

The president of the next convention will be C. M. Chilton, of St. Joseph.

By resolution the convention recognized the needs and opportunities of our great cities with their teeming populations and instructed the board to provide evangelists for such places whenever an extension of the field forces becomes possible.

In future, reports received from schools later than the time fixed in the bylaws will not be considered in awarding banners. Reports must be sent immediately after the close of the year, May 31. This is right and proper.

One day of the sessions of the convention will, next year, be given to the Christian Endeavor work, as it was this year.

WHY WE ENJOYED OURSELVES.

Because the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST ran a special.

Because the Missouri Pacific Railway was as clever as usual in its dealings with us.

Because of the "glorious climate of California" while the convention lasted.

Because C. C. Hill, with his able assistants, Bros. Young and Fulks, provided for our entertainment with no confusion and to our entire satisfaction.

Because they only blow the curfew once a day at California.

Because the Californians seemed to really take a fancy to us and the feeling was mutual.

Because all of the church folks, including our Roman Catholic brethren, did all they could to make us happy.

Because the convention was located half way between "up-town" and "down-town," and consequently we did not have to take a stand on either side of the great local question.

Because everybody liked the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST and chanted its praises in private and in public. W. D. CREE.

The Mathes Fund Full.

Please publish this week that we have enough money to save the home of Eld. J. C. Mathes, of Atwood, Ill. The church here desires to express thanks for the prompt and liberal aid received. Let us all join in rejoicing in the good work done.

Our Next National Convention.

A substantial and hearty interest is being aroused in the forthcoming National Convention, which is to meet in Kansas City October 11-18, 1900.

The publicity committee has been doing everything possible thus far in a quiet way to effect an organization composed of delegation managers from each state and territory in the Union, whose business it will be to work up as large delegations as possible from their respective states. The publicity committee at Kansas City thought it wise to nominate to the executive committee the appointment of the corresponding secretary in each state as excursion manager of that state, because of his wide acquaintance and because his duties compel him to keep in touch with all parts of his state. He is also in touch with the railroads and is in position to get the best excursion rates to the convention. Keep in touch, therefore, with the corresponding secretary of your own state and travel with him to the convention. In this way the best rates will be secured for all.

Remember, your state secretary or evangelist is the excursion manager from your state unless some one else is named. In all such cases the executive committee appoints the man suggested by the people of the state or district. In the District of Columbia Ira W. Kimmel is the excursion manager; in Maryland, Peter Ainslie; in Indiana, T. J. Legg; in Texas, J. C. Mason and B. B. Saunders; in Alabama, O. P. Spiegel.

The different newspapers of the brotherhood, weeklies and monthlies, have offered liberal space for fresh news items relative to the interests of the convention, and all news items of interest to the people who anticipate coming to the convention should be sent to G. W. Muckley, chairman publicity committee, 600 Waterworks Building, Kansas City, Mo. The committee wants to arrange matters in the best possible way so as to interest the people. When any one has an item of interest, send it promptly, and let all be free to do this. The papers will give definite space and place under the head of "National Convention News." Let us, therefore, have it all appear in one place where it can be seen and read at one time.

Kansas City is amply able to entertain the convention. Hotel and lodging house rates, including lodging and breakfast, will be secured for $1.00 a day and upward.

There are thirty-nine railroads entering Kansas City. The rate granted thus far, and which is final as far as the passenger associations are concerned, is one fare for the round trip, plus $4.00, in the Central Association, one fare plus $2.00 in the Western Association, outside of a radius of 200 miles, and within that radius one fare and a third. Keep in touch with the excursion manager in your state and you can do better. He will have the best rate when you finally start.

What the excursion managers say should be noted. It will be seen that the enthusiasm in working up delegations is beginning to grow.

T. J. Legg, of Indiana, writes: "We are coming with a large delegatian."

B. S. Denny, of Iowa, writes: "I will cheerfully co-operate with the publicity committee in securing the largest delegation for the Kansas City convention ever sent from Iowa." Chancellor Craig, of the university, says: "Iowa will send 1,000 easily."

C. G. McNeill assures the committee he will work in every way possible to get a large delegation from Wisconsin.

W. W. Elliott, of Kentucky, writes: "Shall be glad to comply with your request. Let me know when, where and how to begin work."

From Oklahoma, where we are having such rapid growth, W. A. Humphrey sends greetings and says: "Count on me to help in securing a large number of delegates." The same words came from F. G. Roberts, of the Indian Territory.

S. H. Bartlett, of Ohio, writes: "I am working for at least 500 from Ohio." He worked for $10,000 for missions in Ohio and got more than that amount, so we may expect to have over 500 Disciples from Ohio.

A. I. Myhr agrees to see that Tennessee is well represented. O. P. Speigel, of Alabama, says they can bring 100 from that state. E. C. Browning, of Arkansas, writes: "Yes, I will do all I can to get a good delegation to Kansas City." H. C. Combs, of Georgia, says he "will do all he can to secure a delegation and steer it safely to Kansas City."

A. Linkletter, of West Virginia, always busy, writes: "We expect to be represented at Kansas City, and I will aid delegates with information and will keep you posted. You can depend upon me."

Leonard G. Thompson write from Colorado: "I will gladly comply with your request in yours of the 5th, and act as excursion manager for Colorado, in behalf of Kansas City, 1900. The corresponding secretary is in the best position of any man in Colorado to do the best work in getting a good delegation."

Ira W. Kimmel, of Washington, D. C., writes cheering words, as does also M. Pittman, of Louisiana. C. M. Kriedler, of New York, says we can count on him and his state. Alex. McMillan assures us that Michigan, while it cannot send many in proportion to their number, will be seen at Kansas City. J. K. Shellenberger writes cheering words from Minnesota.

These are as good news notes about the convention's attendance as the brotherhood could wish at this time. Representative men are at work and using every moment of time and every opportunity to secure a large representation.

Bro. Abbott, the state secretary of Missouri, a member of the publicity committee, in his travels over the state is continually talking up the convention and expects 2,000 from Missouri. W. S. Lowe, corresponding secretary of Kansas state work, expects 2,000 Kansans. At the Jubilee Convention at Cincinnati Kentucky and Ohio furnished half the number present, and Missouri and Kansas ought to do as well.

In his duties as corresponding secretary of the Church Extension Board, the chairman of the publicity committee has been all over the South and through many Eastern and Central states and finds the people wide awake to missions and very anxious to come to the Kansas City convention. It is not too soon to plan to come. Save your vacation time and money and come to Kansas City. You will find the most enterprising of all Western cities. If you saw Kansas City eight or ten years ago you will not know it now with its miles and miles of asphaltum streets and boulevards, with its new lines of street cars and new buildings, and here are more than 4,000 Disciples of Christ to meet you and greet you in exalting the Christ and his work.

McKinney, June 6.—I sang here on Lord's day. There was such interest that we had a meeting on Monday night, with 12 added at these services. I give two illustrated musical recitals here this week. Will attend the Texas state convention next week. I expect then to go North.—C. E. MILLARD, singing evangelist.

Waxahachie, June 1.—Prof. C. E. Millard, of Maysville, Mo., was with us in a meeting which closed last Tuesday night. It had continued two weeks and a half when the weather became so bad we had to close. Bro. Millard had a large chorus and I have never seen any one who could handle a choir or audience better. He is a splendid soloist, the best I have ever heard. He has a very fine electro-stereopticon with which he sometimes illustrates his solos. It is very impressive. He can secure an audience any place. Our audiences were fine and I feel that the meeting greatly benefited us.—A. E. EWELL, pastor.

Imperial River, never would I dare
To offer thee my insufficient rhyme,
But that I do bethink me of the time
So long ago, so crystallinely fair,
When on thy banks I sported free as air,
Plunged in thy tawny flood of Summer's prime,
And when the bells of Spring rang sweet in chime
Strolled on thy bluffs for blooms enclustered there.
I see thee now when snow and ice are gone
In grand, majestic might roll swiftly on
By city, bluff and bottom to the sea;
And I remember well that swirl of thine
Wherein black death would quickly have been mine
Had not the Master sprang to rescue me.

Romance and Romanticism—II.

MARY E. WARE.

Incomparably more beautiful than any of the legends are those of the Arthurian cycle. They represent largely the struggle between the Celts and the Teutons. The scenes change repeatedly. Now they are in Brittany, next in Ireland, then in England, Scotland and Wales. They are the Celtic contribution to the world's literature. The Celtic element is as fine and keen as a Damascus blade. It carries with it wit, humor, pathos, imagery and symbolism.

Some hero-warrior, whom they chose to call King Arthur, touched the hearts and imagination of the people by the nobility of his character. The minstrels make him the central figure, around whom they group all the notable characters of the traditional days. To throw an air of the supernatural around him they created the wizard Merlin for his attendant and counselor. Merlin performs for him those marvelous feats that the gods did for the Greek heroes in the heroic age of Greece.

King Arthur must be furnished with a beautiful wife. It would have been out of the realm of drama for her to have loved her own husband. She must needs fall in love with the strongest, bravest and fairest of all of the knights—Sir Launcelot. Even Merlin, with all of his enchantments, could not prevent it.

Merlin had a bit of human frailty about him. He told the secret of his strength to Vivane, the beautiful, wicked woman whom he loved. When in possession of this knowledge she used it to deprive him of his physical freedom. He now becomes invisible, though he can communicate with the outer world. He sends word to King Arthur to build a round table, the symbol of democracy, at which he and his knights are to sit during their feasts and councils. One seat, the Siege Perilous, was to be left vacant until the coming of a knight who was as pure as he was brave

Just about the time the legends reached this stage of formation there was a great awakening in the church. She was jealous of their popularity and revived the legend of the San Greal. Walter Map had the genius to wear these rival legends together and to send the knights of the round table over land and sea in search of the San Greal.

This is the most beautiful legend in the cycle. There is a deep spiritual truth underlying it; that is, the masterful strength that comes from personal purity.

The San Greal was the cup from which Christ drank at the last supper. Joseph of Arimathæa had come into possession of it and carried it into Brittainy or Gaul, where he introduced Christianity. The care of the cup was given from generation to generation to his descendants.

For a long time it was visible to all pilgrims, and its presence brought a blessing on the land in which it was kept. One day its guardian committed a great sin and it disappeared. Now Merlin sends word to King Arthur that he must find the holy cup that prosperity may be restored to his kingdom.

Shortly after receiving this message the king sat with his knights at the round table feasting, when the door opened and the San Greal passed through the hall. They could see the outline because it was covered with red samite. Not a word was spoken until it had disappeared, then King Arthur said: "Certainly, we ought to thank God for what he hath shown us to-day."

Then the knights arose and made a solemn vow that they would go in quest of the San Greal, and sit no more at the round table until it was found.

Scarcely had the angels in heaven recorded their vows when Sir Galahad entered the hall. He was the son of Sir Launcelot. He had inherited his father's strength and beauty, but none of his weak self-indulgence. Tennyson, in his heroic poem, has him to say:

> "My strength is as the strength of ten,
> Because my heart is pure."

He walked right up to the seat called Siege Perilous, lifting the cover and seeing his name inscribed there, seated himself. The knights marveled at his conrage, but it was the courage born of strength and purity.

Group after group of the knights depart in search of the San Greal. The legend recounts each one's experience, but the most human, the most pathetic story is that of Sir Launcelot.

After riding far and wide for many a day and many a night, he came to a building where he saw a peculiar light and heard voices within singing: "Joy and honor to the Father in Heaven." He knew that the San Greal was in there. He dismounted, knelt and reverently prayed: "Fair Lord, if ever I did aught that pleased Thee, for thy pity sake show me something of that which I seek."

The door opened and he saw a great clearness. Then the room became so bright it seemed as though all the torches in the world were burning within. He would have entered, but a voice said sternly: "Stay, Sir Launcelot, and enter not."

Then his eyes became used to the exceeding brightness, he saw a silver table, on i the holy cup and many angels guarding it Then in wonder and thankfulness Si Launcelot forgot himself and steppe within. Suddenly a breath which seeme intermingled with fire smote him so sore i the visage that he fell blinded to the floo Then he felt many hands lift him up an bear him out into the darkness.

Ah! what can be sadder than to catch glimpse of the good that might have bee ours, but of which our sins have deprive us of the possession?

Sir Galahad and Sir Percival start out to gether in search of the San Greal. Si Galahad had the strength that comes fro knowledge and purity; Sir Percival, tha which comes from ignorance and purity He had been reared apart from all socia intercourse by a fond mother who dreade to have him know the ways of the world.

As they journeyed along a beautifu maiden beckoned to them to follow he They did so until they came to a great sea on which was a stately ship. She pointe to it and disappeared. They entered th ship and saw the silver table and on it th San Greal. Long they gazed, mute wit wonder and admiration. Then Sir Galaha knelt and prayed silently, but a voice in th distance answered aloud and said: "Whe thou askest death for thy body, thou shal have it. Then shalt thou find life for th soul."

For two long years they wandered homeward, carrying the holy vessel with them It brought a blessing in every land throug which they passed. Before they reache Camelot Sir Galahad died, and the Sa Greal disappeared and has never been see since.

Now this is the Celtic legend. Th French legend has Sir Percival, or Parzival as they call him, find it, with an altogethe different experience. Wagner's opera i founded on the latter legend.

The next legend in the development o the cycle is the story of the love of Quee

Guenever and Sir Launcelot, and of the magnanimity of King Arthur, which enabled him to see wrong, but to act toward each as though he knew it not.

The knights, thinking him ignorant of it, came to him and told him about it. Sir Launcelot fled. Queen Guenever, according to the law of the land, was sentenced to be burned to death.

The fateful day dawns. She is not burned, for Sir Launcelot arrives with a host of armed knights and demands that her life be spared. He then departs for his own castle in a far-off land. King Arthur follows him, but hardly had he commenced besieging the castle when he hears that his nephew had reported him dead and usurped his throne.

He hastens to Camelot and fights a losing battle, and is himself mortally wounded. Before his death he commands his attendant to row far out into the lake and to drop his jeweled sword. He does so and a hand reaches up, grasps the sword and disappears forever.

Guenever flees to a convent, and most of the knights, Sir Launcelot among the number, spend the rest of their days in monasteries.

Oh, the human frailty, the heartaches, the tragedy running through this legend!

The last legend in the development of the cycle is the story of Sir Tristan and Isolde. It is very similar to that of Sir Launcelot and Queen Guenever, an unholy love unlawfully pursued. It is of Cornish or Breton origin. It did not originally belong to the Arthurian cycle, but a later Borren writer introduced him to the round table. He also introduced a Saracen knight, Sir Palamedes, a fine creation, an open confession of good seen in the Mohammedans. True to the spirit of the time, he must needs be converted to Christianity.

Wolfram, a German poet of the 10th century, wrote one of the finest love epics of the Middle Ages about Tristan and Isolde. It is second only to the Song of Roland.

The Spanish Peninsula is the home of the cycle of Amadis de Gaula. These legends are of Celtic origin, too, and are supposed to be even older than those about King Arthur. They are full of beauty and tenderness.

The hero, Amadis, is the illegitimate child of the king of Gaul and the Princess of Brittany. He is put into a cradle and set adrift in the sea; hence his title: "The Child of the Sea." He is rescued by some Scottish chiefs, who carry him to the court where he is reared. In the meanwhile the king and princess had married and given birth to another son, Galaor, who had been stolen by a giant.

On arriving at manhood Amadis is knighted and goes forth to seek adventures. The Fates kindly guide him to his father's court, where he is recognized by a ring which he wears.

When he hears the story of his lost brother he makes a knight's vow that he will go forth and return no more until he has found him. Af er many adventures he succeeds in doing so. The wanderings and adventures of the two brothers through France, England and Germany make up the remainder of the cycle. The character of Amadis is scarcely inferior to that of King Arthur.

Unconscious Wit.

Unconsciousness is the charm of the wit of children. When the little girl whose mother spoke of going into half-mourning inquired whether "any of her relations were half-dead," she never for a moment suspected that she had said something comically witty. Or, when a little fellow, ten years old, told his teacher, as his excuse for being two days absent from school, that "they were going to be surprised—a surprise party was coming to his house—and so they had to get ready," he little thought of the full meaning of what he had said, or suspected that his mother would have boxed his ears if she had known how thoughtless he was. It is this awkward revelation of family secrets that makes the child the enfant terrible or dangerous person of society.

"Now, Gertie," said a young mother, "give Aunt Julia a kiss before you go to bed."

"No, mamma, for if I kiss her she may box my ears, as she did papa's last night."

Then there is the smart youngster, different from the one first spoken of, whose sayings have a smack of villainy in them.

"Tom," said a stern father, "I dislike your low ways."

"Never mind, pap," said the hopeful youngster, "when I grow up I'll be a highway man."

"Are you not sorry, Johnnie," said an anxious mother, "for having stolen that orange?"

"Yes."

"Do you repent what you did?"

"Yes."

"And will you not do better next time?"

"Yes; I'll steal two."

These are true enfants terribles.

The precocious boy is frequently wise and witty in his answers One of this class, being praised one day by a gentleman for his shrewdness in replying, and informed by another that smart children were often dull and stupid in manhood, quietly retorted:

"You must have been a very smart boy, sir!"

This youngster was also bright at school; for, being asked one day to illustrate the use of the prefix dis, he wrote this sentence on the blackboard: "Boys love to play, girls to display."

Sometimes it is the figurative form of a child's utterances that gives it its charm. A little boy, whose father was pointing out Italy on the map to him, and remarking, as usual, its resemblance in form to a boot, said:

"Well, if I live to be a man, I shall put my foot in that boot some day."

"What! kiss a man so homely as papa?" said a mother, in fun, to her little girl.

"Oh, but papa is real pretty in his heart," was the reply. What papa would not have been delighted by such a compliment?—Sunny South.

Sewing Machines of the Present are very different from those of the past. Very few users of sewing machines know the technical differences; patents have expired on generic features, but "the world moves," and radical improvements have been made in sewing machines, so that the one of to-day shows a tremendous improvement on its predecessor. Women who have used both kinds quickly realize the difference between a cheaply made imitation of some ancient type and the modern light-running machine which is easily adjusted, does all kinds of work, and is always ready to go. The Silent Singer of to-day is the latest result of constant improvement in mechanical excellence. For practical use it compares with the old-time sewing machines sold at department stores much as a modern railway train surpasses a stage-coach of the last century.

A Gentleman.

I knew him for a gentleman
By signs that never fail;
His coat was rough and rather worn,
His cheeks were thin and pale—
A lad who had his way to make,
With little time to play;
I knew him for a gentleman
By certain signs to-day.

He met his mother on the street;
Off came his little cap.
My door was shut; he waited there
Until I heard his rap.
He took the bundle from my hand,
And when I dropped my pen
He sprang to pick it up for me—
This gentleman of ten.

He does not push or crowd along;
His voice is gently pitched;
He does not fling his books about
As if he were bewitched.
He stands aside to let you pass;
He always shuts the door;
He runs on errands willingly
To forge and mill and store.

He thinks of you before himself;
He serves you if he can,
For in whatever company
The manners make the man.
At ten or forty 'tis the same;
The manner tells the tale,
And I discern the gentleman
By signs that never fail.

Sea-Birds a Sanitary Necessity.

This country is on the verge of losing forever one of the main features of its sea-coast charms—the sea-birds themselves. In fact, the terns, the most exquisite of the gull family, and which formerly thronged our whole coast, have been so nearly wiped out by agents of the milliners that this year's onslaught, already fully organized, will glean almost the last pair from the few small breeding colonies which remain, wherever these are unprotected. And the larger gulls, which are not only very beautiful, but absolutely essential as harbor scavengers, are also being decimated for the same purpose.

All these species, with their exquisite beauty, their wild voices and their most romantic lives, peopling a realm which without them would be oppressive in its dreary grandeur, will reach their breeding places in a few weeks, and the terns, especially, are liable to be slaughtered the moment they get there; therefore, the promptest action is necessary if we are to save even the few pairs of the latter, which could restock our devastated coast when the evil eye of fashion shall have turned to other victims.

Simple economic considerations make it a matter of course that the gulls must be saved. An immense horde of them, which naturalists think number anywhere from a hundred thousand to a million, gorge twice a day in New York Bay upon garbage. As the hour of the "dump" approaches, their multitudes fill the whole air to an immense height, over an area of several miles, then gradually settle on the sea in vast white sheets. The whistle of the police boat, the signal to "dump," seems to waft them simultaneously into the air, to gather, like dense snow-clouds, over the floating masses just emptied from the many scows.

Imagine from what an amount of putrid matter these birds, as big as hens, save the adjacent beaches, not to speak of their perpetual gleaning in the actual harbors! And this is a specimen of what occurs at every port.

And shall this incalculable sanitary benefit, and all this beauty, terminate forever, and for no worthy purpose?

If money enough can be raised, the committee of the American Ornithologists' Union will guard every breeding place where there is a law to back them, as Mr. Mackay and Mr. Dutcher have done at Vineyard Sound Islands and Great Gull Island.

The utmost caution will be used in choosing wardens, and the committee will be glad to receive names of men especially suited for the post. Lighthouse keepers and life-saving captains will be employed wherever feasible.

A very encouraging sum is already in the hands of the committee.

The places to be protected are certain islands on the coast of Maine, Long Island, New Jersey, Maryland, and perhaps Virginia and Florida.

In Maine alone there is need of all the money we can possibly get, since there single wardens are afraid to face the rough plumers, and some more elaborate organization is the only hope.

The American Ornithologists' Union, therefore, appeals to every bird-lover for money to be used in hiring wardens to protect the birds while nesting. Contributions should be sent to Mr. William Dutcher, treasurer of the union, at 525 Manhattan Avenue, New York City, who will furnish all desired information.

The Practical Use of the Bible.*

What does the Bible tell you of yourself that you know to be true? That you are imperfect and sinful and needy. What does the Bible tell you of God that you at once feel to be true? That he is holy and merciful and responsive to your need. What does the Bible tell you to do and become that you at once perceive you ought to strive to do and to become? That you should turn away from all evil-doing and follow the light that shines in the words and face of Christ, and also in every heart that is open to God, and to do good to all men, and live in the Spirit. Neither these questions nor the answers to them or speculative or theoretical; they are the same to all men; and they disclose the practical use, as experience demonstrates the practical and pre-eminent value of the sacred Scriptures. He who sincerely and persistently makes this use of the Bible will find it disclosing surprising and inexhaustible stores of inspiration, instruction, comfort and delight. He will not worship the book as an idol, nor cast it aside as a fable; but he will treasure it as the window through which, dimmed and scarred though it be with human imperfection, streams the blessed, quickening light of God.

J. BREKENRIDGE ELLIS.

Now that the Red Box Clew is finished, I have been thinking of selecting and condensing certain stories and sketches from such writers as Dickens, Thackeray and Scott, who can write as well as I can. I will take such of their works as are little known to the public, change to suit my taste, and I hope yours, and give them in due course for several weeks, as an experiment. Tell me what you think of it. Myrtle Blanchard, Barnard, Mo., says if I publish The Red Box Clew, her father will buy her a copy. Joe, Sparks and Jeanette M. King, Murfreesboro, Tenn., also want copies. The story will appear in book form, but how soon I cannot say. In the meantime here is something about animals by Charles Dickens, which I have altered and shortened. There will be more of it next week, and in the meantime, write me good, long and interesting letters for our page.

My present article is devoted to the lower animals of back streets. Nothing perplexes my mind more than the bad company birds keep. Foreign birds often get into good society, but British birds are inseperable from low associates. I find them in poor and immoral neighborhoods, convenient to the saloon and pawnbroker's. They will do things for people in coats with bone buttons and fur caps that they cannot be persuaded by the respectable order of society to undertake. In a dirty court once I found a goldfinch drawing his own water, and drawing as much as if he were in a consuming fever. I bought that goldfinch; he was sent home and hung upon a nail over against my table. From the moment of his appearance in my room, either he left off being thirsty or he could not make up his mind to hear his little bucket drop back into his well when he let go; a shock which in the best of times had made him tremble. He drew no water but by stealth and under the cloak of night. After an interval of hopeless expectation the merchant who had educated him was appealed to. He was a bow-legged character with a flat and cushiony nose, like the last new strawberry; he wore a fur cap. He sent word that he would "look round." He looked round, appeared at the doorway of the room and cocked up his evil eye at the goldfinch. Instantly a raging thirst beset that bird, and when it was appeased he still drew several unnecessary buckets of water; and finally leaped upon his perch and sharpened his bill.

I have known a donkey by sight who lived over on the Surrey side of the London bridge. It was the habit of that animal when his services were not on immediate requisition, to go out alone, idling. I have met him a mile from his place of residence, loitering about the streets; and the expression of his countenance at such times was most degraded. He was attached to the establishment of an elderly lady who sold periwinkles, and he used to stand on Saturday nights with a cart load of these delicacies, pricking up his ears when a customer came to the cart, and too evidently deriving satisfaction from the knowledge that they had got bad measure. His mistress was sometimes overtaken by inebriety. The last time I saw him he was in circumstances caused by this failing. Having been left with the cart alone and forgotten, he went off idling. He prowled among his usual low haunts for some time, gratifying his depraved taste until, not taking the cart into his calculations, he endeavored to turn up a narrow alley, and became greatly involved. He was taken into custody by the police, and the stubborn sense he evinced of being a blackguard, I have never seen exceeded in the human countenance. I have seen boys being taken to jail who were as like him as his own brother.

I have the pleasure to know a dog in a back street who has greatly distinguished himself in the drama. He is a dog for whose honesty I would go bail to any amount; but whose intellectual faculties in association with fiction I cannot rate high. Indeed, he is too honest for the profession he has entered. Being in town last summer when he was posted in the bill of the night's entertainment, I attended the performance. His first scene was eminently successful; but as he had merely to run on, bark and jump through a window after a fugative, it scarcely afforded ground for a cool judgment of his powers. The next scene was a little marred by his overanxiety; forasmuch as while his master (a belated soldier in a robbers' den on a tempestuous night) was lamenting the absence of his dog, and laying great stress on the fact of his being thirty leagues away, the faithful dog was barking furiously in the prompter's box, and clearly choking himself against his collar. But it was in his greatest scene that his honesty got the better of him. He had to enter a trackless forest, and there fly at a murderer when he found him resting at the foot of a tree with his victim ready bound for slaughter. It was a hot night, and he came into the forest in the sweetest temper, at a very deliberate trot; trotted to the footlights with his tongue out, and there sat down, panting, and amiably surveying the audience with his tail beating on the boards like a Dutch clock. Meanwhile the murderer impatient to receive his doom, was audibly calling to him, "C-o-m-e here!" When he was in the course of time persuaded to trot up and rend the murderer limb from limb, he made it (for dramatic purposes) a little too obvious that he worked out that awful retribution by licking butter off his blood-stained hands.

In a shy alley live two honest dogs who wear garments and perform in Punch and Judy. I may venture to say that I am on terms of intimacy with both, and they never fail to look down on the man inside the show. The difficulty other dogs have of satisfyi g their minds about these dogs, appears to be overcome by time. They seem to suspect their frills and jackets, and to sniff at them as if they thought those articles of personal adornment an irruption—a something in the nature of mange, perhaps. There is a dog in Southwark who keeps a blind man. He may be seen, most days, hauling the blind man away on expeditions wholly uncontemplated by him, wholly of the dog's conception and execution. I saw him yesterday wearing the money tray like a collar instead of offering it to the public, taking the man against his will, on the invitation of a disreputable cur, to visit a dog in Fleet Street. About three o'clock in the afternoon, blind men assemble on a sloping board near the Arcade and compare notes. Their dogs may always be observed at the same time, openly disparaging the men they keep, to one another, and settling where they shall respectively take their men when they move on again.

DRUNKENNESS CURED.

An eminent St. Louis physician has given a positive answer to the oft asked question, is drunkenness a disease, or is it simply a temptation that cannot be resisted by a vast number of the human race? The physician in question is Dr. Ozias Paquin, who for years has been a practicing physician in the City of St. Louis. He has answered this question by taking five of the worst drunkards that could be found and cured them of all further appetite for intoxicating drinks. The five cases were all beyond middle age and they had sunk into the deepest pit of drunkenness, with the odor of drink about them so obnoxious that it was almost impossible to stand within speaking distance. He not only cured them of all desire for intoxicating drink, but at the same time placed upon their cheek the flush of health and into their eyes the light of happiness, and took from their person the odor of whiskey. It was almost a miracle, for he had raised five cases from degradation into the sunshine of health and happiness. Dr. Paquin has cured hundreds of patients who were relapses from other treatments, and in every instance he cured these patients, and they have remained cured for months and years. It can therefore be said that the Paquin Treatment is a permanent cure, and not a temporary one, for the patient never relapses to his former condition. We know of no more humane work being done at the present time than that which Dr. Paquin is doing, and it is the duty of every reader to assist Dr. Ozias Paquin in his noble work, and if any reader has brother, sister, husband, father or friend in whose system lurks the disease of drunkenness, he should at once send their name to Dr. Paquin or see that they either visit or place themselves in communication with the Ozias Paquin Immune Co., Suite 1113 Chemical Bldg., St. Louis. The reader that does this will certainly be doing a christian act, for no matter how hopeless the case may seem, and no matter how many other treatments have unsuccessfully been tried, the method known as Ozias Paquin Treatment will perfect a cure, dispelling all desire for drink, and at the same time will place the constitution in a robust and healthy condition.

JESUS WALKING ON THE SEA.*

The wonderful miracle Jesus had wrought in feeding the thousands with five loaves and two fishes had produced in the minds of the multitude a profound conviction that he was a divine messenger if not the expected Messiah. Many of them said: This is of a truth the prophet that cometh into the world. Perhaps they had in mind the promise of Moses, that God would raise up a prophet from the midst of Israel like unto himself. The rabbis were wont to teach that the Messiah, when he came, would feed Israel in the wilderness by a miracle, as Moses had done; and what more striking fulfillment could they look for than this, which had been accomplished in their very sight? The time seemed ripe to many for a revolt against Rome, and who could better lead the nation than this One who se med to have the resources of the universe at his command? But he had before refused to encourage any such ambitious plans, and the crowd were now prepared, as John tells us, to force Jesus to accept the crown. But the Master, by the exercise of that strange influence through which he moved men as he would, persuaded the multitude to return quietly to their homes, and his disciples to take boat again for Bethsaida, on the western shore of the lake, near Capernaum. Leaving him, therefore, at the scene of the recent feast, the disciples start through the deepening night for the shore, six miles distant.

Jesus went up into the adjacent mountain to pray. Here he spent several hours in communion with the Father. He needed strength for the year of trial upon which he was entering. Once before we are told that he spent a whole night in prayer, when he was about to select his disciples to bear his message to a lost world. We might well learn from our Master the secret of a life of power if we would but remember how large a place prayer had in his life. What sweet communings he had at such times with his Father! How a season of secret converse with God nerved his soul for duty and sacrifice!

The short distance across the lake would have been compassed in an hour or two had the water been smooth and the wind favorable. But the disciples had hardly reached the middle of the lake when a sudden and violent storm arose, which became threatening in a little while, and filled their hearts with fear. "To understand the causes of these sudden and violent tempests we must remember that the sea lies low, six hundred feet lower than the ocean, that the vast and naked plateaus of the Janlan rise to a great height, spreading backwards to the wilds of the Hauran and upwards to snowy Hermon; that the water courses have cut out profound ravines and wild gorges, converging to the head of the sea, and that these act like gigantic funnels to draw down the cold winds from the mountain."—Thompson, The Land and the Book. Sail was quickly furled, and strong arms tugged at the oars, trying to make head against the raging wind. The labor was exhausting and their progress slow. It seemed about all they could do to hold the boat against the wind and keep the water bailed out. O, if they were only on the land with the Master! Why did they consent to leave him?

But the Eye from which nothing is hid was upon them. From his lone watch upon the mountain the dear Savior had witnessed their distress, and he now comes to their relief. Their extremity is his opportunity. Sea and land are alike to him. He makes his way speedily across the sea, walking on its tumultuous waves as on a paved street of the city. It is long past midnight, and the morning is hastening toward its dawn, when the weary and frightened disciples see a form erect upon the waves, and approaching their boat. Too startled at first to make any outcry, they watch the apparition, as they deem it, till it is about to pass by them, when fright finds a voice, and they cry aloud, probably in sudden petition to God for protection. How blessed the reaction from their terror to hear the well-known voice of Jesus, sweetly saying: "Be of good cheer; it is I; be not afraid." How often might we hear that voice with the ear of faith in the hour of our distress would we but listen for it. He is the same Savior now as then, and he loves his people with the same fond affection. Let us trust him more completely.

Peter, the impulsive disciple, ever ready to take the Master at his word, feels assured that the same power which makes the water solid beneath the feet of his Master can support him in like manner, and he calls out: "Lord, if it be thou, bid me come unto thee upon the waters." Receiving the desired bidding, Peter leaps from the boat and starts toward the place where his Lord was standing. But the poor man had overestimated his faith. For a moment his enthusiasm enabled him to tread upon the waters without thought of danger, but the beating of the winds and surging of the billows very soon disturbed his sense of security and he repented of his temerity in leaving the boat for this waste of waters. His faith began to waver and at once he began to sink. But, with his loss of self-confidence he retained his faith in the Master and cried aloud to him as he went down beneath the flood: "Lord, save me!" The answer was immediate. Jesus stretched forth his hand and rescued the despairing disciple, with a gentle rebuke: "O thou of little faith, wherefore didst thou doubt?" Blessed hand that is ever reached forth to sustain us when our heart and strength have failed. The floods shall not overflow us, not even the surges of death shall engulf us while we hold that hand of mercy and power.

Still holding Peter's hand, Jesus leads him to the side of the boat, and they step upon its deck. The wind quickly dies away and the rough waters become smooth. The elements again recognize their Master as they did when, a short time before this, Jesus stretched his hand out over the raging waters, saying: Peace, be still! His presence in our hearts can tame the wildest tempests of passion. Alone we toss to and fro upon the billows of temptation, knowing not how soon the fearful end shall come. Take Jesus into the boat and all shall be well and soon the haven will be reached. No wonder, after such an experience as this, that these men fell down before Jesus in worship, saying: "Of a truth, thou art the Son of God."

TOPIC FOR JULY 1.

WHEN IS A NATION SAFE?

(Deut. 26:1-11.)

[A patriotic service.]

Israel sought always to insure its safety by keeping in closest touch with Jehovah. They acknowledged his hand in all their affairs. It was he who brought them out of Egypt; it was he who gave them their land of milk and honey; it was he to whom they rendered gratitude by bringing and dedicating their first fruits.

Now a modern nation must follow Israel's example in these things, if it would be safe. It must acknowledge God to be in its affairs. It must have so grave a feeling of national responsibility as to consider that he is present and is watching its actions. Recently a senator of the United States declared in the Chamber that our people were "trustees under God" to accomplish certain results; and he was hooted all over the nation as guilty of canting hypocrisy. Well, perhaps he may have been guilty, if he was using this language for political effect; and yet, the people which are not trustees under God for doing whatever work is given them to do are not safe. It is God-conscious nations just as it is God-conscious men who do the great things and live the great lives of the world.

Naturally, the principle just stated strikes at the root of the matter and all other things shall be added to a people which first seeks God. To it will come a well-balanced patriotism. Love of country is a virtue, love of humanity is greater. There are many men who would die for their nation's welfare, who have no blood to shed for humanity at large. The truest patriotism sees farther than its own shores. "My country, right or wrong," can never be the shibboleth of a nation whose God is the Lord. Who could fancy Jesus adopting so limited a notion of patriotism?

To a God-conscious nation will come also a nobler self-reliance. It is well known that religious wars are most terrible; that a nation of fanatics will spill its lives like water. It is not such self-reliance as this that is meant, not fanatic and frantic zeal; but a calm, self-contained, economical and careful determination to see the right triumph and a belief that if God is with us the right will triumph.

Such a feeling leads to cleansing of our own hearthstones. Better municipal politics will follow. Here is the cancer that is eating us. We must cut it out. A nation cannot be safe with corrupt cities.

Such a devoted nation will never bow to a golden calf. If any danger threatens us, however, as a people, it is this danger of gold-worship. It is money that holds the reins over our necks. It is love of money that we need to dread. Any one who has a voice in pulpit, platform, public press or individual contact with people needs to shout: "That way lies death!" Any one who speaks the prayers of multitudes of his fellowmen needs to cry: "From gold-heartedness and gold-blindness, Lord God, deliver us!"

In short, a nation that feels God's presence will purge out any unclean thing. Any Achan who hides ill-gotten gains, any corruption that festers in the body of the nation, any ring that leads the people about by the noses, any boss that bestrides the neck of the state—any and all hindrances to the greatness and mission of the nation will be hurled out of the way.

MORE MISSIONARY STATISTICS.

By W. J. Lhamon, Director.

A very interesting factor in missionary work is found in the contributing agencies. It is the spirit of Christianity to be helpful in every possible way, and the missionaries of the cross have not confined themselves to direct evangelistic efforts. It many times happens that indirection is the best direction and that the contributing agencies are among the most effective ones. It has been found that schools are quite as essential as churches, and that the printing press is essential to both the school and the church. Likewise it has been found that the bodies of men must be cared for as well as the souls; hence, hospitals and dispensaries and asylums have sprung up. Still further civilization has proved itself the child of Christianization and accessory to it, and therefore we find industrial missions, like that of McKay, in Uganda. Christianity is, indeed, a leaven, just as the Master has said, and it permeates all through and through the society that it saves.

In a former article some of the chiefest statistics of missionary results were given, with a promise to present others relative to what are called above contributing agencies.

There are, in mission lands, 355 hospitals and 733 dispensaries. In these hospitals there are well-nigh 100,000 in-patients, and the out-patients number above 2,500,000. Annually there are given above 6,600,000 treatments.

There aae 213 orphanages and similar institutions caring for above 13,000 children. There are 90 leper asylums, caring for 5,166 lepers, besides the asylums and homes that care for the untainted children of lepers. In these asylums there are 2,000 lepers who are Christians.

There are 148 mission publishing houses, and their presses issue annually above 10,000,000 copies of various religious books and tracts, the whole comprising in round numbers 365,000,000 of pages. This is a noteworthy and laudable work, seeking, as it does, to give to the nations of the earth a Christian literature. In addition to the above there are 266 periodicals, such as magazines and weeklies, with a circulation of 297,435.

The educational summary presents us with a most interesting and hopeful phase of the work. Including all sorts of universities, colleges, boarding schools, seminaries, day schools, training schools, medical schools, elementary schools and kindergartens, there are 20,407 with nearly 1,050,000 pupils under their instruction. This in itself is a mighty power for good, especially as these schools are kept by Christly people.

One other paragraph must be added to this weighty array of figures. Protestant missions have no more helpful agencies than the Bible societies. There are now 421 translations of the Bible or parts of it. It is estimated that the annual circulation of Bibles is 91,761; of New Testaments, 226741; the number of separate portions, 2,216,964, making a total of 2,535,466.

We ask our readers to believe that in looking into the face of these figures they are taking the gauge of hope for the world's immediate betterment and its future progress and glory.

Bethany Assembly.

The annual encampment meeting of the Bethany Assembly Association will be held on the beautiful grounds of Bethany Park, commencing July 19 and closing August 14.

The grounds, always beautiful, are more beautiful than ever before. The bill of fare provided in the program is richer and better than ever before.

The hotel, cottages, tabernacles, lake, etc., are greatly improved. Half fare will be secured as heretofore. The admission to the grounds are lower than at any similar institution in the United States. The fare at the hotel is lower than at any other encampment in the country.

Rest, recreation, innocent amusement, splendid lectures, Bible study, music, art, preaching by able preachers, model Sunday-schools and a thousand and one attractions will be offered to the Bethany family this year.

The medicinal water from the artesian well is as free as the air. Boating, bathing, fishing and other means of enjoyment are among the attractions the assembly offers.

All the interests of the church will be considered. The State S. S. Association, the State Ministerial Association, the C. W. B. M. Convention, the Y. P. S. C. E. Convention, will be held during the assembly. Of special days there will be Educational, Children's Day, Memorial, Temperance, Democratic, Republican, Prohibitionist, etc., etc.

Concerts, stereopticon lectures, etc., will be interspersed throughout the entire encampment. Ex-President Benjamin Harrison will attend the soldiers' reunion July 19.

A full program and announcement will soon be published in the Christian-Evangelist. Bethany Assembly is the child of the Christian Church. It was authorized and organized by the largest convention of Disciples ever convened in Indiana. It has had on its platform nearly all the leading preachers and educators of the Christian Church.

Many of the most distinguished lecturers in this country have visited the assembly and spoken to thousands of its patrons. The assembly was never in a more prosperous condition, financially and otherwise, than now. We have assurances that the meeting of 1900 will be the greatest one in its history so far.

Literature

"The City for the People," by Professor Frank Parsons, is an important addition to the literature of reform. It is one of the Equity Series, published by Dr. C. F. Taylor, of Philadelphia, who plans the books and carefully supervises the writing of them. This third volume of the series deals with monopoly, public ownership, direct legislation, municipal home rule, proportional representation, the merit system of civil service, preferential voting, the automatic ballot, and the best means of overcoming political corruption. The first four topics are treated with a force and exhaustiveness that makes the book invaluable to any one interested in progressive thought. The evils of private monopoly and the benefits of public ownership are treated with great clearness and completeness. A large number of interesting and important facts relating to watered stock, inflated capital, excessive charges and profits, false accounting, fraud and defiance of law, etc., by monopolistic corporations, are presented in a systematic arrangement, which adds a great deal to the strength and convenience of the book. The chapters on Direct Legislation and Home Rule for Cities also gives evidence of wide research, illuminated by clear, original thought, and the masses of fact and argument are grouped in analytic form which, together with the thorough index, enables the reader to appropriate at once all points in the book relating to the matter in hand at the moment. The book contains 600 pages and is sold for 50c., paper; $1, cloth. "Equity Series," 1520 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia.

During his travels he has been working upon "The Century Library of Music" which The Century Co. will soon begin to publish with Mr. Paderewski as editor-in-chief. It will appear in twenty volumes, containing richly illustrated articles upon the great composers of the world, written by other composers, and with music which will include the cream of piano-forte literature, including Paderewski's entire repertoire, each piece newly fingered, phrased and pedalmarked, according to the latest and highest standards. The Acme.... Smelting and Refining Company

Offers to Investors for a Short Time Unequaled Advantages.

IT IS A WELL-KNOWN FACT

That a custom smelter, properly equipped and operated, is the most certain source of revenue in the mining business.

ITS SUCCESS

Is not contingent upon the output of any one mine or group of mines, but draws its support from a large number of mines in the district where it is located. There are 100 producing and paying mines within a convenient distance of our smelter site and at least 200 more would be developed if there was a custom smelter conveniently located to which ore could be shipped for treatment.

A CUSTOM SMELTER

Bears the same relation to mining that a grist mill does to an agricultural district, with the profits greatly in favor of a custom smelter. The usual net profits of a custom smelter are about $3.00 per ton.

WE HAVE GIVEN YEARS

Of careful study to our plans and know that we are warranted in our undertaking—the erection of a custom smelting plant. Risks which exist in all ordinary mining operations have been carefully eliminated from our plans. We have water, fluxes, an inexhaustible supply of ore and a clear field.

WE CONTRACT NO DEBTS. OUR MOTTO IS: CASH or NOTHING.

A CUSTOM SMELTER HAS THESE ADVANTAGES OVER ALL KINDS OF COMMERCIAL BUSINESS:

1. The product of a smelter invariably sells for cash.
2. The ore smelted is ample security for the expense of smelting.
3. Profits are always large, often reaching 50 per cent. annually on the par value of the stock.
4. Charges for smelting are always collected before the "matte" or refined ore is delivered from the smelter.
5. A custom smelter has no bad debts.
6. A gold smelter's out-put never fluctuates in value.
7. A gold smelter is absolutely independent of any financial stringency, business stagnation, politica disturbance, or other calamity which jeopardizes all ordinary classes of investments.

Our Board of Directors is a Guarantee of Safety to all Investors.

—It is composed of

HON. C. C. COLE, Late Chief Justice of Iowa.
HON. WEBSTER STREET, Chief Justice of Arizona.
HON. EMIL GANZ, President of the National Bank of Arizona.
H. M. CHAPMAN. Secretary of Phoenix and Maricopa County Board of Trade.
N. C. WILSON, Rarge and Successful Merchant.
CALVIN OGBURN, Evangelist.
T. T. POWERS, LL.B.

AMONG OUR STOCKHOLDERS are U S. Senators and Members of Congress, Ex-Governors, High Naval Officers, College Presidents.

YOU ASSUME NO RISK

When investing in the stock of the Acme Smelting and Refining Company.

1. All the conditions are favorable for the erection and operation of a custom smelter.
2. The Board of Directors are all men of high moral and business standing.
3. The officers are all required to furnish bond.

The par value of the stock is $1.00 per share.

For a short time we are offering a limited amount of stock at 50 cents a share—one-half payable in cash, and balance in five equal monthly installments, or where the entire amount is paid in one payment 45 cents a share. Stock is issued full paid and non-assessable. Most respectfully,

DRAKE.

John Hamilton Drake, eldest son of John Adams and Harriett O'Neal Drake, was born in North Carolina July 5, 1828. His parents were both early identified with the Current Reformation and were personal friends of its great leader, Alexander Campbell. In 1830 the family removed to Illinois and in 1837 to Fort Madison, Iowa, where in 1842 John H. became a member of the Christian Church under the ministry of the beloved Aaron Chatterton. In 1846 the family moved to Davis County, Iowa, founding the town of Drakeville and entering a mercantile business. Here our brother was associated in business with his father and brother, Gen. F. M. Drake, until 1866, when he removed to Albia, Monroe County. In 1870 he established the banking business under the firm name of Drake & Elbert, which was changed to the First National Bank in 1871. Bro Drake was the first and only president of this bank while he lived. His brother, ex-Govenor Drake succeeds him. Thursday, May 24, Bro. D ake, accompanied by his wife, made a business trip to Chicago, intending to return Saturday. Sunday morning about 9 o'clock, May 27, he was suddenly called from earth to his heavenly home. His death occurred at the Great Northern Hotel and was produced by severe and repeated hemorrhages from the lungs. The news was a great shock to this entire community and caused universal sorrow. Bro. Drake was married in August, 1850, to Miss Caroline Lockman, of Drakeville, who after nearly fifty years of exceptionally happy married life is left to walk the path of life alone. Of a family of 14 children, of which Bro. Drake was the oldest, five remain, namely, Gen. F. M. Drake, ex-Governor of Iowa, Mrs. G T. Carpenter, Mrs. F. M. Kirkham, Mrs. Henry Kirkham and Mrs. J. B. Lockman. The body was brought to Albia Monday morning, the business men of the city forming an escort from the depot to the family residence, where the funeral was held Wednesday afternoon, May 30. Services were conducted by the writer, assisted by H. A Northcutt and several of the city pastors. Bro. Northcutt, who officiated at the funerals of both Father and Mother Drake, made the principal address, consisting chiefly of a beautiful and deserving tribute to the memory of our beloved brother. As a citizen, business man, friend and Christian gentleman, J. H. Drake possessed the universal esteem and love of his fellow-citizens. After his beloved wife, the church in Albia sustained the greatest loss in his death. He was ever faithful, generous, a wise counselor and a genuine friend to all. It was he who inaugurated our new church enterprise, starting and insuring its success by a subscription of $2,000. We sadly regret that he could not have lived to see the completion of the beautiful edifice into which he put so much of his heart and means. The following well-deserved tribute is from the Albia Republican: "In the death of Mr. Drake, Albia, Monroe County and the state lose a most estimable, public-spirited citizen and Christian gentleman; one in whom each individual loses a staunch friend. We believe it has been truthfully said that the death of no man in the county would have been so universally regretted as his has been. His kind, courteous life, which seemed to be touched with a love for humanity, made every man with whom he came in contact feel that in Mr. Drake he had a friend on whom he could depend. This dependence was never misplaced."

KIRRPATRICK.

William C. Kirkpatrick was born May 29, 1829, in the state of Tennessee. He united with the Christian Church at Mulkeytown, Ill., when quite young, and lived a faithful life until his death, June 3, 1900; age, 71 years, 5 days. Bro. Kirkpatrick was married three times and was the father of six children, only one of which survives him. He leaves a wife, one daughter and two grandchildren, one brother and one sister to mourn their loss, besides many relations and a host of friends. The funeral services were held in the Christian Church at Mulkeytown, June 4, being conducted by the writer. F. M. MORGAN.

PATRICK.

Eliza J. Patrick was born in Columbiana County, Ohio, Jan. 16, 1825. When 15 years old she was baptized by Isaac Errett. In 1844 with her husband she removed to St. Louis, where they were among the pioneers of that city. For many years she was a member of the Central Church, working with a generation now for the most part gone to their reward. While there her husband assumed a prominent place in the city, while she was a leader among the advocates of woman's sufferage. Soon before the death of her husband, William Patrick, which occurred in 1893, they removed to Denver, Colorado, and she identified herself with the Central Church there. Always unselfish and solicitous for the good of others, with her queenly carriage and intellect unclouded to the end, she was a marked figure wherever she went. Such was her zeal that when 75 years of age, a time when others lay down their burdens, she desired to start a mission on the reservation of the Ute Indians and corresponded with several of our missionary boards with this in view. This but illustrates the spirit of her whole life. After a short illness she passed peacefully away at Pueblo, Col., May 28, 1900. Seven children survive her. CLYDE DARSIE.

Arkansas State Convention.

There are in the state of Arkansas 440 Churches of Christ, 37,000 Disciples, 240 Bible-schools, 16,500 scholars, officers and teachers, 33 Y. P. S. C. E., 185 preachers of the gospel, and the value of our church property is $175,000. This state has a population of 1,500,000: 1,100,000 white and 400,000 colored. Since our membership is almost entirely among the white population our people are quite strong in numbers in the state. There are several weaknesses manifest among them. These are: First, a lack of co-operation; second, a lack of means, and third, a lack of activity on the part of many country churches. This is better understood when the fact is known that the average salary of the 185 preachers is not more than $300 per annum. And yet, under all these difficulties and many hardships a splendid work is being done in the state.

The state convention met at Little Rock, a growing city of over 40,000 people. We have one strong church here, a mission church on the North Side and two smaller missions in other parts of the city. There were near 100 delegates in attendance from outside of the city and a large attendance from the local membership

The convention opened on Tuesday evening, June 5th, by an address from the writer, which was well received by those present. On Wednesday morning the convention listened with great interest to the report of E. C. Browning, corresponding secretary. This report showed gratifying results in the work of the state. Brother Browning has been at work as state corresponding secretary for five years and the work has grown stronger and the results have been better year by year. For this reason the present convention indicated great improvements over former ones. Brother Browning has associated within the field as district evangelist workers, Joe W. Donham, W. R. Streator, E. S Allhands, J. W. Jones and others. W. S. Crutcher, Pine Bluff, and T. N. Kinkaid, Hot Springs, are doing local mission work in these towns. Both reported the work in their respective fields in a prosperous condition.

The ladies of the C. W. B. M. had a most excellent session. Mrs. John Fletcher, president and Mrs. F. L. Sutton, corresponding secretary, had their work well in hand. Mrs. Annie C. Nieson read a beautiful poem during the woman's session, which was heartily applauded. The sisters were fortunate in having with them Miss Lura V. Thompson, Carthage, Ill., national organizer, who delivered several instructive and inspiring addresses. There are not many auxiliaries in Arkansas, but those in the state are liberal and doing excellent work.

One session of the convention was devoted to educational matters. After reports and addresses by Mrs. Jennie Beauchamp, E. T. Edmunds and N. M. Ragland, the convention heartily endorsed the move to establish Bible Chair instruction at the State University at Fayetteville. Some means has already been raised for this work and instruction will doubtless begin this coming session. G. W. Leonard, our preacher at Bentonville, also presented a formal offer from the good people of that town and from the board of trustees of a college at Bentonville. The property was said to be worth over $10,000 and free from debt. The convention, however, did not see its way clear to accept this gift, as their constitution did not contemplate anything but purely missionary work.

The general interests were well represented in the convention. L. C. Wilson spoke on Ministerial Aid, Willis F. Jordan on Church Extension, T. F. Weaver on Bible-school Work and C. C. Smith on Home Missions. Brother Smith also delivered two other addresses, which delighted the audiences and were strong and timely. The writer made an appeal for funds for Arkansas missions on the last night and the response was the best and largest ever given in an Arkansas convention.

J. N. Jessup, the pastor of the church at Little Rock, and the congregation honored themselves in their free hospitality and the kindly way in which they treated the delegates to the convention. A hearty vote of thanks was given for the kindly way all were treated. Bro. Jessup is doing a fine work for this people, and as a result the church is harmonious and prosperous. B. R. Davidson makes a fine president of a convention. Dr. J. S. Shibley was elected for the ensuing year. The next convention goes to Ft. Smith, and a large gathering is expected. Taking it all in all, this was far the best Arkansas convention we ever attended. G. A. HOFFMANN.

CURRENT EVENTS.

One of the vast resources of wealth in the Philippine Islands, pointed out in Frank G. Carpenter's series of articles in the Saturday Evening Post, on the "Chances for Young Men in the Philippines," is the large tracts of uncut timber land. There is an enormous amount of land in the Philippines, says Mr. Carpenter, which belonged to the Spanish Government at the time of our taking possession of the islands, and by the treaty of Paris these lands became the property of the United States. These lands include most of the timber land of the islands, and the timber on them is of enormous value. Mahogany there, he says, is as common as pine in the United States. Timber that in the United States would be cut into veneering is there used for boats, bridges, plank roads, floors and other of the commonest purposes. The natives seem to have no idea of the real value of this timber and of these timber lands, and unless this government is exceedingly careful of its possessions, trusts and responsibilities in the Philippine Islands, these valuable timber lands will fall into the hands of manipulators, speculators and greedy wealth-seekers, and the people of those islands and this government will both be robbed of this wealth. But before this happens it is to be hoped that some steps will be taken by this government to prevent such a loss. The people of these islands are entitled to this wealth, whether they are now conscious of its value or not. For greedy capitalists to rob them or this government of it would be an inexcusable crime. Mr. Carpenter does not consider the Philippine Islands an inviting field for young men without capital. They cannot compete with the cheap labor of the natives.

Telegraphs and railways appear to be among the causes of the anti-foreign riots now in progress in China. The development of this feature of modern enterprise in China is described in considerable detail in a recent publication of the Treasury Bureau of Statistics entitled "Commercial China in 1899." It shows that the telegraph system of China included in 1899 about 3,000 miles of line in operation, and that the railroad system included 350 miles of road in active operation and over 3,000 miles projected. The telegraph system connected all of the capitals of the provinces with the national capital, Pekin, and it in turn connected with the Russian trans-Siberian telegraph line and the ocean cables; but it appears from the recent reports that these lines have in many cases been destroyed by the anti-foreign mobs and armies. The railways projected in China, and for which concessions had been granted, contemplated a length of more than 3,000 miles, and it was confidently expected that their construction would bring the trans-Siberian system of Asiatic Russia into touch with the trans-Indian system of British India, which in turn would finally connect with the railway systems of Southern Europe, and thus give to the world an intercontinental belt line stretching northwardly from Northern Europe through Russia and Siberia, thence southwardly through China, thence westwardly again through Burmah, India, Persia and Turkey in Europe to a connection with the railway systems of Southern Europe. What the effect of the hostilities in China with reference to works of this character will be cannot now be foretold. Russia controls a long stretch of territory along her north, and England the territory of British India and Burmah at the southwest. Railway lines existing or projected extend from the territory of both of those countries into the very heart of China, and intermingled with and an important link among these is the great American enterprise, upon which a company had, according to the statements of accepted authorities in railway matters, arranged for an expenditure of $20,000,000 of American funds.

A body of two hundred leading Filipinos of Manila met on the 21st day of June and formulated the following terms upon which they are willing to cease all hostilities with the United States:

1. Amnesty.
2. The return by the Americans to the Filipinos of confiscated property.
3. Employment for the revolutionary generals in the navy and militia when established.
4. The application of the Filipino revenues to succor needy Filipino soldiers.
5. A guarantee to the Filipinos of the exercise of personal rights accorded to Americans by their constitution.
6. Establishment of civil governments at Manila and in the provinces.
7. Exclusion of the friars.

These terms were presented to Gen. MacArthur on the evening of the same day and accepted by him. It is thought by the leaders of the Filipinos that the terms will be acceptable to Aguinaldo, and that he will issue orders in conjunction with American authorities for a cessation of hostilities. Gen. MacArthur immediately issued an amnesty proclamation, offering complete immunity for the past and absolute liberty for the future to all persons in the Philippine Islands engaged in the insurrection against the United States who shall within the period of ninety days renounce the insurrection and acknowledge the sovereignty of the United States in the islands, excepting only such persons who have violated the rules of war during the period of hostilities. The United States also agrees to furnish transportation from Manila to any part of the archipelago for as many as desire to locate elewhere, and to pay thirty pesos to each man who surrenders his rifle in good condition. This is the most hopeful indication of returning peace to these possessions that has yet appeared, and will be a matter of great relief and satisfaction to the Christian people of the world.

Later report says that in his formal answer to the Fillipino leaders' terms of peace General MacArthur rejected the seventh clause, asking for the expulsion of the friars, on the ground that this question rests with the commission of which Judge Taft is the head; but he assured them that all personal rights under the United States Constitution, excepting a trial by jury and the right to bear arms, would be granted.

The situation in China has not improved during the past week. One of the most alarming features of the war is the lack of reliable news from Pekin. The latest word is that the foreign ministers there had been led away by Chinese troops, but nothing is known as to their fate. According to one report, Admiral Seymour, who started for Pekin June 10 with a relief force, has been made a prisoner. It is believed that he was surrounded near Pekin. The first joint effort of the powers to relieve Tien Tsin failed, but a late dispatch from Rear-Admiral Kempff says that the forces entered that city June 23 to the relief of the foreigners there. The loss of life was small, but in previous engagements it is said that the Russian troops alone have lost 450 in killed and wounded, one-third killed. Eight thousand allied troops have now landed at Taku, and others are on their way from every nation. The United States is moving what troops from Manila that can be spared, and others will be sent from Cuba and the states if necessary. There will be no relaxation of effort by any nation until their respective citizens and interests in China are made secure. The real attitude of the government at Pekin toward the Boxers is yet enshrouded in mystery, but the indications of sympathy are strong and of the most suspicious character. A dispatch from Chee Foo, June 25, says that many Americen missionaries, men and women, had arrived there in safety from Pekin and Tien Tsin. There is hope that Li Hung Chang's visit to Pekin will relieve the most threatening features of the situation, because of his personal influence over the Empress Dowager, but in the meantime troops are pouring into China from all of the leading nations of Europe. The authorities at Washington are sparing no pains or expense to get in communication with Vice-Admiral Seymour's column and Pekin, and hope that Admiral Kempff will be successful in obtaining some authentic information within the next few days.

The rioting connected with the St. Louis street car strike has about subsided, but the strikers' warfare with the St. Louis Transit Company continues in the form of a boycott, and a competitive line of wagons established for passengers who will not patronize the Transit Company cars while the strike lasts. The confession of a detective in the employ of the Transit Company, that he had himself placed dynamite where he purported to find it, and for which he was arrested, greatly modifies some of the accusations against the strikers for blowing up cars. The detective says that he placed the dynamite where found to impress the company with his ability and usefulness as a detective, but it leaves one to wonder how much more of that kind of work he might have done for the same purpose. The coroner's inquest on the fatalities of the riot in which three strikers were killed, after being in session daily for ten days, Sunday excepted, returned a seperate verdict for each of the riot victims. The shooting of Edward Thomas, by some unknown member of the posse comitatus, the jury says, was justifiable in that he attempted to interfere with the arrest of some unknown person for breaking a street car window. But in the killing of Arthur E. Burkhardt and George Ryan the jury say they found no justifying cause. The jury failed to identify any deputy who participated in the shooting or any striker who contributed to the disturbance. During the ten days of the inquest almost 200 witnesses were examined, and the testimony was of the most conflicting character. Disturbances last week decreased to the extent that all of the posse but 500 men were dismissed from duty, and after July 4th it is thought that the entire posse will be discharged. The mayor has wisely forbidden the use of fireworks of any description in this city on the "Fourth of July."

The alarming news from China for the past week has quite eclipsed the war movements of Lord Roberts in South Africa. During the week, however, there was a battle at Houingspruit in which the British lost thirty-seven in killed and wounded. The British prisoners captured by the Boers since the British occupation of Pretoria have been taken to Machadodorp. Skirmishing here and there continues between the Boers and the British, with the loss of a position now and then by the Boers, but no decisive engagements have occurred, neither are they likely to occur in the near future. It is the purpose of the Boers to be as troublesome as they can without endangering their men or arms. President Kruger's force is now estimated at 20,000 men, and he is encouraged with the prospect of war between Russia and Japan, expecting England to be compelled to draw her forces from Africa to support Japan. Lord Roberts and Gen. Botha are still exchanging letters, and it is to be hoped that they may soon find a way of honorable settlement for the contending armies.

A terrible accident occurred on the Macon branch of the Southern Railroad near McDonough, Ga., on the night of June 23rd, in which 35 persons perished. A heavy down pour of rain had caused a washout in the road at the crossing of Camp Creek, and into this the train plunged with the result stated. The horror of the accident was greatly augmented by the burning of the wrecked cars. But few passengers aboard the train escaped with their lives and some of these escapes were of the most marvelous character. On Sunday morning another wreck occurred near Green Bay, Wis., in which eight persons were killed and 53 injured. This accident was the collision of a freight and an excursion train five miles south of Green Bay on the Chicago and Northwestern Railroad. The excursionists were bound for the sangerfest in the city named.

The reports of corn and wheat prospects, north and south, are of a very discouraging character. In the north they have lacked rains in which it is estimated that the wheat yield will not reach one-third of the crops of last year. In some of the central and southern states too much rain has greatly injured the wheat and in consequence of these discouraging reports these was an advance in the price of wheat in Chicago last week of over twelve cents.

A NEW DAY OF EDUCATION AMONG US.

There are many indications that we, who have been pleading for nearly a century for the restoration of New Testament Christianity, are coming to a new and deeper sense of our obligation to the cause of Christian education. We have hitherto been so much engaged in evangelistic work that we have neglected the educational side of our movement. Not that education has not always held an important place in our work, but we have allowed our colleges to carry on the work as best they could without adequate endowment and equipment. But, as stated above, signs are not wanting now of an awakening to the demands of our colleges upon us.

In the first place, the subject of education has come to receive recognition in our national conventions, and time is given for the discussion of our educational needs. An educational board has been appointed, and although its operations have been hampered by lack of funds, and perhaps by a lack of proper recognition of its place in our educational plans, nevertheless, the very fact of its appointment shows an increasing appreciation of the importance of this work. A committee appointed at the last convention will make an important recommendation to our next convention, looking to a more aggressive movement along educational lines.

The recent munificent gifts of General Drake to Drake University, followed by the announcement that he has bequeathed a half million dollars to it, is a cloud larger than a man's hand on the horizon, which promises a copious outpour of blessings on our institutions of learning. What General Drake has done for Drake University, other large-hearted men will do for others of our colleges in the not distant future. The success attending the efforts of Hiram College at endowment by the people is another large straw indicating the direction of the wind currents.

Recently, two of our public-spirited citizens of St. Louis gave $3,000.000 to the endowment of Washington University, of this city, an institution to which they had both contributed largely before. It is a day of college endowments. Men of wealth, and of moral vision as well, are putting their thousands into the cause of Christian education. It cannot be that our colleges will fail to receive their share of this munificence toward the cause of Christian culture. It is with a view of helping along this work that the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST this week gives so much of its space to a presentation of the claims of our own colleges and the cause of Christian education. We bespeak for these articles a careful reading and for the institutions whose advantages are herein set forth a due consideration on the part of all our readers. It is due to these schools that they receive the patronage of our sons and daughters, and it is due to them, furthermore, that they be remembered graciously by those who have been blessed with a sufficient amount of wealth to enable them to assist these institutions in their arduous and important work.

One thing is sure: we must be patrons of higher education or take a subordinate place among the religious forces of this country. Our colleges must be better endowed or they will go to the wall. The competition is so fierce between state universities and other endowed institutions, and our own colleges, that we cannot hope to command the patronage of even our own sons and daughters unless we can offer something like equal opportunities and advantages with competing schools. These are facts that cannot be neglected. They stare us in the face. We must meet them bravely, promptly, or we shall suffer the inevitable consequences.

We appeal to our men of wealth to make this matter a subject of prayerful consideration. Shall we be laggards in a work in which others are so zealous? Shall we, who claim that our position gives us vantage-ground in working for the world's redemption, be found neglectful of our duty to the cause of education, without which no religious movement ever has or ever can permanently impress the life and thought of the world? We must look to our business men, who have given their time, talent and energies to business enterprises, for the millions by which our colleges are to be put upon a permanent working basis and able to cope with the demands made upon them. It is to this class of brethren, therefore, that we appeal for the endowment of our institutions of learning.

It is in the power, however, of ministers and others to render substantial aid to our institutions of learning in other ways, and in whatever way we can help along the cause of education we ought to do it. The times demand it. The problems of the age make it necessary. Our position as reformers makes it the more incumbent upon us. Let this coming Lord's day, which is Educational Day, be made the occasion of impressing these facts and duties upon the minds of all our people. This Educational Day is itself a streak of light that heralds a new day of education among us. Let it be used to hasten the coming of that day whose full-orbed splendor will add new triumphs to the kingdom of God on earth.

Hour of Prayer.

OUR NATIVE LAND.

(Psalm 33.)

[Uniform Midweek Prayer-meeting Topic, July 4.]

CENTRAL TRUTH: A nation's strength consists, not in the number of its population, nor in its armament or other means of physical defense, but in its righteousness and its trust in God.

"Breathes there a man with soul so dead,
Who never to himself hath said,
This is my own, my native land?"

So sang Walter Scott, and there are few hearts which do not respond to the sentiment. It is well to be able to say, with Cicero: "I am a citizen of the world," and to feel an interest in every part of the earth. But he is not an ideal citizen who does not feel some special thrill of pride in the land of his birth and in the flag which represents his own country's sovereignty and power. No man loves humanity less for having a special interest in his own family and household.

But there is a true and a false patriotism, just as there is the genuine and the spurious in every article that has any real value. There is a patriotism which swaggers and boasts and bullies, but which is entirely blind to those elements of power which make a nation truly great. There is a patriotism, however, which, while recognizing the faults of native land, can yet say, with another: "With all thy faults I love thee still," and which directs its energies to removing those faults, which weaken and have proved the downfall of nations. Doubtless we have both kinds of patriotism represented in our own land. We believe it is true, however, that there is far less braggadocio and bravado in our patriotism now than formerly, and more disposition to recognize our national weaknesses and blemishes. True patriotism does not magnify its country's faults, on the one hand, nor does it wink at them, on the other.

We have a country magnificent in its territorial extent, marvelous in its diversified interests, unequaled in its wealth and resources and strong in its mountain barriers and coast defenses; but it is not upon any or all of these things that the true American patriot rests his hope for the future greatness of his country. He knows if the United States is to hold its place among the nations of the earth, and to exercise a controlling influence upon the destiny of the world, it can only fulfill this high mission because of the intelligence and virtue of the people.

It is a most suggestive fact that the leading nations of the earth to-day are Christian nations, and the more Christian they are the greater is their power and influence in the world. The United States, Great Britain and Germany would be counted by any one the three mightiest nations of the earth, and it is well known that they are Protestant nations, holding, perhaps, the purest form of Christian faith. Is not this fact a mighty confirmation of the truth of what the psalmist teaches us in this psalm?

Our own national history is not without evidence, striking and clear, that God has chosen this nation for a great purpose in blessing mankind. His presence, manifested in critical periods of our national history, is one proof of that fact. It has often developed that the outcome of our national struggles was different from what had been planned by our national leaders, showing that there is an unseen Hand guiding our national course and leading us on to the fulfillment of a greater destiny than any of us, perhaps, have ever dreamed of.

But what should be the effect of a belief of this kind—the recognition of the divine Hand in our national history? It should certainly be to fill us with the sense of our dependence upon and our obligations to the God of nations. It should lead us to cleanse our political life of all corruption and to enforce righteousness and justice among all the people. In a word, such a faith ought to lead us to order our whole political and national course in such a way as to meet with the divine approval. This is the faith expressed by the psalmist when he says:

"He is our help and our shield,
Because we have trusted in His holy name.
Let thy mercy, O Lord, be upon us,
According as we have hoped in Thee."

He cannot rightly pray for God's mercy upon our nation to any greater degree than we have hoped in Him and have sought to be directed by Him. A true patriotism, therefore, is one that seeks to purify our native land from all unrighteousness, injustice, oppression, political corruption, and to have all its laws, customs and institutions in harmony with the principles of God's government. This involves some very great changes. There is a vast work of moral and social reform to be accomplished before we can feel that God looks with pleasure upon all parts of our national life. But if God is working in and through the nation to accomplish His purposes and is seeking to bring it into greater harmony with His will, we ought to have hope and press forward vigorously all lines of reform.

"Our fathers' God, to Thee,
Author of liberty,
To Thee we sing.
Long may our land be bright
With freedom's holy light;
Protect us by Thy might,
Great God, our King."

PRAYER.

God of our fathers, who didst plant here in this Western world the seed of a great republic, and who hast guided its growth and development through all the critical periods of its history, look in mercy, we pray Thee, upon our native land, upon our free institutions and on the people of this favored nation. Bless all who are in authority in nation and state and help them to exemplify in their lives and acts those principles of righteousness and truth which are well pleasing in Thy sight. Help us as a nation to recognize our sins and to turn away from them before Thou shalt visit upon us the just penalty of Thy violated law. Bless all who are laboring to extend the principles of righteousness, of human brotherhood and of regard for the rights of others in our country, and lead Thou our nation on to the fulfillment of the destiny for which it was intended by Thee. May we be a nation whose God is the Lord and who recognize Thy guiding Hand in all our affairs, to the end that Thy blessing may rest upon us and that we may be a blessing to the world. In Christ's name. Amen!

OUR COLLEGES—I.
The Birth of the Intellect.

N. J. AYLSWORTH.

"Howbeit, that is not first which is spiritual, but that which is natural [animal]; then that which is spiritual." This was spoken of the resurrection, but it is equally true of mental development.

The infant is not moral nor immoral. That element in his character by which he may be either has not yet arisen. Nor is he either a spiritual being or its contrary. He is not a saint nor a sinner. To speak of him as good or bad in either of these senses is as improper as to make such affirmation of a tree. The moral and the spiritual do not come first in the development of character. Later these faculties will arise, and then they can be stifled or called into dominance. In an environment of selfishness the tendency is to stiflement and consequent arrest of development; but the powerful moral and spiritual influences of the gospel may stimulate them to give battle to the lower nature and gain the mastery; and then, linking themselves with the sources of divine strength, they bring about that revolution which we call "conversion" or the "new birth." It is fitly called a "birth," not only because it marks a profound change in character, but because it is the rising in the soul of a new kind of life.

This change is not unnatural. Nature puts into every soul at a particular stage a cry for the higher life, and this cry is a command, which under stimulus of conscience may grow terrible. But it is the soul itself growing terrible against its lower self. No unconverted man has come to himself—reached his higher manhood. The birth of the spiritual is as natural as the birth of the animal.

But all this is true of something quite other than the spiritual nature. Paul might have said: Howbeit, that is not first which is intellectual, but that which is natural (animal); then that which is intellectual. The intellect has not arisen in infancy, nor, except in a shadowy form, in childhood. It is a great mistake to regard childhood as a lesser manhood. The child is not only smaller than the man, but different from him. He is both a greater and a lesser man. In him the senses have arisen in their splendor. They are both acute and passionate. The joy of seeing is never so great as in childhood. There are certain things that the man delights to see; the child feels a rapture in the simple act of seeing. Hearing with the child is itself a delight. He does not care so much what he hears. Any noise will do, and the more better, if he can only drink in sounds. His noise is a nuisance to us, but it would not be if we had his passion for hearing. Our intolerance marks the beginning of the decay of the senses. Their passion is gone and they are fallen to the level of utilities. To whom do confectionery and the good things of the table mean so much as to children? The loss of a piece of gingerbread means nothing to me now; it meant much when I was a child. I am dying away from these pleasures. The sense of comfort and its opposite, pain, mean most to childhood. It is more terrible for a child to suffer a painful operation than for a man. Then, the simple joy of living is greatest in childhood. Childhood is the manhood of the senses. The child-life is the life of the senses. It is the first manhood, and very different from the manhood which is to follow.

In barbarous peoples the life of the senses is carried over into manhood, and the barbarian is, as Kipling say , "half child." It was so also at the dawn of civilization. Homer's poems are not intellectual, and not spiritual, but they are remarkable as the most splendid examples of seeing in all literature. The Greek in that period lived in the senses.

The child's thirst for knowledge amounts to a passion. He is hungry to know and he is always trying to find out, but in a particular way—he asks questions. That means faith. He does not find out by his own efforts, but wants others to tell him, and then he swallows the fact as the young robin swallows the worm—without question. He does not ask for evidence. He believes things as he hears them, just as we believe our dreams. When we dream we are children again, both in "the vision splendid" and in our faith. Childhood is a half-way station between the land of dreams and the dull plains of critical knowledge. The child's whole mental life hangs on faith. Snap this link that binds him to reality, and he is lost. It never occurs to him to ask if father, mother or teacher may not be mistaken. The critical faculty has not yet arisen. The intellect is sleeping in the yet to be. When it awakes we shall have revelation and revolution. It sometimes does not awake. It did not awake in Millet's "Man with the Hoe." It sometimes awakes but enough to see men as trees walking.

Like the spiritual nature the intellect needs its gospel. The little red schoolhouse has changed the face of the world. It is behind all our labor troubles. You cannot make serfs of the nimble-brained. If capital would enslave the worker it must first burn down the schoolhouse. It is written in the book of destiny that in this great war labor will win its rights. "Masters, lords and rulers" are no match for the schoolhouse, and where it dwells labor is noble-browed.

But the intellect does not come to its estate in the common school. The common school touches a giant and makes him flounder; it makes men think, but it does not make them thinkers. It gives power of resistance, but not empire. It makes men intelligent, but not intellectual. The birth of the intellect takes place pre-eminently in the college. The changes which a college course works for a man amount to intellectual conversion. The diploma tells the truth: he is a "Batchelor of Arts," but these arts are intellectual arts. The graduate steps forth as a citizen in the kingdom of intellect. He has the key to all knowledges; he has the training which may make him a thinker. If his father and he have equal natural endowments and the former has had but limited advantages, it is not too much to say that in no small sense they dwell in different worlds. The son has thoughts and troubles and possibilities that belong not to the elder. Of course, men with exceptional abilities may by their natural force reach much of what a college course would bestow; and on the other hand college graduates of inferior ability can never amount to much. Other forms of training may also accomplish much; but the general fact remains that the changes wrought by a college education are enormous. If a child begins school at six, passes on through the high school and then goes to college, the birth of the intellect will take place in college; and this will be for two reasons: that he is at the requisite age, and is subjected to the proper influences of intellectual quickening. And with the rise of this splendid faculty there comes a revolution, and this revolution is fraught with great danger. Does this statement surprise you? Just here lies the danger. A danger seen is a danger shorn. It is to point out this danger and the means of averting it that I write these articles. Alas for the parent who does not know that a revolution comes to his boy in college! Alas for that religious people that knows no more about this matter than that a college education is a good thing! Not too soon can we learn that in handling this question thoughtlessly we are playing with fire. Not too soon can we carry the torch down into the boy's soul and learn what is befalling him at the period of this other birth. We are sailing on new seas. Not before has civilization passed this way. We cannot judge the future by the past, because education with its dangers is a thing of the present. Only by looking beneath the surface and discerning the subtle currents of tendency can we be wise unto the hour.

We shall speak of these things in other articles, but before closing this it will be well to note one further fact.

Fifty years ago there were few who attended college, and in many communities the young man who did so was well-nigh a curiosity. Now a college education is becoming common, and the time is not far distant when it will be almost the rule. In 1950 masses of our young people of the more thrifty classes will go to college. What will this mean? It may not be easy to say. It means now that we are facing a great question, a question of destiny. When the college touches the masses it will be great—and what then? Some surprises may await us.

The principle of co-operation has always existed and been applied between individuals, but since it has arisen to the vast combinations of modern labor it has become one of the mighty forces of the age, holds the destiny of millions of people in its grasp and affects the whole structure of society. Partnership has always existed between individuals, and in this form has been a thing of only personal or local importance, but since it has swelled to the proportions of the modern trust, it has become a monster before which governments tremble, and threatens to revolutionize all business. What is harmless when little may become terrible when great. What higher education will bring when it becomes, not exceptional, but general, it may not be easy to predict; but if it has evils they will become mighty, and if it has dangers they may become world-wide disasters. It is best to take our bearings now. When the oak is grown we may not be able to change it.

CHRISTIAN EDUCATION: ITS NATURE AND VALUE.*

J. H. GARRISON.

Mr. President, teachers, students, patrons and friends of Hiram College: I am delighted to have the privilege of being with you to-day on this historic hill, on what I hope will prove to be an historic occasion. While this is my first visit in person to Hiram, it is not my first visit to you in spirit and in thought. Institutions of learning, like men and like trees, are known by their fruits. I have come in contact with some of the fruits of Hiram College, and the taste thereof has been good, and the fragrance and the nutrition have also been good. I have long since concluded that the tree planted here on Hiram Hill a half century ago, and watered by such men as A. S. Hayden, James A. Garfield, B. A. Hinsdale and a host of other worthy men and women, is a good tree, and one which deserves more and better care from the brotherhood it serves than it has received heretofore. Hiram College has reached the half-century mark in its history, but there is no evidence that it has yet reached the deadline. It has only passed through the period of its childhood and youth and the ailments incidental to such period, and is about entering upon a new era of growth and of power ere it reaches the maturity of its development.

It is not extravagant to say that education is the supreme need of the world, and that to impart this education is the supreme work of life. This broad use of the term education, however, includes in it Jesus Christ as the world's great Teacher, and His divine command, "Go teach," is the charter for the highest education, for the truest culture. Any idea of education that leaves out Christ is vitally defective. It leaves undeveloped the highest ranges of human nature. Christian education is only another name for true education, or for a full and complete education. This is the one reason that justifies the establishment and maintenance of institutions of learning that are distinctively Christian in their aim, methods and results. It were well, then, that this feature of our institutions of learning be made even more pronounced than it often is in many colleges and universities which have been founded by Christian men and with Christian aims.

One of the facts which has loomed up into prominence during the last quarter of a century is that religion is not a mere exotic, something foreign to humanity, which has been brought in to supplement human nature, but that it is an essential and organic part of man's nature. The reason why skeptics, rationalists and agnostics have not succeeded in extirpating religion from the world, as they have sometimes threatened to do, is because it is a part of human nature. "Nature's eternal lesson," says Prof. Fiske, "is the everlasting reality of religion." "The last word of science is God," says President Harris. The clear recognition of this fact is doing much to place religion in a new light before the world. The presidents of our state universities, where the Bible is necessarily ruled out, as a textbook, recognize the defect and the peril which the absence of religious teaching brings to their students, and they are calling to-day from almost every state of the Union for the churches to supply what the state cannot furnish—religious instruction and influence for their pupils. While we do well, as far as possible, to respond to this demand, the fact that it should be made by the leading educators of the country to-day is an eloquent vindication of the wisdom of our fathers in establishing institutions of learning distinctively religious in their aim and character.

What is the basic principle for a Christian education, and what do we mean by the phrase? The true aim of life, in the light of Christian revelation, is character-building. The highest type of character which we know anything about is that of Jesus Christ. Whether we worship Him as "God manifest in the flesh," or whether we revere him simply as the noblest and most perfect type of life that has ever found expression in human form, in either case He becomes the true pattern after which our lives are to be formed if we are to aim after the highest and the best. True culture must, therefore, have for its object the fashioning of the soul into the likeness of Jesus Christ. Why should education aim at any ideal below that? This, then, is what we mean by Christian education. It is that culture which develops all our God-given faculties, and which has for its lofty aim the transfiguration of character into the moral image of the one perfect and ideal Man. This involves the development of the intellect, the culture of the conscience, the strengthening of the will, the quickening of the imagination, the purifying of the heart and the cultivation of all those graces which shine so conspicuously in the life of Jesus. This is Christian education, and the school that succeeds best in this sublime work has the best title to the name of a Christian school and has the highest claim upon the sympathy and support of Christian men.

It is generally recognized that the cultivation of the heart and the formation of a moral character like that of Christ are true aims of Christian education, but it is not so generally understood that the same principle that makes it obligatory on the church to provide for this moral and spiritual development requires us also to provide for the highest possible intellectual development in connection therewith. We cannot separate between the God of nature and the God of revelation; we cannot dissect human nature and disparage the intellect while we extol the heart. God is one, whether you study Him in nature or in grace, and man is one, whether you touch his intellect or his moral faculties. The true plea for Christian education is a plea for the highest possible learning, for the deepest and broadest culture of the whole man. In other words, it is a plea for making the most out of our human nature, and no man is at his best until every part of that nature has received all the culture and development of which it is capable. I am led to emphasize this fact because it is sometimes felt that beyond certain limits and courses of study it is not important that our young men and women should go. It is even argued sometimes that there is more or less danger associated with the higher ranges of learning. But there is danger in all learning if it be not accompanied with the development of the moral and spiritual nature, and the same argument that is urged against the highest learning may be as consistently urged against any learning whatever.

In education, as in Christian life, we cannot have too high an ideal. We cannot hope to keep pace with the growing knowledge of the world, and to exert the influence upon the religious thought and life of mankind which we are under obligations to do, as a body of religious reformers, unless our young men and women shall have equal educational advantages with those offered to others. We ought not to be content until we have institutions of learning which offer equal facilities for higher learning with other institutions. But, until the time when this ideal shall be reached, our colleges should seek to do their work so thoroughly as to create in the minds and hearts of their students a thirst for a still deeper draught from the Pierean Spring. Other things being equal, that college has given best proof of its educational power which sends the largest number of its students to sources of learning which it cannot itself offer. From those who avail themselves of these higher advantages will come the real and successful advocacy of better endowed and better equipped institutions than we now have.

I do not mean by this that all our colleges should become universities. This would be undesirable even if it were practicable. I am a profound believer in the value of the college, even of the smaller college. I can endorse most heartily the words of Dr. Henry Hopkins who, speaking recently on "The Place and Function of Smaller Col-eges," says: "It is a good time to declare and insist that capital exists for the sake of producing men, and that men do not exist for the sake of producing capital. It is a good time to declare and insist that the country is the best place in which to rear strong and beautiful men and women, and that the smaller towns, associated at once with country life and social advantages, are to be, as in the past, the seed-plant for the highest human product, and that for the sake of the great cities and for the nation's sake, the country church and the village life must be fostered. It is also especially fitting and needful that at this time the rightful claim of the smaller colleges should be recognized, and the essential nature of their place and service be vindicated.

"It is a good time to suggest to the man or to the syndicate of men meditating the bestowment of new imperial gifts upon education, that $20,000,000 given to twenty widely separated colleges, would be a better investment for the kingdom of God and for the republic than $20,000,000 given to any one institution. There are colleges and colleges. I speak only of those already existing in nearly every state, with ample field, definite purpose, disinterested aim, high ideals, improving standard, that are nobly manned, dignified in character, and though often struggling with poverty, worthy to be recognized in the great national university guild."

Our colleges need large endowment, not to make them universities, but to make them more efficient colleges, and therefore better fitted to promote the work of higher education. To quote Dr. Hopkins again: "In the final unification and correlation of our complex educational machinery in this country it is believed that the university will cease to be a college and a university at the same time, and the college will be content to be a college. That the university will, in the realization of immense co-operative possibilities, increasingly draw to itself the technical and professional schools, while the colleges will come to be as separated from the universities as the secondary schools are from the fully developed college. Free from the domination of both church and state, with an organic capacity for change, fully endowed, perfectly equipped, and superbly manned, true to the original aim and spirit of Christian liberal education, the college will continue, let us hope, to hold a place of honor and power, and to send to the universities a continual stream of individualized, ennobled, aspiring men."

When one faces the problems which confront our present civilization—problems in religion, problems in sociology, problems in statecraft, problems in every department of human activity and effort—he cannot fail to realize the need for the highest possible intellectual and spiritual culture. No previous age of the world has made greater demands for men of the highest mold of character, and of the best possible intellectual equipment, than the age in which we live. On every hand we see and feel the need of such men. When our colleges and universities shall send forth from their portals men and women capable of grappling with these great problems, and with "the enthusiasm of humanity" urging them on, the world will recognize its indebtedness to such colleges, and they shall not want for means to carry on their work. But if richly endowed universities send out polished icebergs, cold, intellectual, selfish literary recluses, who use their learning as a private luxury instead of regarding it as a public trust, men will question the wisdom of investing their wealth in institutions that turn out such products. Why should not a Christian college be a recuiting station for every noble and true reform—a school of preparation, from which will go out men with lofty ideals, with noble ardor, and with a fixed purpose of devoting their culture, their learning and their disciplined powers to the emancipation of the human race from ignorance, superstition and sin? This would be our idea of a Christian college or university, and in so far as they fall short of this ideal they seem, to me at least, to fall short of their names and mission.

Is not this one of the chief problems to be solved by our higher institutions of learning, namely: How to give the highest possible development to all the powers and capacities of the student without at the same time separating him from the very people who stand most in need of his wider culture and disciplined powers and whom it is his duty to serve? I am sure that you will agree with me that there is but one possible solution of this problem, and that is, keeping Christ to the front, as the highest ideal of life, and seeking to imbue the students with His spirit and with His aim in life. Given the spirit of Jesus Christ and his idea of the meaning and significance of life, then the deeper, the broader the culture which can be given to students, the better fitted will they be for accomplishing their mission in the world. Denying, as we have done in this country, the union of church and state, we do hold most tenaciously to the union of religion and education as the true method of bringing our whole national, social and individual life under the control and transforming power of divine ideals. Why should not a Christian college intensify the religious life of its students as well as broaden their intellectual life?

To recur again to the demands of the age in which we live for the highest education, let me call your attention to the fact that this is a time of re-examination of the old foundations, of the testing of ancient systems, literatures and religions in the crucible of the severest criticism. Modern discoveries in archæology have disentombed the buried ages of the past, and their institutions, their customs, their laws, their religions are laid under tribute and made to throw what light they can upon the history of the past and upon the civilization of the present time. The world—socially, religiously, and in many places politically—is undergoing reconstruction. Everywhere there is a feeling that the world is about to take an advanced step and to enter upon a new and a higher order of life. But these transition periods are periods of danger, and such times demand men of the finest intellectual and moral fiber to grapple successfully with the great problems which they raise. If religious truth stands related to all other truths; if this is, indeed, a universe in which one God rules by universal laws, and all its parts stand related to each other in one universal whole, then our vantage ground as religious reformers ought to avail us in seeking a solution of all those social, industrial and governmental problems which affect the welfare of man. We ought to be able to furnish men of the highest order of statesmanship, of the broadest views of political science, of the highest ideal of social and political ethics; sociologists, profoundly wise in the knowledge of human relationships and social obligations; scientists, whose knowledge of God's ways in the material world is supplemented, directed and inspired by a profound faith in Him through whom and for whom all things were created, and in whom all things consist. Need we say that this calls for the severest mental discipline and the highest possible intellectual development as well as the cultivation of the moral and religious natures? Not to furnish such equipment for our young men and women is, therefore, not only to do injustice to the cause we plead, but to the world which might be helped onward to a truer type of civilization by the contributions which we might have made to its advancement.

If this fact be sufficiently apparent—and it seems to me that the very statement of it should suffice to make it apparent—what obligation does it impose upon the brotherhood, committed by the very nature of its plea to the highest religious, social and political ideals? The answer is clear: It imposes upon us the obligation of providing for our young men and women in our colleges and universities the best opportunities which this age can furnish for an all-sided, faith-grounded and Christ-directed culture. This, I scarcely need to say, involves the endowment of our institutions of learning to a degree that many of us have not yet realized. The time has fully come when we must direct the channels of our liberality towards our colleges or suffer the inevitable consequences. No religious body that neglects, not simply the higher education, but the highest education, can long hold its place among the leading forces which are controlling the religious thought and life of the world. We may use the educational advantages provided by others, to a limited degree, and it is well that a few can do this; but the many will not. We cannot, therefore, evade the responsibility of providing such educational benefits for our young men and women—an obligation growing out of the very nature of the position we have assumed before the world—without serious detriment to ourselves and to the great interests that have been committed to our hands. We do not think, therefore, that the president of this institution was extravagant when he called this question, recently, "the overshadowing issue." The shadow will deepen the longer we postpone the performance of an obligation that has been too long neglected.

None of us, I think, despises "the day of small things" in connection with our colleges. We recognize the value of the work which they have accomplished under sore limitations, and we honor the men who, at great sacrifice, have done this work. But has not the day of large things now come? Have we not the wealth, the numbers, the Christian enterprise to undertake and accomplish larger things educationally than we have ever done before? The time seems to be ripe for it. At no period in the past have gifts to colleges and higher institutions of learning been on a more munificent scale than within the past few years. Harvard, Yale, Cornell, Johns Hopkins, Leland Stanford, the University of Chicago and a host of other less widely known institutions have received large and generous gifts from the friends of higher education. Washington University in St. Louis recently received a gift of $3,000,000 from two public-spirited citizens, who had previously given largely for the buildings and the endowment fund of the institution. Surely, we have other men of wealth, who are also men of moral vision, who can see the needs of the hour, who can hear the clarion calls for educated men and women for the high places in the church and state, who will be willing to consecrate part of that wealth, which God has entrusted to their care, to the endowment of such institutions of learning as have given ample proof of their ability to supply the kind of culture which the age demands.

For every great crisis in the history of the church and of the nation God has raised up men who have heard His call and who have risen grandly to the exigencies of the hour. It can scarcely be doubted that we are nearing if we have not already reached a crisis in our educational affairs. We must either go forward and take our proper place at the front as one of the great educational forces working for the world's regeneration, or we must be content to take our place in the rear and become an unimportant factor in molding the life and the destiny of our nation and of the world. It is to the credit of Hiram College that it has clearly perceived this crisis and has made a worthy effort to meet it. We can but believe that the success achieved is but a prophecy of greater things to be realized in the not distant future. We cannot act too promptly in a matter of so much importance. Modern life is too intense, the demands of the age are too urgent, to admit of delay.

This is a time that demands heroes, not on the battlefield alone, but heroes of faith; men who, under the sway of unseen forces, rise to deeds of noble self-sacrifice and link their names with the immortals; men who, obedient to the heavenly vision which faith discerns, make their lives sublime by consecrating them to high and worthy ends; men who have the spiritual perception to see that a man's life consisteth, not in the abundance of the things he possesses, but in the good he may do for his fellowmen, in lifting them up from ignorance and moral degredation into the light and love of God. God, give us such men—Thy best gifts to a needy world!

Standing here to-day on the heights of this jubilee occasion, and looking back over the history of Hiram, I see among the noble and consecrated men and women who have gone forth from its portals to bless the world one stalwart figure who, catching the religious spirit and aim of Hiram, drank also at the fount of learning at an Eastern college, and moved sublimely on up the hill of fame by the force of his mental and moral culture, until he stood on its very summit, the focus of all eyes, the admiration of the whole world. In the high character, in the noble achivements, in the enduring fame of the immortal Garfield, Hiram College is entitled to its share and to a place in the nation's gratitude.

Animated by the great memories of the past, and stirred by the great hopes of the future, let the friends of Hiram College rally around her banner, and by deeds of lofty devotion and by sacrifices worthy of her past, send her forth toward her centennial celebration better equipped to accomplish her high and beneficent mission in the elevation of the race.

SHALL WE HAVE A CO-OPERATIVE EDUCATIONAL WORK?

This is to be the leading question before the Disciples of Christ this year, to be decided at the Kansas City convention. Brethren, the Board of Education wish to ascertain the will of the people. Let it be discussed in our papers. Let us hear the pros and cons. Let no brother hesitate to speak if he is against, though let all be done in the spirit of true brotherliness. The status of the case is as follows: The Board of Education was created in 1894. Because it was not provided at that time with the natural means of subsistence for such a board, viz., a traveling secretary, a day for offerings in the churches and adequate time in the conventions, it has not been able to accomplish any marked or permanent work. For the past two years its members, who consist of nine leading men from nine leading educational institutions, have been pressing their claims to a parity of rights and privileges with all the other missionary and benevelont boards and societies. At Chattanooga an Educational Day (the first Lord's day in July) was appointed, and a session in the national and state conventions was recommended to be given to this cause. At Cincinnati the board asked for a secretary, as a completion of the former good gifts. This recommendation, reads as follows:

"1. That the Acting Board of the American Christian Missionary Society, in conjunction with the Board of Education, put in the field a General Secretary of Education, who shall organize and lead our forces for the support and endowment of our colleges."

It was referred to a committee consisting of W. F. Richardson, T. P. Haley, Geo. H. Combs, C. M. Chilton, Mrs. Louise F. Kelly, to report in one year. At the Congress of Disciples, Indianapolis, F. D. Power made a great address on education, in which he advocated the organization of an American Christian Educational Society. The committee has held several meetings and soon will be ready to make known for public consideration a provisional report.

From the above sketch it can easily be seen that there are three possible solutions to the problem:

(1) The abolition of the Board of Education and return to absolute individualism in our educational efforts.

(2) The placing an educational secretary alongside the Smiths (B. L. and C. C.) as one of the regular representatives of the A. C. M. S. to foster especially the college interests among our people.

(3) The organization of a separate general society co-ordinate with the A. C. M. S., F. C. M. S. and C. W. B. M. and having equal rights and privileges with them, though independent throughout. If such an organization is to be effected it ought to be accomplished at Kansas City this fall. As was said in beginning, the Board of Education wants to know. It has no other purpose than to serve and lead in the work committed to its care. Let there be a free, frank, full discussion.

HIRAM VAN KIRK,
Secretary of Board of Education.

BUTLER COLLEGE.

IRVINGTON, INDIANAPOLIS, INDIANA.

1. The location of the college is all but ideal. Irvington is the most beautiful suburb of Indianapolis—not a saloon in town. The platform of Irvington Station Pennsylvania, is one hundred and fifty feet about the platform of Union Station, Indianapolis, by actual measurement, making it an exceedingly healthful location. The sixteen railroads centering in Union Station, Indianapolis, and the electric cars departing every seven minutes for Irvington, make the college easily and readily accessible from all points of the compass.

2. The plant is valued at 150,000; this includes buildings and real estate.

3. The actual interest-bearing endowment aggregates $250,000.

4. Her grade of work is equal to that of the best schools in the land, as is shown by Butler College's affiliation with the University of Chicago.

Her B. A. degree is practically equivalent to that of the University of Chicago, Yale University or Harvard University.

5. The college stands for what Pres. Dwight termed "broad-minded and fair-minded," believing that the God of truth cannot suffer by candid inquiry into all truth.

The spirit of Butler is neither partisan nor provincial, but candid, holding to the best things of the past and open to the best things of the future.

6. Her professors are all university trained men, with special training for their specific work. This being the day of the specialist, Butler's directors recognized the fact and governed themselves accordingly in choosing the faculty.

7. "The Bible College" works in perfect accord with Butler College, although separately organized and controlled by a different board of trustees.

8. The religious spirit is normal and pervasive, all organized Christian work being represented and receiving cordial treatment from the management.

The willing student can find the best of opportunities in Butler College and her library and the 100,000 volumes of city library for a thorough training—equal to that given by the highest grade colleges in the land.

9. The needs of a growing college (and none other is desired) are like the needs of a growing child, perennial, but that some need is best evidence of fitness for receiving its satisfaction. The chairs of Physics, History and Political Science are in special need of endowment. The Bible College has $25,000 promised on condition that an additional $75,000 be raised.

Shall such an efficient servant of the people cry in vain to a body possessed of such wealth as the Disciples of Christ at their very doors?

Cicero said anybody could get a monument of marble, but that he wanted to live in the hearts of his people. Where can a man build so enduring a monument as the endowment of an educational institution by which the highest ideals are made a part of countless lives to go on multiplying the benefactor forever. May the day speedily come when men of large means will prize such living monuments more highly than the cold, lifeless block of stone that faces forever toward death.

Would that they might build "lively stones" into a temple of learning, that shall ever face toward the sunrise and not to the sunset. JOHN MCKEE.

KANSAS CHRISTIAN COLLEGE.

This institution was established by the Churches of Christ in Central and Southern Kansas in February, 1899, following the gift of a beautiful and commodious building from the citizens of Harper. Under the control of a full and competent faculty it has just closed successfully its first session and will begin its next on September 4, 1900. It is situated in a beautiful agricultural region in Southern Kansas, surrounded by an intelligent citizenship where lands are reasonable in price and living cheap.

Everything betokens a prosperous career for this young and vigorous college, and under the control of men and women of culture and scholarship, some of whom have been engaged in educational work in the colleges of the brotherhood for many years, there is reason to believe that it will take high rank among our institutions of learning. A. P. ATEN.

KENTUCKY UNIVERSITY.

Elder Walter Scott, president, four or five professors and a handful of students made up the personnel of the earliest college established by the Disciples when, on Nov. 14, 1836, Bacon College began her first session in a dwelling-house in Georgetown, Ky. Seventy-one professors and other instructors, 1,029 students distributed among five colleges and an endowment and plant what are together worth more than half a million, are what the forthcoming catalogue of Kentucky University will show. The thread that connects the long history of this institution of learning is the useful and devoted life of former President Henry H. White. Drawn to Bacon College in 1838 from the seat of Yale University, which did not then afford instruction in civil engineering, he was a matriculate in the presidency of Elder David S. Burnet. Elected professor in 1839, in which year the college was removed to Harrodsburg, Ky., he served under Presidents Samuel Hatch and James Shannon until the suspension of the institution in 1850. When it was again opened Sept. 19, in 1859, Professor White again had the chair of Mathematics and Astronomy. In this department he taught through the administrations of President Robert Milligan and after the removal to Lexington, in 1865, through that of Regent John B. Bowman until, in 1893, impaired vision necessitated his withdrawal from the chair he had so long honored. For two years after the abolition of the office of regent he was president of the university. This office he resigned voluntarily in 1880. Through almost the whole of President Chas. Louis Loos' long administration of seventeen years, through the whole of President R. Lin Cave's administration and until now he has filled the office of treasurer, to which the board of curators has just re-elected him. The names of John T. Johnson, Philip S. Fall, James Challen and John Allen Gano among the incorporators who elected him, and of Robert Richardson, Lewis L. Pinkerton, Robert Graham and John W. McGarvey among the professors who labored with him give more fullness to this outline of the history of the university.

"Two-thirds of the board of curators," says the charter of Kentucky University, "shall always be members of the Christian Church." The five colleges are all established in Lexington except the Medical Department, which enjoys the advantges of the much larger city of Louisville. The faculties, which have just been strengthened by the addition of Professor S. M. Jefferson, of California, are made up of earnest, devoted and God-fearing men. The Bible is a text-book, not only in the College of the Bible, but also in the College of Liberal Arts and in the Normal College. A religious atmosphere pervades the Commercial College also. Students come from nearly all parts of the English-speaking world. The influence of the College of the Bible brings them even from Turkey, Armenia and Japan. More than six hundred graduates, with academic and professional degrees, nearly four hundred more of the College of the Bible, which confers no degree, besides more than five thousand of the Commercial College and about a hundred books written by its professors, curators and former students—these are the visible fruit that this tree of learning has borne in forty years. The board and its executive committee are seeking in every proper way to make the university more and more deserving of the confidence, the patronage and the liberality of those who should be its friends. The prospect is encouraging. If the brotherhood of Kentucky and the South will but appreciate the importance of this great educational interest and give it the endowment that it needs to enable it to meet pressing needs and great opportunities, Kentucky University can do a work that will realize the anxious hopes and the high aims of those who long ago and with many prayers founded it on God's Word.

THE COLLEGE OF THE BIBLE.

The distinctive feature of this college is its extensive courses in the English Bible. All the historical books of both Testaments are carefully studied, sentence by sentence, and large portions of all are committed to memory. This is held to be the ground work of a preacher's education, and it requires daily recitations for three and a half years. In connection with it the historical matter contained in the other books is also gathered up and interwoven chronolgically with the facts of the formal history. As a result the student acquires, not only the history of the Hebrews throughout their whole career, but also a distinct conception of every individual book and of its place in the scheme of revelation.

In addition to this historical study the student is led through a careful and minute exegesis of many of the apostolic epistles and some of the most important books of the prophets. It is believed that in no other institution is so thorough and extensive a course of instruction in the Bible required; and to this more than to anything else is ascribed the remarkable success and efficiency which almost invariably attend the labors of our graduates.

This extensive course in historical and exegetical study of the Bible is supplemented by a year's course of daily lectures and recitations in Biblical Criticism, in which both Textual and Higher Criticism are made familiar in connection with the principal books of both the Old Testament and the New. This is a course rarely pursued in such institutions except by the advocates of destructive criticism.

In addition to these distinctive features the courses of study include Homiletics, Church History and the others usually found in schools for the education of preachers. The connection of the college with the other colleges of Kentucky University opens to its students free access to all branches of learning which any may wish to prosecute with their biblical courses. Nearly all Bible students who have not already acquired the degree of A. B. take advantage of this opportunity to some extent; and some of them manage to graduate in the College of the Bible at the same time.

CHRISTIAN UNIVERSITY, CANTON, MO.

If the modern idea of a university is not seen or equaled by this institution, it must be remembered that "Christian University" is its name. In 1851, when the institution was founded, they gave it a name as my parents did with my clothing—I was given room for growth. If nothing else could be said for the location, it can be said that it is beautiful for situation, like Jerusalem and Tirza. The grand old Corinthian building stands on a hill a hundred feet above the beautiful valley below. Near by is an artesian well, sending high into the air mineral waters which are for the healing of the people. You who are afflicted with catarrh, come ye to these waters and be healed! Next to the view from the eastern end of Mt. Carmel, this sight is the most enchanting I have ever seen. The beautiful village at the foot of this hill of science is a model educational town. The people there have been collected, for the most part, because of the opportunities for Christian education. A people believing in the Christ and thirsting for knowledge make any place delightful as a home for young people who desire to get knowledge. The morals of the place are exceptionally good. If one has to send away his children to be educated, it is a good thing to know that they are not going to be exposed to all kinds of immorality and vice. The churches there are in beautiful peace with each other, and all strive together for the advancement of knowledge, especially that of Christ.

During nearly fifty years, that have passed since the foundation for this temple of knowledge was laid under the direction of the beloved D. Pat Henderson, 6,150 have matriculated. Of this number 300 became full graduates before leaving the institution. Preachers who have graduated in full course, or who have been well qualified for the ministry of the Word, there have been 500, and by their hands at least 100,000 persons have been baptized into Christ. During the year that has just closed there were 59 young men preparing for the ministry of the Word. Some 20 or 25 of these preached more or less during the session, and there were 700 conversions by their ministry during that time. If any other institution in the United States can equal this showing I should be delighted to receive the statement. This great result is not wonderful, however, for the young men attending there are taught the gospel of Christ and how to preach it so as to reach the people.

The whole number enrolled during the last year was 179. Besides this there was a correspondence course conducted, and in that there were enrolled 193. Many of these are so conditioned that they cannot attend a college or university to get an education, but in this way they are becoming competent teachers of the Word, and thousands are going to be brought into the kingdom of Christ by their efforts. While we need endowment and need it badly for this institution, it should be said that it has a beautiful and well-arranged building for work, competent to accommodate 500 students, with a number of buildings for boarding young ladies, about $20,000 of endowment, $17,000 of which is now interest-bearing and is free from debt; $7,500 have been added during the year to the endowment, and many men are just coming to see that it is the thing to do to furnish this college the means for the work which it will then be able to accomplish. I do not know of another place where students can board as well for the same money.

The classic, scientific, literary, ministerial, business, musical and oratorical courses are full and complete. I hear it expressed on all hands by those who know, that the faculty for the coming year is one of the best in the history of Christian University. The school will probably be much larger than for many years past, and yet no room will be so crowded that students shall fail in any way of receiving the fullest possible attention and assistance. In some of the large schools of the country the rooms are too full and students receive but little assistance and scarcely recite once a week. Such conditions cannot conduce to thoroughness.

It is the intention of the faculty and board of curators to cause this institution to impose honor on all its graduates. And it is the wish, therefore, to get the names of all who have received diplomas. Send the name, post office address and present business to J. W. Hardy, Chancellor, Canton, Mo. We want to see you all on that grand old hill next fall when the university opens. You have done grandly in the past and the institution wants to honor you for it.

It is the duty of the brethren in the state of Missouri to patronize their own colleges. They are as good as others, and the truth taught in these is what they want. Of course, they are not all they ought to be, but by your help they will be. Our own schools in this state are not matriculating one fourth of the children that go from our own homes for the purpose of getting knowledge. That is not because they are inferior to the schools they attend. It is believed that our people do not know what we have to offer them, and it is on that account that we are trying to tell them of Christian University. With the help of those who are able Christian University will become an institution of great power for good. I do not know of any other place where money can be better used for the glory of God and the uplift of the race. Come to the rescue, then, not because the institution will die without your help, but because it is your Christian duty to help, and help now. Help with your thousands, with your hundreds, your fifties, your tens, your dollars, your students, your influence, your good words. All will help, all will be appreciated.

EDUCATIONAL OUTLOOK FROM DES MOINES.

Commencement Day with Drake University has come and gone, displaying the vigor of a useful past, and the enthusiasm of a hopeful future; but what definite advance will be made in maintaining and exalting the standards of education among us is yet to be shown. This has been a magnificent year for Drake University; the old debt nearly paid, the new chapel dedicated, an additional endowment of $2,500 added to the Bible College and the serious attention of the churches, alumni and business men through the state converted to its interests, so that it is not at all discouraging to face a few sobering considerations: (1) There is no school in the brotherhood, much less in these Northwestern prairie states, that equals Drake University in its vigorous vitality, its large efficiency and its propitious future. (2) Yet Drake University itself cannot maintain in scope and equipment the school standards of the average state university. (3) The justification of our religious plea is such sense and spirit in handling the words of God as only a broad and liberal education in the things of God can give. We thus see that in the face of our tremendous doctrinal proposals our educational accomplishments have been pitifully incoherent. Our young preachers are not afforded, by us, as good intellectual equipment and training as the country at large has, such as—above suspicion—respects the educated common sense of American audiences, and does not trifle with the Word we propose so rightly to divide.

The situation justifies the sentiment of General Drake as he handed over the keys of the new chapel—in substance, "Get down to business." There is occasion for the the sternest deliberation; and there is no time for ostentation and vapid enthusiasm. The probabilities of a creditable solution are good. Kansas, Nebraska, Minnesota and Iowa have learned lessons in educational speculation that may prove salutary. The "boom" temperament of our religious commonwealth is merging into a spirit that bodes substantial, indomitable success. In temporal things the people have been never so prosperous; the Lord is giving a sufficiency of wealth to meet this tremendous need of higher education. And men of large possessions are already turning their gifts into this cause.

But two principles need to be added in order to make university education in the brotherhood a success, and the decade still holds them in reserve: (1) The enlistment of our churches in supporting their schools; (2) an unselfish, sensible co-operation, that will permit the concentration of endowment on a few schools and command at the least one genuinely first-class university in the brotherhood.

Facts About China. This is a new work by Wm. Remfrey Hunt, of our mission station at Chu Cheo, China. It is a neat pamphlet, full of facts about the Chinese Empire—its people, its customs, its religions, its needs and the mission work there. The price is only 25 cts.

Our Budget.

—Educational number.

—Colleges for the people means education for the masses.

—Education for the masses means a higher civilization.

—Christian colleges mean a higher Christian civilization.

—Increasing the knowledge of the gospel increases the demand for Christian colleges.

—Increasing the endowment of our colleges will greatly increase their usefulness in the evangelization of the world.

—We have been compelled to hold over much important correspondence to make room for our colleges in this number.

—Look out for our Jubilee number of Christian colleges to appear July 12. See fuller announcement in another column.

—We are glad to announce that the results of the Hiram College Jubilee Endowment movement approximates $230,000. A part will become immediately available, and the remainder will be distributed through a period of five years. This will be encouraging news, not only to the friends of Hiram College, but to all of our colleges and their friends. It means that a new interest in our educational institutions is awakening.

—The gain in offerings on Children's Day for the week ending June 21st, over that of the corresponding week last year was $1,053.78. The total offering for the week was $9,742.50.

—Edwin H. Spring, of Gloucester, England, writes that Dr. Willett has been staying with him for a few days. He writes: "I was pleased to see in the last number of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST for March, in your Easy Chair, that you had become a convert to the 'two meals a day.' I am very well pleased, indeed, about this, because your eyes will be opened to the necessity of 'Diet and Health Reform.'" We shall have Brother Spring tell us something about this Diet and Health Reform, for we are sure we need instructions on this subject, as on many others.

—Dr. Harvey Moore, a noted occulist of this city, has just been appointed Eye Surgeon for the Missouri School for the Blind, by the governor of the state. Dr. Moore but recently came to this city from Atlanta, but he is rapidly coming into prominence as a successful specialist in eye surgery and treatment. It is known that Bro. Calvin, now of Denver, and other of our brethren owe their present sight to the skill of Dr. Moore. We feel that while the appointment is complimentary to Dr. Moore the governor has acted most wisely in his selection for the responsible position named. Dr. Moore will have the care of the eyes of all the inmates of this school, in this city, and hopes by proper treatment to restore to some of them their sight.

—The Moniteau County Herald, California, Mo., June 15, contains an excellent illustrated report of the Missouri Bible-school and C. E. Convention, recently held in that city. Such courtesies are not without wide and deep appreciation. The Moniteau Herald evidently has a high conception of secular journalism, and we wish it prosperity.

—Prof. J. Fraise Richard, of Washington, D. C., sends us a few new subscribers and writes: "May the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST grow and prosper. It is a superior paper in every sense of the term and should have one hundred thousand subscribers and five hundred thousand readers every week. Why not?" We have not that many. Will not our friends and readers write to the Circulation Department and tell us why, in their judgment, we have not and how we can have?

—The excellency of literary merit and spirit of the Daughters College Record has been well maintained throughout the year just closed. The group picture of the graduating class of fifteen in number for June would be an ornament in any of the high-grade magazines. Success to Daughters College, its faithful president, its graduating class and to all its future students.

—Christian College Chronicle always presents a fine exhibit of editorial taste and mechanical excellence. Only a college in the most prosperous state and under most excellent drill can produce such a journal. Every number is a fine advertisement for Christian College.

—The Drury Mirror, organ of Drury College, Springfield, Mo., is a well-conducted college magazine. The 1900 commencement number is finely illustrated with college buildings, classes and teams.

—Central Christian College Catalogue for 1900-1901 is prophetic of an era of expansion for that institution of learning, as is also the election of J. W. Ellis, A. M., Ph. D., to its presidency. This catalogue is the eighth one issued by this college and presents an institution well equipped for good work. The faculty has been enlarged and strengthened, and the courses of study arranged to meet the various demands of this practical age. Central Christian College is well located and worthy of a large patronage, north, south, east and west of where it stands.

—In a certain battle a soldier was seen to fall, and on being picked up it was found that he was simply stunned There was a bullet hole through his clothing, but no blood could be found. Upon examination it was found that the bullet had lodged in a Bible which was in his inside pocket, and which had therefore saved his life. This is not the first time the Bible has saved a person's life. Many are being saved by it every day. The Bible is the textbook of the Sunday-school, and about thirty millions of people throughout the world are engaged in the study of the Word. Thousands and thousands are being saved every year through the study of the Book. The Sunday-school has done more to popularize the Bible and to increase its circulation than any other agency in the world. The Bible is printed in more sizes and langueges and more copies are sold than any other book published.

—The National Association of Elocutionists met in St. Louis on the 25th inst. This is the ninth annual meeting of this body, and they have before them a fine program for the week. A convention of elocutionists ought to be a delightful place to go; especially their recitals. Their sessions are held in the hall of the Lindell Hotel.

—On June 24th the people of Winfield, Kan., could hardly hear other than a Disciple of Christ preach. There was an assembly in session at the park, and this assembly was addressed by H. L. Willett in the morning and Z. T. Sweeney at two o'clock in the afternoon, while Geo. T. Smith preached in the M. E. Church in the morning to those who did not go to the assembly. Prof. W. D. McClintock of the university is adding to the interest and attendance of the assembly by giving some entertaining talks on literature.

Charles Reign Scoville informs us by wire, this Monday A. M., that there were 29 additions yesterday in their meeting in Gainsville, Texas, and 143 to date. The meeting continues.

—J. H. Crutcher, pastor of the church in Paris, Mo., having resigned, the elders of the church would be pleased to communicate with any experienced, successful preacher of our faith who may desire a location. But send no appointment to preach without the request of the board. Address L. J. Henry, Secretary.

—The state Sunday-school convention of Iowa will be held at Creston during the last week of June.

—We are glad to see the liberality shown by our brethren toward the famine sufferers of India and glad that the money has largely been sent through the foreign board and the C. W. B. M. This is right. Those best acquainted with the situation recommend that all money collected in America for the India famine sufferers be distributed as far as possible through the American missionaries. There are many reasons for this especially those of immediate and direct use of the funds where most needed and the influence it will give to the missionaries in their work. Let all contributions made by our brethren, then, as far as possible, be sent to our foreign board at Cincinnati or the C. W. B. M. at Indianapolis.

—We ask our readers this week to give our advertisements in this paper a careful inspection. Over three pages of our cover are taken by our colleges, and yet they do not contain them all. Those who could not get on the cover are given good positions on the inside of the paper. These ads show life, spirit and enterprise in our colleges. The spirit of pessimism cannot be detected in any one of them. They are all facing the future with courage and hopefulness. Read and ponder their claims.

—Not only have we had to omit many excellent articles from this paper, but whole departments, to make room for our colleges to speak. And when you have read their hopeful messages we do not fear that any will complain of the use made of our columns and pages this week.

—Wilson and Hunter wire us to-day (Monday) that they have had 97 additions to date in their meeting in Washington C. H., Ohio. There were twenty-five additions on last Sunday. Of the 97 additions 88 are by confession. The evangelists say that Bro. Honeywell is a great pastor.

—Dr. D. R. Dungan's removal to Canton, Mo., this fall, to take charge of Christian University, will vacate one of our most important St. Louis pulpits, but the official board of that church will, of course, see that a wise choice is made for his successor. W. W. Dowling, F. M. Call, J. H. Allen and other members of the board are men of experience and know the requirements of the church and of the city, and will endeavor to secure a successor that will fully meet the high standard of scholarship and efficiency set by their retiring pastor and, of course, we are all anxious to know who that man will be.

Miss Mary E. Ware, whose article, "Romance and Romanticism," has been running through the last numbers of this paper, desires a position in one of our colleges as a teacher in literature. She is a normal graduate and a teacher of wide and varied experience. She gives for references J. H. Fillmore, Cincinnati, O.; W. F. Richardson, Kansas City; A. W. Kokendoffer, Kansas City. Address Mary E. Ware, 1521 Tracy Ave., Kansas City, Mo.

G. F. Assiter informs us that the condition of his wife's health makes it imperative that he should return to the United States. He is now in London, but expects to be in America in about two weeks. He will be available for church work upon his arrival, and any church in need of a preacher or pastor would find in him a strong, efficient man.

Geo. McGee, of Cape Girardeau, Mo., has decided to give up the work of the Children's Home Society of Missouri, with which he has been connected, and return to the local pastoral work. Sornborger, a minister in the church of the United Brethren, of this city, came out and took a stand with us upon our plea and position, and now preaches Christ and him crucified for the salvation of men as we preach him. Bro. Sornborger is a young man of good record and ability and can be had for occasional or regular preaching by any church within a radius of 100 miles of this city. His address is 1007 Chestnut St., St. Louis, Mo. We shall be glad to have the churches make use of Bro. S.

The last Lord's day in May Bro. Joseph Lowe preached his farewell discourse at Hollister, Cal. The house was crowded with friends. The M. E. Church (South) joined with us in our sorrow. Only those that know the condition the church was in when Bro. Lowe came here two years ago and the advance the church has made and the splendid condition all branches of the work is in can appreciate the noble work of that faithful servant in the Master's work. Surely, his labors were great, and great will be his reward. The friends gave Bro. and Sister Lowe a reception on Tuesday evening at the church which was filled to overflowing. There was but one sentiment expressed, that of sorrow in parting with so truly Christian people.

The design of our first page is intended to convey the idea of the unity of our educational system from the "Little Red Schoolhouse" which occupies the left of the picture, to the university with its postgraduate courses, and all these under the sanctifying influence of religion indicated by the church building, whose spire is seen soaring heavenward on the right. We cannot dispense with the "little red school-house," which stands for our Public School system, nor the State University and other universities, and least of all can the church afford to dispense with its Christian Colleges, which receive their inspiration and their support from the church.

The artist has carried out our idea very well. Between the schoolhouse and the university the academy and college are to be understood. We have simply aimed to show the beginning and the end of the series, and the presence of the church building is to indicate what we sincerely believe, that any education which leaves out man's religious nature is essentially defective. It is because our Christian schools at the present time are most faithfully fulfilling this religious obligation that they deserve the heartiest sympathy and support of Christian people.

Unhealthy Kidneys Make Impure Blood.

All the blood in your body passes through your kidneys once every three minutes.

The kidneys are your blood purifiers, they filter out the waste or impurities in the blood.

If they are sick or out of order, they fail to do their work.

Pains, aches and rheumatism come from excess of uric acid in the blood, due to neglected kidney trouble.

Kidney trouble causes quick or unsteady heart beats, and makes one feel as though they had heart trouble, because the heart is over-working in pumping thick, kidney-poisoned blood through veins and arteries.

It used to be considered that only urinary troubles were to be traced to the kidneys, but now modern science proves that nearly all constitutional diseases have their beginning in kidney trouble.

If you are sick you can make no mistake by first doctoring your kidneys. The mild and the extraordinary effect of Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the great kidney remedy is soon realized. It stands the highest for its wonderful cures of the most distressing cases and is sold on its merits by all druggists in fifty-cent and one-dollar sizes. You may have a sample bottle by mail free, also pamphlet telling you how to find out if you have kidney or bladder trouble. Mention this paper when writing Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y.

National Evangelistic Congress.

The National Evangelistic Congress will meet at Maxinkuckee Assembly this year on Aug. 10. If we mistake not this is the beginning of one of the most important movements among our national field workers. Lake Maxinkuckee, itself a "gem of inland summer resorts," is centrally located for our brethren, and is as pleasant as many of the more northern summer resting-places. And then we notice the names of G. F. Hall, Allen Wilson, Updike, MacLane, J. H. O. Smith, Shuey, Scoville, Hackleman, Walter Wilson, Lichtenberger, Pearl Perrin, DeLoss Smith, J. V. Coombs and others on the program. These evangelists will make this congress a force for good in the kingdom of Christ; and the congress will be a day of glorious fellowship at "beautiful Maxinkuckee." T. J. Legg.

Pine Bluff, Arkansas.

We have only twelve members of our little church at Fordyce. I never knew a more ignored or persecuted people than these have been and are. Yet, they have built and paid for a comfortable little church house.

I preached for them twelve sermons, assisting Bro. W. O. Breeden, of Camben, who preaches for them monthly. No preacher in town came near us and most of their numbers seemed to have been trained to do likewise. The faithful few seemed to have gained some strength and toward the close we had a fair audience. None were added.

This is a city of 25,000, with no saloons, and during my stay I heard no profane word nor saw an intoxicated man. I was told that their sectarian walls were about as high in their relation to each other as to us. Each one for oneself and no one very strong alone—such is sectarianism.

Texas State Convention.

I have just returned from Paris, Tex., where I was in attendance upon the Texas state convention. The reception accorded me there was simply delightful, as are all the meetings I have had the privilege of attending. Returned missionaries are, so far as my experience goes, always treated with marked respect and esteem. I enjoyed the two days in Paris very much indeed. The convention was a good one in every respect; full of hope and good cheer. The addresses and sermons that I heard were all of first-class order. Bro. Marshall's address on Japan was full of information and inspiration. It would be well if it could be heard in every community in the land.

I was very sorry that I could not attend the Mo. S. S. Convention at California, but I am not altogether at fault. I was not advised of the date of the meeting until I had agreed to go to Texas. I should like to attend a number of the state conventions if my services are wanted, but of course don't feel like pushing myself. This is a gentle hint for an invitation. If you want to know whether what I do is of any use to the cause of missions, ask the brethren where I have been. I am in the hands of my brethren. I am glad to be at home again for awhile. I trust I may be able to help on the cause while I sojourn here for a season. We shall be here until the season of 1901. My address is Holden, Johnson County, Mo.

Education for the Wage-earner.

The Educational Department of the Young Men's Christian Association is not in competition with any of our schools, either academies, colleges or universities. It was created to meet a requirement which none others met. In short, it exists for young men who cannot attend school for reasons of employment. It provides elementary as well as technical, trade as well as professional.

As a feature of Young Men's Christian Association work, though but recently inaugurated, it has met with the unqualified approval of business men and the liberal patronage of those in whose behalf it is maintained.

It affords young men an opportunity of supplying defects in their early education, or of pursuing their studies along technical or professional lines, and altogether of increasing their efficiency as citizens as well as enlarging their wage-earning capacity.

The manual training idea has been laid under tribute and young men who are serving as helpers or apprentices by day are afforded opportunity in this evening school of fortifying themselves for their work with a knowledge of the underlying principles of the professional or trade which engages the skill of their hands, their eyes and their intellects. The training received soon manifests itself in the work turned out.

The association in St. Louis has a well-established educational department. Classes are maintained during the winter in three brances in the city. Seven hundred and forty young men were enrolled last season.

An employed young man, while filling his position, can for a nominal cost in this school, by close application, acquire the equivalent of a good common school education, or if he already has that, can get technical training which will place him in the line of promotion.

Young men who come to St. Louis or go to any of the large cities, from the smaller ones, or from town, village or country where they were born and brought up, are wise indeed if they seek out the the Young Men's Christian Association and avail themselves of its privileges, all of which are within easy reach. Not only is there room and a welcome in the educational department, but in the physical, the social and the religious departments as well.

BARCLAY MEADOR.

Garfield, Washington.

DEAR BRO. GARRISON:—This is a very windy day. All the available dust is flying around in the air, just enough to make it very uncomfortable for one out of doors. So I have concluded to remain in my study this afternoon and write a short letter to the dear old CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. This town, of about 1,200, is situated in the celebrated Palouse country, 70 miles south of Spokane and near the Idaho state line. We have no saloon, and therefore we have a very quiet and orderly community. Colfax is our county seat, 18 miles west. I am told by very reliable persons that the wheat product of this (Whitman) county will foot up annually from ten to thirteen million bushels. The country is very hilly, but very fertile. We have 18 congregations of the Disciples of Christ in the county and near 1,200 members, with seven or eight resident preachers. Our annual camp meeting will be held this year near Waverly in the southern part of the County of Spokane, beginning June 14th and continuing until June 25th. The church at this place has on its register about 220 names. Divide that by two and you will have nearer the actual resident membership. We have a real good Bible-school, with an average attendance of 80, and one among the best prayer-meetings I ever attended. On the 20th of May the congregation selected brethren Geo. F. Stivers, Jno. W. Laird and O. H. Johnson, to act as elders. For more than one year the church had no eldership. Bro. Stivers, an old Missourian, has been living here for twelve years, and I suppose it may be said, truthfully, has done more efficient work during those years in Whitman County than any other preacher of the Word. He preaches ably and faithfully.

I have agreed to labor here all of my time for one year from the first Lord's day in March last. The church during the last three months past has raised $10 for Foreign Missions; $10 for Home Missions; $9.50 "Children's Day," and we have sent $22.80 to the India famine fund. I am much pleased with this field of labor and hope to accomplish, by the help of God, much good.

My family reside in Salem, Oregon, but I can leave here any day at 6:30 P. M. and reach home next morning at 10:30. We have two number one railroads—the O. R. & N. and the Northern Pacific—and six trains daily connecting Spokane, this state, a beautiful and thrifty city of 35,000, with Portland, the metropolis of Oregon, with 100,000 people. I send my fraternal regards to all of my friends among the preachers of Missouri and to all the many brethren and sisters in Christ, among whom I labored in the gospel for near twenty years.

The CHRISTIAN EVANGELIST is a much-welcomed visitor, and I wish it great success and continued prosperity. Your brother in the hope of the gospel,

R. M. MESSICK.

The Correspondence Bible College

Of Christian University, under the direction of Prof. C. J. Burton, is doing a most excellent and profitable work. It has been in successful operation for four years, and as a result hundreds of students are being instructed in the Word of God in 45 states, Canada and England.

During the year just past 188 students were enrolled in this department alone. The course is thorough, covering the whole Bible from Genesis to Revelation and leads to diploma and degree. Full information with full trial lesson will come to your address by writing Prof. C. J. Burton, Christian University, Canton, Mo. O. O. F.

Educational Day.

By vote of the Chattanooga Convention, 1898, the first Lord's day in July was made an Educational Day to be observed in all the churches. This can be done this year with great rejoicing, as all our schools and colleges have made substantial advances, as this issue of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST shows. Let no church or preacher fail to observe the day. An interesting program can be arranged, using the young people just home from college, who are to be found in almost every community. Let the history and claims of the nearest college receive especial attention. The main purpose of the day is to foster a general interest in education in general and our own schools and colleges in particular, but many churches will desire to make an offering to the work of the National Board of Education. Let all such forward the same to

Hard to Stay Great.

FORCES IN NATURE INTENDED TO LEVEL THOSE WHO PUSH AHEAD OF THE MASSES.

By brains, hard work, and self-denial a man reaches a position of wealth and greatness.

Right then, by a natural law, the contrary forces set to work to tear him down, to prevent his getting too far ahead of the regular evolutionary development.

Think it over and you will remember your own and your friends' experience.

When fortune's face begins to smile, misfortune's iron hand appears, for the man yields to some or many of the "tearing down" forces, anxiety, worry, whisky, tobacco, lust, coffee, etc., etc. Health begins to leave and the man is unable to hold his lofty position.

Only the grim, determined fellows, who recognize the devils that would rob and slay him, and who sturdily and steadily refuse to allow them to work on him, are able to "stay great."

Is it worth while?

You are your own master and judge. You can kill them or you can yield, and they will down you.

A man says, "I can quit."

There is but one answer, "Get down then to the lower place that the big crowd of 'commons' occupy."

It is only the "masters" who can remain masters.

Coffee is one of the most dangerous sluggers in the list, for it is veiled and seemingly harmless, but its mission is to weaken heart, kidneys, and digestion, then slowly follows weakness of purpose and inability, and the victim all unconscious of the reason, steps backward and downward from his hard-earned place among the great ones.

It is easy to shift the coffee habit by taking on Postum Food Coffee, a distinct and scientific "anti" for coffee.

Postum (well made) satisfies the coffee taste, and instead of breaking down the heart and nerve centres builds them up in a remarkable manner as the result of the action of the ingredients carefully and expertly selected from nature's storehouse of sustaining and rebuilding food elements.

You can be great and stay great if you have sturdy determination and make use of the discoveries of modern science and research. Postum Food Coffee is made at the famous pure food factories of the Postum Co., at Battle Creek, Mich.

Wisconsin News.

Monroe sent $12 to Home Missions and $24 to India famine sufferers. Z. T. Sweeney is to lecture there, July 12, on "The Golden Age." H. G. Bennett, a Monroe boy, graduated at Eureka this month, locates at Carbondale, Ill.

H. F. Barston, of Hickory, was given a two weeks' vacation by the church there; he spent the time in a protracted meeting at his old home, Werley, with two confessions and much other good.

The Sunday-school at Sabin has been resurrected and is doing splendidly. A. W. Bloom is preaching for them every other Sunday in the afternoon.

The district convention at West Lima, June 7-10, was a pronounced success. The program was almost altogether home talent, only one speaker being from outside the state. The preachers present were D. N. Wetzel and E. R. Russell from Richland Center; G. C. Johnson, of Lynxville; A. W. Bloom, Bloom City; O. M. Johnson, Central City, Ia., and C. G. McNeill, of Milwaukee. Orrie Carter ought to be added to that list for he is preparing for the ministry at Hiram College, and his paper on "The Church and Missions" was an excellent sermon.

The program was good at every session, the discussions lively and interesting, the entertainment excellent and the welcome royal. Dr. B. A. Cole, as secretary and as chairman of the program committee, contributed largely to the success of the convention, as also did B. F. Poorman, chairman of the committee on entertainment.

The next convention will be at Lynxville. The new officers are: President, D. N. Wetzel; vice-president, F. R. Pease, Lynxville; secretary, T. K. Gray, Sugar Grove; treasurer, E. M. Pease, Richland Center. The program committee are: T. K. Gray, D. N. Wetzel and Mrs. E. M. Pease.

Perhaps the most delightful service was the communion hour, which was indeed enjoyable. The most important action of the convention related to the overtures of the Free Baptists made to the Baptists and us, looking to the federation of the three bodies in this state. The convention voted that I should attend their "yearly meeting" at Honey Creek this week. I go to-morrow. May our Father direct us in this matter.

The West Jefferson Street Church.

To the members of the Christian Church:

DEAR BRETHREN:—The West Jefferson Street Church of Christ appeals to you for financial assistance. We have been burdened with an indebtedness of over $13,000 since the building of the church in 1897, which we have been unable to reduce on account of interest, attorney's fees and commissions in getting money to keep our creditors from taking our church property. We now have subscribed about $2,500, conditional that the amount of $5,000 be raised. Should we fail to raise this amount our church property will be lost; if raised, saved.

We therefore appeal to you for a little help by taking a collection some time in June. Whatever is done must be done immediately. Our creditors are becoming very impatient, so much so that one judgment is already against us and more will follow soon. We beg that you will assist us in this great work of the Master. Send all money to Bro. D. M. Doyle, 47 Home Ave., Fort Wayne, Ind.

Thanking you very kindly for the help you may have in your hearts to give, we remain,

Grand Old Men

Some men seem to defy old age. They walk erect. Their eyes are bright. Their laugh is hearty. They are men of to-day—not men of yesterday. They are also men who have kept themselves in good physical condition in the past. As we grow older waste matter accumulates in the system. The body cannot throw it off without assistance. So, little by little the machinery of the body is clogged, vitality is lowered, and enjoyment of life ceases. Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, cannot make old men young, but it does make them strong and healthy. By removing the waste accumulations, by increasing the blood supply, by strengthening the stomach and organs of digestion and nutrition, and thus increasing the assimilative and nutritive powers, "Golden Medical Discovery" makes grand old men.

"I suffered for six years with constipation and indigestion, during which time I employed several physicians, but they could not reach my case," writes Mr. G. Popplewell, of Eureka Springs, Carroll Co., Ark. "I felt that there was no help for me, could not retain food on my stomach; had vertigo and would fall helpless to the floor. I commenced taking Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery and little 'Pellets.' I am now in good health for one of my age—60 years. I owe it all to Dr. Pierce's medicines."

Dr. Pierce's Pellets greatly benefit old men by keeping the bowels in activity.

Paris and the Exposition—III.

THE UNITED STATES AT THE EXPOSITION.

The arrangement of the Paris Exposition is not conducive to striking national displays. The French commissioner-general has devised and put into execution a topical classification of exhibits which has received much praise from exposition experts. There are eighteen general classes and the arrangement of exhibits by nations prevails only within each of these classes. The products of each nation are accordingly to be found all over the grounds, those of each group being in proximity, not to other products from the same nation, but to similar products from other nations. The advantage of this method for any one who wishes to make a serious study of any subject, or a comparative national study within any department, is obvious.

The bare mention of the principal groups is suggestive of the vast and varied contents of this or any exposition which professes to be universal in its scope. The following list of the groups in the primary classification is quoted substantially from the official catalogue and the studious may peruse it to their edification:

I. Education and instruction.
II. Works of Art.
III. Appliances and general processes relating to art, literature and science.
IV. Mechanical engineering.
V. Electricity.
VI. Civil engineering and transportation.
VII. Agriculture.
VIII. Horticulture and arboriculture.
IX. Forestry, fishing, the chase and the gathering of wild crops.
X. Food products.
XI. Mining and metallurgy.
XII. Decoration and furniture of public buildings and dwelling houses.
XIII. Threads, yarns, textile fabrics and clothing.
XIV. Chemical industries.
XV. Various unclassifiable industries, including work in gold, silver, glass, bronze, stone, wood, leather, porcelain, etc.
XVI. Social economy, hygiene, public charitable relief.
XVII. Colonization.
XVIII. Army and navy.

Obviously, no one can take an intelligent interest in all of these diverse subjects. One who can appreciate the exhibits of mechanical engineering will probably have no very profound enthusiasm for the exquisite laces of —— somewhere (I have forgotten just where they did come from) and Worth's gowns—and they were very pretty, too. And it is not at all likely that one whose taste runs to chrysanthemums and roses will also have a discriminating admiration for Maxim's and Schneider's big guns and the army and navy exhibits. The day has passed when one can be a specialist in everything, and most people, unfortunately, are specialists in nothing. Hence, it happens that if one devotes a few hours within the Exposition to observing the observers instead of the classified exhibits, the expressions of admiration which one hears are for the most part either the incoherent "Oh!" "Ah!" of rapturous bewilderment or the equally undiscriminating "wunderschoen," "tres joli," "molto buono," or "awfully nice," according to nationality.

Since the United States is represented in all of these eighteen groups, it must not be considered surprising if I did not see and do not here describe all of the United States exhibits. I would no more think of doing that than of reading all the American books in the library of the British Museum, irrespective of subject.

In addition to the space allotted to our exhibits in the various so-called Palaces, there are five buildings in the Exposition grounds which fly our flag. One of these is the National Pavilion, the dedication of which has been mentioned in a previous article. The other four are annex buildings in various departments, in which more space was needed than the Exposition authorities could or would grant. In general, it is to be remarked that France has been extremely generous to herself in the allotment of space. In many cases the division has proceeded upon the obvious assumption that the civilized world is divided into two practically equal sections: France and the rest of it.

The four American annexes are the Forestry Annex, the Merchant Marine Annex, the Agriculture Annex and the Publishers' Building. Among these the same condition of painful incompleteness prevails as in many of the larger buildings. The Forestry Annex will be in the form of a log cabin a hundred feet long, but its walls are yet only partially built. The Merchant Marine Annex is not yet open to the public. The Agriculture Annex is not yet complete, and May 30 is set as the day for the opening of the Publishers' Building.

The most casual glance through the United States exhibits in the various departments reveals the fact that our exhibitors are comparatively weak in those groups in which artistic and decorative work is represented, and comparatively strong in those departments which call for mechanical ingenuity and those which illustrate the art of comfortable and healthy living.

The American exhibit in the Palais des Beaux Arts is clearly unsatisfactory. Here as elsewhere France has assigned to herself about half of the total space, and the little space that is allotted to us contains much work that is not representative to the exclusion of the works of many painters who are representative of the best phases of American art. Among the most notable triumphs of American workmanship in the line of artistic handicrafts is that of the silversmiths, Gorham and Tiffany. The magnificent display of the latter is, as usual, one of the features of the Exposition.

But the true triumph of the American exhibitors is in such things as typewriters, fountain pens, photographic apparatus and agricultural machinery. In these things American manufacturers command the European market without serious competition. I exhibited my fountain pen the other day to a group of intelligent Parisians who marveled much at it. They had heard of such things before, but had never seen one. There are practically no typewriters in Europe except American machines, though one of the German bicycle companies is now putting out a very fair typewriter. In the matter of bicycles, the continental makers have improved so much in the last three years in lightness and grace that the American wheels are no longer so pre-eminently superior as they once were. In agricultural machinery the American manufacturers do an enormous European business, not the least part of it being in the vast territory between Vienna on the west and Moscow and Constantinople on the east, where the wheat fields rival those of the Dakotas in size and richness. The American traveler is not yet a familiar figure in that region, but the American plow and reaper are well known. At the same time that in this very department, which we are in the habit of considering specifically our own, Great Britain makes a most excellent showing at the Exposition.

Among all the American products exhibited at the Paris Exposition, probably none meets with more unanimous approval from all sorts of people from all lands than Sousa's Band. Daily open-air concerts were given in the Esplanade des Invalides during most of the month of May, and they will be resumed later in the season. Paris has heard many bands, but it had never before seen the like of Sousa, and those graceful maneuvers with which he leads his men through the "Liberty Bell" and "King Cotton," familiar as they are by this time to all America, tickled the tired nerves of Paris in a new spot.

It is a queer crowd, this crowd of Exposition visitors, which files past if one pauses in any main thoroughfare to watch it. Between the wide-spreading legs of the Eiffel Tower one has as good a point as any for viewing the procession. There are Russians in fur caps. There are barelegged French children. Fashionably dressed negroes from South America go by, usually accompanied by white women. The Moors of Algeria, in spite of their flowing white robes, have an air of proprietorship by virtue of the fact that Paris is their own capital, since their country is French territory. A Turk passes by wearing a new Parisian spring overcoat which contrasts strangely with with his Oriental skirts which protrude below it. But the queerest of all is the Parisian. The women of Paris always dress with taste—the men seldom. There are few places where one can see so many ungainly and inappropriate combinations of the few simple elements of male attire as in a Parisian crowd. Strangest of all are the denizens of the Latin Quarter, the painters and poets who have their reputation yet to make and are living the Bohemian life meanwhile. Long hair, broad felt hats (or, for state occasions, flat-rimmed silk hats), low-cut vests, wide ties, unkempt beards, wide trousers narrowing suddenly at the ankle, velveteen suits, and, in general, a studied air of eccentric genius—these are the marks of the Bohemian.

The American is there, too, both male and female. It is not for me to characterize the American man as he appears in Paris. The subject becomes too personal at this point. Much is said of the ignorance, the ostentation, the hasty, slapdash method of sight-seeing, which is supposed to characterize the traveling American. Most that is said on this subject is false, though part of it has, to be sure, the truth of caricature. One thing can be said in his favor, at any rate. The American man in Paris is usually not vain of his French. In emergencies he speaks the little French that he knows in the full realization of its imperfections and with no pretense of having a thorough command of the language. This virtue, the habit of estimating modestly one's own linguistic attainments, has not, in my opinion, received the recognition it merits, and in this virtue the American man abroad excels.

For Seasickness

Dr. J. FOURNESS-BRICE, of S. S. Teutonic says: "I have prescribed it among the passengers traveling to and from Europe, and am satisfied that if taken in time, it will, in a great many cases, prevent seasickness."

B. B. Tyler's Letter.

The name of the architect of the beautiful new chapel recently dedicated in Everett, Mass., is G. Wilton Lewis and not G. Wilton Servis, as in my letter of June 7th. The happiest man in Massachusetts the day of the formal opening of the chapel in Everett was not G. Wilton Servis, but the aforesaid architect, G. Wilton Lewis. Bro. Lewis was supremely happy on that occasion because he had given time, thought, anxiety, effort, money, prayers and even tears to secure the elegant chapel referred to. Another illustration of the blessedness of giving.

The annual meeting of the New England Disciples of Christ was held in Boston. It was from every point of view a good meeting. There are not more than 2,500 Disciples in New England. The meeting could not, therefore, be large in numbers. There are about twenty congregations. The fellowship of the New England Disciples is most enjoyable. Love binds together the few who in this part of the world insist on being simply Christians. There are no rich men in this company. Generally the Disciples in New England are poor men and women. Some are well-to-do; but no one of them can be spoken of as wealthy. They are, however, rich in faith and love and zeal for the best of causes. But of their limited resources they give liberally. Their contributions during the last year to the work of missions, Home and Foreign, was $1,577.71. For mission work in New England the contributions aggregated $1,053.99—a total of $2,631.70. This is good. If in New England there were Disciples of Christ in such numbers as in some of the states in the Middle West our missionary offerings would show an aggregate far in excess of the present contributions. The steadiness and devotion of those in the East who stand for New Testament Christianity is a feature of the work that makes this one of the most important fields on the American Continent. Converts may not be made as rapidly in New England as in some other places, but it is pretty certain that when one is made he at once becomes an active agent in carrying on the work. Remember that this is "the land of steady habits." The number of additions to the churches since the last annual meeting is 203. Andthese have been gained under unusually unfavorable conditions. Some of the best men in the ministry in this field have left it since the meeting a year ago. As a result some of the congregations a portion of the time have been without preaching. But if there are more than a million Disciples in the United States, and if there are not more than 2,500 in New England, and if the per cent. of increase in this field within the last twelve months were equaled in all parts of the country; the numerical increase of the Disciples of Christ would be more than twice as great as the statistical secretary reported to the Jubilee Convention last fall. What do you think now of New England as a field in which to gain converts? If this is a barren field what ought to be said of the rest of the United States?

This meeting, as was said above, was held in the church in Boston. The present place of meeting of the Disciples of Christ in this city is in the Roxbury District, on Saint James Street. The location is much better for our work than was the former place of meeting. There is also a better house, and the congregation is free from debt. The building is new, neat, attractive, convenient. Its arrangment is excellent. It is not large enough to comfortably accommodate the people who desire to hear the Word and participate in the worship. Did you expect to receive such a report from Boston? But the statement here made is the statement of a fact. Such is the condition of our work in Boston.

The singing is one of the attractive features in this church. It has been a long time since I have heard such music in a church as I heard last Lord's day in the Saint James Street Christian Church in the city of Boston. It was dignified, full of soul, uplifting. This part of the service was spiritually refreshing. Some of the best musical talent in Boston is in the choir, and it is consecrated. The singers do not sing for the amount of money they can make, but for the love of Christ and his church. The members of the choir are Christians. There is congregational singing also.

J. H. Mohorter is the pastor of the Boston church. He came from Cleveland to Boston a little more than a year ago. He is an interesting man. Let me tell you something about him. He is an Irishman, born in the United States. The state of Delaware is the commonwealth in which he first beheld the light. His parents were North-of-Ireland Presbyterians, good blood. The name used to be spelled Mahawther. It is probable that toward the beginning of the historic period it was McMahawther! Bro. Mohorter was a Methodist for five years. He became dissatisfied with Methodist instruction to inquirers during the progress of a revival in Newark, Delaware, in 1886. J. L. Parsons held a meeting in Newark in 1887. T. B. Knowles was pastor at the time of a small congregation of Disciples. J. H. Mohorter was baptized during this meeting. It was his intention to remain in the Methodist Church. He did not, however, feel at home in that communion. He is quite at home now! Hiram College is his Alma Mater. Four years were spent at Hiram He graduated in '93. He was a tapestry weaver when Parsons found him; he is a true minister of Jesus Christ now. In due time Miss Katie Davis, a Newark girl, became Mrs. J. H. Mohorter. She is in heartiest sympathy with her husband in his great work.

At noon, the twelfth day of June, Mrs. E. J. Toof, at her home in New Haven, Connecticut, entered the rest prepared for the people of God. For months she was a great sufferer, but her end was peaceful and painless. Four years ago last January her only son, J. T. Toof, the well-known and much-loved preacher, was as you probably remember suddenly called from time to eternity. The mother never fully recovered from this terrible blow. Her last outing was the trip to the Jubilee Convention in Cincinnati last fall. She was seriously ill all last winter. The seventy-fifth anniversary of her birth was passed in May of this year. She was born in Kentucky in 1825. Her maiden name was Bryson—Mary Bryson. When she was yet young she went to Iowa; there she heard and obeyed the gospel. To her baptismal vow she was faithful in prosperity and in adversity, in sunshine and in storm. Mother Toof knew in whom she believed and why. She was a Disciple of Christ. In 1852 she became the wife of Dr. E. J. Toof. More than forty-eight years they walked the way of life together. Their mutual devotion was beautiful. In them was seen a happy married life. Husband and wife in love served one another. The blow which has fallen on the Doctor is crushing. His faith in God and in his Son, Jesus Christ our Lord, is strong. As to the future he has neither a doubt nor a fear. Mrs. John Campbell Avery, the only daughter, was in Euaope when it became evident that the end of her mother's life was near. She reached home about two weeks before her mother "fell on sleep."

Mrs. J. T. Toof was a daughter indeed during the protracted and painful illness of her mother-in-law. Three grandchildren are left. Mary Avery is in Europe. The baptism of Elizabeth Toof was mentioned in a recent letter. After hours of apparent unconsciousness her eyes opened, all evidences of pain disappeared from her face, a light beamed in the eyes, a preternatural smile passed over her countenance; she had had a vision of the home of the redeemed, when with a look of intelligent recognition given to each member of the household, Mother Toof entered the deathless land. She was a majestic character. She was gentle, unselfish, sympathetic, thoughtful of others, helpful to all with whom she came in contact. Her convictions, especially on religion, were positive and clean-cut; but she was tolerant. The death of Mother Toof was a veritable translation. She has gone up higher. The resurrection with her is a fact. The grace of the Lord Jesus be with the sorrowing. B. B. T.

Chilcren's Day has come and gone. Always and everywhere it is a day of blessing. Anything that brings the chidren to the front ought to be encouraged; they are the to-morrow of the church. Thirty-three years, on an average, will pass by, and every person now living will lie cold and stark in the cemeteries. No wonder the Master exclaimed: "I must work the works of Him that sent me while it is day; the night cometh when no man can work." We have heard of the churches that were wise enough to make one Sunday every month a Children's Day; may their number increase. The "day" is a most desirable feature, no matter what may be its immediate purpose.

Huntsville, Mo., is a typical Missouri town of about 3,000 people, the county seat of Randolph Counuy. For twelve years the county has had the Wood local option law in force, and in spite of their fantastic claim that more liquor is sold than under license, every four years the rummies have asked for an election. It was with a view to stirring the consciences of the citizens and answering some of the enemies' sophistries that the people of Huntsville invited the writer to deliver a course of lectures the week commencing June 11th. The meetings were held in the courthouse, and the attendance and deepening interest were all that could be asked. Five drugstores in the town sell, some in larger quantities than others, but all have the reputation of selling liquor, illicitly. Two of these "druggists" are members of the Christian Church, and one of the M. E. Church South. They are connected by marriage with some of the best families of the community; but so far from complicating the situation, that ought to make it easier to deal with. True American aristocracy is ethical, not financial; its basis is sound morals, not bank balances.

Louis S. Cupp and H. H. Johnson, pastors respectively of the Christian and Methodist Churches, are the practical leaders in the campaign for sobriety and decency, backed by some of the foremost citizens. Without malice but with determination they have taken the work in hand to re-enact the law and then see to its enforcement. Any one at all familiar with the tactics of the liquor party will see at once the delicacy and difficulty of their position and breathe a prayer to heaven for their success. One thing is indubitably clear: a faithful, self-respecting preacher and a whiskey-selling "druggist" cannot long remain in the same church, no matter whose son-in-law the druggist may be. He must repent and reform or suffer excision; failing in this the preacher must give way to a time-server.

One of the most encouraging signs of the times in the advance of temperance sentiment is indicated by a clause in the blank application for employment furnished by the M. K. & T. and other railway companies. It reads as follows: "I hereby apply for a situation as ——— and, if accepted, agree to observe all rules and regulations, to pay all my bills promptly each month, to maintain strict integrity of character, to abstain from the use of intoxicating liquors, to avoid visiting saloons and places of low resort or where liquor is sold, and to perform my duties to the best of my ability." Think of it: a temperance or rather a total abstinence pledge made a part of an application for employment by a great corporation! And think again: an employe of the M. K. & T. who should visit a Huntsville drugstore, kept by a member of the Christian Church, would be violating this pledge, and his situation would be endangered! How would it do to exact a similar pledge from candidates for membership in our churches?

The thirty-third convocation of the University of Chicago was held on the University Quadrangle June 19, at 3 P. M. Rev. Frederick E. Dewhurst was convocation chaplain; the address was delivered by President James G. K. McClure, D. D., Lake Forest University—"The True Scholar's Attitude Toward the Past." He said some things that ought to be heard beyond the campus; for example: "The only weapon wherewith to overpower is a truth." Again: "It is impossible to be a true scholar and be without admiration for the past." The true scholar will always be a man of tolerant spirit. The most tolerant men in history have been the men who through scholarly investigation have become the surest in their personal beliefs." Hiram Van Kirk was among the number honored with degrees, taking his Ph. D. President Harper's quarterly statement showed that the attendance at the university has increased from 744 in 1893 to 3,138 in 1900. During the spring quarter the library has received 2,705 volumes. The new gifts pledged to the university during the scholastic year amount to $702,209; the cash value of gifts paid in during the present year, $1,049,286.70.

The first district conventon was held June 21-23, at Sterling, Ill. Already we are hearing much inquiry about the great gathering in Kansas City this fall. Every Disciple should turn his face thither, and as many as possible "steadfastly go up." Kansas City belongs to us; the people know how to handle conventions; there should be not less than eight thousand in attendance.

Washington (D. C.) Letter.

The recent conference of the brethren of the North Atlantic states, held in Hagerstown, Md., emphasized the importance of evangelizing this section of our country.

Attention was called to the fact that in the states lying along the seaboard from Maine to Virginia there were our twenty million residents, or more than one-third the entire population of the United States.

Yet, in this territory this territory there are less than sixty thousand persons who prefer to be known simply as Christians or Disciples of Christ; in New England there is only one such for every 2,000 of the population, in New York state one for every 750; in Philadelphia, one for every 1,500; Baltimore, one for every 500, and Washington, one for every 150.

At the Philadelphia conference in 1899 it was decided to request the American Christian Missionary Society to put an evangelist in the East. A year had passed and nothing had been done. There was a disposition upon the part of some in the conference to criticise the members of the Home Board and to represent them as blind to the great opportunity presented to our people at this time in the Atlantict sates.

Possibly the Home Board is doing its best with the limited resources it commands, and certainly they are dealing more generously with Eastern missions every year.

The brethren were not all agreed that the employment of an evangelist was the best method of planting our cause in the East. Our evangelist might seize the Spion Kop of some great city, unlimber his guns and discharge his biggest ammunition and then retire from the position to make a venture at some other strategic point. He would make a noise and might do some execution, but it was thought to be a poor way to subjugate the country.

It was the testimony of those exprienced in Eastern work that to sieze and hold small outposts on the flanks of the enemy was more successful than a frontal attack. But little attention is given us until we show evidence of permanent occupation of the territory. When the congregation in East Washington secured its own building there were more baptisms in one month than there had been during the previous five years of its peripatetic existence in halls

It would have taken the Whitney Avenue mission, in this city, a dozen years to have accomplished in a hall what has been done in their beautiful chapel in the past twelve months. The Church Extension Fund is an important factor in the evangelization of our country. The East needs enlightenment as to our plea. There are thousands in our territory in doctrinal accord with us who are ignorant of our existence or have a misconception of our teachings.

The Christian Scientists are sending Judge William G. Ewing through the country to speak in the great theaters of the leading cities, placarding the towns with announcements of his meetings and filling columns of the newspapers with their propaganda. This is one of the wisest plans ever conceived in the brains of a foolish people.

Newton Dwight Hillis, in his letter resigning from the Chicago Presbytery, makes this admirable suggestion: "I have asked Dr. Gunsaulus to join me in a movement, that with one or two other pastors we might spend a month in going from town to town, from city to city, to speak morning, afternoon and night upon the need of a revival of the sense of justice and law in our American life, upon the evils that threaten us as a nation and the importance of personal forsaking of sin and a personal acceptance of Christ and Christianity as the essentials of the higher life."

Why might we not start a movement to send our leading pastors through the towns and cities of the East to tell the simple story of the cross, present the scriptural terms, plead for a restoration of New Testament Christianity and leave behind young Timothys to gather the faithful together, ordain elders and set things in order?

If we are not successful in raising a sum sufficient to sustain Z. T. Sweeney in Paris, during the Exposition, let us expend the amount raised in sending him upon an evangelistic tour in our great Eastern cities. There is a brighter prospect of evangelizing Paris by the way of New York and Boston than there is of evangelizing Boston and New York by way of Paris.

The sessions of the Hagerstown conference were characterized by a hopeful spirit.

The East is ripe for our plea, there is power in the old gospel, there is help in God.

The Children's Day offering of the four schools in Washington will be at least $300. F. D. Power reports twenty additions at Vermont Avenue the past three Sundays; fourteen of these by baptism. I. W. Kimmel reports five at Whitney Ave. W. J. Wright has closed a satisfactory meeting with W. S. Haye, at Ringgold, Md. Six additions at Ninth Street Sunday.

Your best friend can give you no better advice than this: "For impure blood, bad stomach and weak nerves take Hood's Sarsaparilla."

Kansas City Letter.

Through the performance of pleasant duties the writer has been brought into touch with a considerable number of colleges and universities this commencement season and has garnered, perchance, some items of interest for the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST family. Of the institutions visited the following are noticed for reasons that shall appear.

And first, a word for the Kansas County high school. These worthy institutions were made possible through the industry and legislative enterprise of Mr. Canfield, the distinguished educator, and his protrait fittingly adorns their halls. The schools are the creatures of their counties and are supported just as the common school. They articulate with the State University at Lawrence. They supply a local need, a need that is sought to be supplied elsewhere by the struggling neighborhood or denominational college. They are an invaluable part of that splendid educational system, that despite grasshoppers and cyclones helps to keep Kansas to the front. In the main the teachers in these schools are competent and the work is throughout creditable.

Amity College, Iowa, is unique and exceptionally blessed in that at College Springs, its home, intoxicants have never been sold. This menace was warded off at the very beginning torough charter anactments, and the college has never been darkened by this evil. Standing in that quiet, thrifty village where none are poor and all seem happy, with a grateful information imparted that this fertile country has never been cursed by the drink traffic nor these homes shadowed by a hellish iniquity, one falls to dreaming of an Utopia which never anywhere should know the hurt of rum, falls to wondering, too, why with such object-lessons of content and peace our great republic should not rise up through the strength of its Christian manhood and womanhood and become such an Utopia, plucking this viper from its bosom. Some day this revolution will come. Some day we shall dare to be true. Some day we shall vote as we pray. Shall it be to-morrow? Why not?

Central College, Albany, represents at once a type and a problem—it is the typical college of the second rank and represents one of the gravest educational problems with which we have to deal. It were easy to gloss certain features and to slide into eulogy, but the bare recital of facts may be more wholesome, more helpful. Here is a college plant costing about $30,000. It was founded in 1892. It is conducted under the auspices of the Christian Church. It has been ably conducted. It has had its trials and troubles, but they come to all. Of incalculable benefit it has been to the community and to many without. Its teaching force this past year has been representative and strong. Yet, it is struggling for its very life. Its teachers are most meagerly supported, and supplementary work they must all do. Such sacrifices as are made by these teachers are not often recorded. But are their sacrificial labors appreciated? We applaud, but do we help? For a mere pittance these men and women toil. And is this not true of all of our smaller colleges? Yes, here is the type. And the problem? This: can these colleges live? Can they compete with the endowed colleges and universities? Things, it is quite evident, cannot go on much longer so. They must grow either better or worse. To these schools must come either a more hearty appreciation and an enlarged support or death. Our educational problem is in reality twofold: first, shall the university be enlarged? Second, shall the college starve? Prof. Ellis, of Plattsburg, well known as scholar and writer, comes to this school and may help us in the solution of the problem. Pres. Moore retires with the esteem of all.

Drake University is in every way notable. It is one of the youngest of our schools and perhaps the largest. It was organized in 1881. From the beginning Gov. F. M. Drake has been one of its chief promoters and financial stays, and fittingly does it bear his name. His contributions to the university have already exceeded $150,000 and the chancellor of the university has been permitted to announce that the institution has been most generously provided for in this benefactor's bequest. The brotherhood owes a large debt of gratitude to this prince of givers. And others are rallying to the support of the university. Old debts have been paid off and the fine plant, worth $300,000, is without encumbrance. The total enrollment of students for 1899-1900 was 1,500. Tuition receipts aggregated $40,000. The year just closed was in every way the most successful of the school's life. Chancellor Craig has brought what all of his friends predicted he would bring to the university—an enthusiasm that is contagious, a hopefulness all infectious, sunniness that means life. You feel that here is vigor, buoyancy, promise—a to-morrow. In no sense is Drake resting in its past. In largest way it is planning for the future. Its ideals are high. Here, on this splendid campus, you can but feel it is a university in the making—the university that shall be worthy of its name.

It wishes to enter upon the wider and more strenuous life now. With high ideals and with a splendid daring it asks the brotherhood for—millions. And it should come to its own. If it shall compete successfully with the universities of Michigan and Chicago it must have—millions. The day for petty things is past. The university of to-morrow must have dollars behind it and those dollars in shining heaps. A little way above it was written: "Shall the college starve?" The second question is upon us also: Shall the university be enlarged?

Spasmodic and haphazard effort will no longer serve. As a people we should intelligently outline a policy as to our educational institutions and attempt things on a worthy scale.

In Missouri at least we have been floundering for years, and nowhere has there been continuity of effort. Things cannot get much worse in "Imperial Missouri." Will the evil work a cure? Will our blunderings and shame save us? To an outsider it looks just like things were drifting. There is no concentration of effort, and oh such a little of effort, even in diffusion!

But such lamentations illy conclude a notice of Drake, unless such dolorousness and darkness serve as foils for the noble University at Des Moines. Yet it suits the mood of the writer to otherwise end his tale and to state that his visit to Des Moines was made additionally pleasant by the charming grace of his host and hostess, Chancellor and Mrs. Craig, and by the courtesies extended by Pastors Breeden and McCash and their splendid churches. GEORGE H. COMBS.

DRUNKENNESS CURED.

An eminent St. Louis physician has given a positive answer to the oft asked question, is drunkenness a disease, or is it simply a temptation that cannot be resisted by a vast number of the human race? The physician in question is Dr. Ozias Paquin, who for years has been a practicing physician in the City of St. Louis. He has answered this question by taking five of the worst drunkards that could be found and cured them of all further appetite for intoxicating drinks. The five cases were all beyond middle age and they had sunk into the deepest pit of drunkenness, with the odor of drink about them so obnoxious that it was almost impossible to stand within speaking distance. He not only cured them of all desire for intoxicating drink, but at the same time placed upon their cheek the flush of health, and into their eyes the light of happiness, and took from their person the odor of whiskey. It was almost a miracle, for he had raised five cases from degradation into the sunshine of health and happiness. Dr. Paquin has cured hundreds of patients who were relapses from other treatments, and in every instance he cured these patients, and they have remained cured for months and years. It can therefore be said that the Paquin Treatment is a permanent cure, and not a temporary one, for the patient never relapses to his former condition. We know of no more humane work being done at the present time than that which Dr. Paquin is doing, and it is the duty of every reader to assist Dr. Ozias Paquin in his noble work, and if any reader has brother, sister, husband, father or friend in whose system lurks the disease of drunkenness, he should at once send their name to Dr. Paquin or see that they either visit or place themselves in communication with the Ozias Paquin Immune Co., Suite 1113 Chemical Bldg., St. Louis. The reader that does this will certainly be doing a christian act, for no matter how hopeless the case may seem, and no matter how many other treatments have unsuccessfully been tried, the method known as Ozias Paquin Treatment will perfect a cure, dispelling all desire for drink, and at the same time will place the constitution in a robust and healthy condition.

Notes and News.

Remember the "Old Guard."

Brethren of the Church of Christ, I want to lay upon your hearts a bit of information, under the burden of which I want you to ask yourselves the question: "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?" Some of the best men in this "Restoration Movement," men who sacrificed the opportunities and possibilities of riches, together with the pleasures and joys of home, and went forth without promise or pay to preach the gospel of Jesus Christ as it was first preached by the Holy Spirit sent down from heaven, are to-day without the necessaries of life. From various physical difficulties, or from the infirmities of age, these are unable longer to do the work of the ministry or any other kind of work. Necessity has compelled them, or their friends for them, to call for help.

The Board of Ministerial Relief, to which these appeals are made, is the creation of the brotherhood, and the answer this board makes to these appeals is the answer of the brotherhood. If this board can only deal out a miserable pittance, or if it must say there are no funds, brethren, this is your answer. An old man, blind and helpless, who has served his brethren and the cause long and faithfully, worn out in the service, is asking for help. What shall we say for you, brethren, to this father in Israel?

If the true condition of these brethren appealing for help could be known to all the brotherhood, I am sure there would be no shortage in this fund. The amount of aid furnished these needy worthies is not one of the boasts of our brotherhood. No one is receiving more than $100 per year in quarterly installments. The July quarterly allowance is just now due. It will require about $1,300 to meet this payment. The treasury is far short of this amount. Brethren, I appeal to you personally. If you cannot give $50, $25, $10, give something; give one dollar and give that now. Dollars make hundreds. Do not wait for the regular collection day in December. When you read or heard something of this good work you remember you said in your heart, I will help these good brethren. Come now; let us hear from you with one, five, ten or some number of dollars, but let us hear from you.

Preachers, take this matter to heart; lay it before your congregation, and I am sure the result will be satisfactory. Send to Howard Cale, 120 E. Market Street, Indianapolis.

The Work at Spencer, Iowa.

Last week, after an absence of thirteen years, I had the privilege of visiting my first pastorate, the church at Spencer, Ia. The occasion was the dedication of the remodeled church building. The course of this church has been one of checkered sunshine and shadow, with the predominance of shadows. Now the way seems bright and the future seems full of promise. The building has been painted, a new steeple erected, inside papered, carpeted, seated, lighted and most comfortably arranged. An annex that was greatly needed was added. In size, in convenience, in appearance, if not the best church building in the city, is one of the best. This improvement was made possible through great sacrifice and labor on the part of the members of the congregation, led and inspired by their faithful and, in Spencer, universally beloved, pastor, J. A. Seaton. The cost of the remodeling of this building, and a small deficit of the church amounted to something over $1,200; all of which was raised. A number of former pastors were present, among whom I recall the names of Bros. Higbee and McEntyre. There were three services on Lord's day, at each of which there were people turned away.

Bro. Seaton is the man for Spencer. The grand work that he has already accomplished is but the beginning of what he can and will do for this people. He is a strong preacher and a man of excellent social powers. He is surrounded and aided by a charming wife and two daughters, who are very popular and good social leaders. I am glad I met these good people.

I cannot take the space in your paper to tell what I desire of the changes for good in this rapidly growing city, the change of feelings of the various churches toward each other, as manifest by the expression of good will and all uniting in this dedication service, the changes of faces and places through time and migration and death. After thirteen years, so great and many were the changes that I felt a stranger in a strange land, with a peculiar sadness tugging at my heart. But before I left the past came back again and memory was so refreshed and quickened that it seemed, after all, it was but yesterday when I left, and we were taking up the work over which we had shed so many tears and for which we had so often prayed. These are excellent people and God is rewarding their faithfulness.

I had the pleasure of speaking at a union service of the Christian and Methodist people arranged for me in the Methodist Church at Eldora, Ia., my boyhood home. I need not add that this was a peculiar joy.

Every tone that I hear from the field in my trip over this great state of Iowa was full of cheer and hopefulness. F. O. FANNON.

Bedford Letter.

We have a good church here. In the last year about 400 have been added to its membership. In the last month there have been a dozen baptisms. The hope of a new church building is doing great good in many ways. The church seems to be living for three objects:

1. One is to be saved by Jesus Christ, saved in every possible sense and in all the vastness of the word salvation—every faculty and power of our being saved.

2. A second object is to labor to save others. The work, they feel, begins at home, leads into the neighborhood and extends then to the most distant heathen lands. Nothing short of this will ever save a church from death or dissension.

Surely, if our motive be gratitude we shall be willing to go wherever God calls us. For, weak as we are, God needs our help. Jesus Christ came into this world to be born in its meanest hovel and to be put to death on its rudest cross, and after that it would seem any place is good enough for us if we can only express our gratitude to him who loved us.

3. A third object is to have a measurable share in those words of our Lord when he said: "I have glorified thee on the earth." Too often Christians excuse themselves by their place and surroundings. We think earth is a poor place. "There is nothing rich but heaven." When he will take us finally to the better land, there we shall show forth his excellence. Jesus hushes all our excuses. Study for a moment. Standing on this very earth of ours, he looked up and was compelled to say: "Oh righteous Father, the world hath not known thee." Hindered in every way. Oppressed, despised, opposed, hated and misunderstood, the dark shadow of the cross always upon him, he could say: "I have glorified thee on the earth." Oh that each Disciciple could catch more of his heroic, hopeful and victorious spirit! I will send you a description of our new house soon. JAMES SMALL.

Christian Science is abroad in the land, seeking whom it may devour. It is the most stupendous fraud of the Nineteenth Century, yet so shrewd are its advocates, and so thoughtless is the average man and woman, that tens of thousands have been deceived.

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE DISSECTED

is an antidote for Christian Science. It is a book by A. D. SECTOR, which tells what Christian Science is, in the plainest of language. Mrs. Eddy is shown to be a conscious fraud and a conscienceless charlatan and pretender. The book contains 62 pages, neatly printed and bound.

Missouri Bible-school Notes.

The Sheffield church is one of the Kansas City missions that is on the rapid way to becoming self-sustaining, and it seems that two factors are largely responsible for this, namely, the efficient work of Mrs. T. A. Abbott and the wise leadership of Frank L. Bowen. Then, too, Sheffield is one of the missions that gives not only its full apportionment, but gives a good offering, and if other Missouri schools gave in proportion to thi little band there would be no begging for money. As a city evangelist, F. L. Bowen is very hard to match, and his success in the Kansas City work is remarkable. More: every mission in the city gives to our work under his encouragement.

Lafayette County came near to carrying off the county banner for organizing the greater number of new schools, the Lexington young people organizing two. This is the work that tells, and more of it must be done in the future, and if followed up with meetings in the fall the harvest will be garnered.

Cass County, under the wise leadership of County Superintendent J. H. Jones, again carries off the county banner, having organized the greatest number of new schools. But it will not be easily done if reports are true when another year rolls round.

Miami is one of the country towns that ought to be proud of itself and its church. The house from an architectural standpoint is a gem, while the interior is so arranged that every room in the building is one for utility, no mere ornamentation. So that the building is modern in every way. In this fine manifestation of man's devotion to righteousness our rally was held on one of the brightest, happiest days this spring, and for the rally, Geo. E. Prewitt, the efficient minister, and his coworkers had made every preparation. In the homes of Dr. Wheeler and Frank Burriss your servant had all the hospitality of Christian people, while meeting with the men of God who were always to the front in our work, brought additional happiness. Among the many attending the rally, for the attendance was very large, was dear old Bro. Vaughan, one of the first to bid your secretary Godspeed when I entered this work years ago. The Methodist brethren adjourned their school and came in a body to be with us, while other schools gave us their presence during the greater part of the day. Clarence J. Hayne is making a good superintendent, and George Prewitt is winning the hearts of the people. Not an offering was taken for our work, but the amount of the apportionment in full was handed your servant, with every expression of good will. The praises of the architect of the building, Mr. R. C. Ferguson, are being sung constantly by the Miami people, and well they may, for no house better suits the people than this, all things considered.

The Second, St. Louis, is having remarkable success under the guidance of W. D. Pittman, and the service of so many devoted men and women of the Lord; and when clear from debt, will do great things for God in North St. Louis. I love to be with such and help them in the work, but to my surprise Irving McGown and other good friends gave to me also. Their school reaches the very class that we ought to save and their success is telling for good. H. F. DAVIS.

The Acme.... Smelting and Refining Company

Offers to Investors for a Short Time Unequaled Advantages.

IT IS A WELL-KNOWN FACT

That a custom smelter, properly equipped and operated, is the most certain source of revenue in the mining business

ITS SUCCESS

Is not contingent upon the output of any one mine or group of mines, but draws its support from a large number of mines in the district where it is located. There are 100 producing and paying mines within a convenient distance of our smelter site and at least 200 more would be developed if there was a custom smelter conveniently located to which ore could be shipped for treatment.

A CUSTOM SMELTER

Bears the same relation to mining that a grist mill does to an agricultural district, with the profits greatly in favor of a custom smelter. The usual net profits of a custom smelter are about $3.00 per ton.

WE HAVE GIVEN YEARS

Of careful study to our plans and know that we are warranted in our undertaking—the erection of a custom smelting plant. Risks which exist in all ordinary mining operations have been carefully eliminated from our plans. We have water, fluxes, an inexhaustible supply of ore and a clear field.

WE CONTRACT NO DEBTS. OUR MOTTO IS: CASH or NOTHING.

A CUSTOM SMELTER HAS THESE ADVANTAGES OVER ALL KINDS OF COMMERCIAL BUSINESS:

1. The product of a smelter invariably sells for cash.
2. The ore smelted is ample security for the expense of smelting.
3. Profits are always large, often reaching 50 per cent. annually on the par value of the stock.
4. Charges for smelting are always collected before the "matte" or refined ore is delivered from the smelter.
5. A custom smelter has no bad debts.
6. A gold smelter's out-put never fluctuates in value.
7. A gold smelter is absolutely independent of any financial stringency, business stagnation, politica disturbance, or other calamity which jeopardizes all ordinary classes of investments.

Our Board of Directors is a Guarantee of Safety to all Investors.

—It is composed of

HON. C. C. COLE, Late Chief Justice of Iowa.
HON. WEBSTER STREET, Chief Justice of Arizona.
HON. EMIL GANZ, President of the National Bank of Arizona.
H. M CHAPMAN. Secretary of Phoenix and Maricopa County Board of Trade.
N. C. WILSON, Rarge and Successful Merchant.
CALVIN OGBURN, Evangelist.
T. T. POWERS, LL.B.

AMONG OUR STOCKHOLDERS are U. S. Senators and Members of Congress, Ex-Governors, High Naval Officers, College Presidents.

YOU ASSUME NO RISK

When investing in the stock of the Acme Smelting and Refining Company.

1. All the conditions are favorable for the erection and operation of a custom smelter.
2. The Board of Directors are all men of high moral and business standing.
3. The officers are all required to furnish bond.

The par value of the stock is $1.00 per share.

For a short time we are offering a limited amount of stock at 50 cents a share—one-half payable in cash, and balance in five equal monthly installments, or where the entire amount is paid in one payment 45 cents a share. Stock is issued full paid and non-assessable. Most respectfully,

College Commencements

Kentucky University Commencement.

The commencement exercises of Kentucky University convened just one week, beginning Wednesday night, June 6, and closing Thursday, June 14. Four of the literary societies, the Alethea, Cornelia, Philothean aud Periclean, held their public exhibitions on the evenings of June 6-9. It was not my fortune to witness any of them, but adequate and reliable testimony assures me that they were all of a high order of merit and witnessed by crowded audiences. On the evening of Sunday, June 10, Prof. C. L. Loos delivered the baccalaureate sermon to the class of 1900, in the Central Church, which was filled to overflowing with an audience representative of the best of the city of Lexington and many visitors. His theme was "Quit You Like Men—Be Strong," and the speaker seemed in the prime of his vitality and power as he poured the great thought into the souls of his hearers. On Monday morning was the annual meeting of the board of trustees of the College of the Bible and at night the exhibition of the Philensebian Society.

Tuesday morning the exercises of the College of the Bible took place. Morrison Hall was filled and the large platform was filled with the largest class but one which has ever been graduated from this institution, twenty-four in number. The graduates came from six of the United States, and one each from Australia, Nova Scotia and Canada. President McGarvey stated in presenting the diplomas, that the average age of the class was 26 years. This would not have been the guess of the onlooker. There must have been one or two men among them to draw the average up to themselves. But it was a mature, manly and scholarly group of young men and full of promise in appearance and character for good work in the world, which will honor their Alma Mater. The addresses corroborated this conclusion, for they were able and thoughtful, well-delivered and forceful. The salutatory was delivered by W. J. Shelburne, of Virginia; the valedictory, by O. L. Trahern, of Kentucky, who was also valedictorian of the College of Arts and the Honor man. Orations by L. D. Anderson and J. H. Coil, both of Missouri, and the presentation of diplomas by President J. W. McGarvey made up the program, which was carried through with commendable promptness and "go." The year has been a very prosperous one for this college. I have not learned the exact number of matriculates for the past session, but understand that it was something like 130. Prof. S. M. Jefferson has been made a professor in this college, taking the chair of Psychology and Philosophy, Prof. J. C. Krites retiring. John T. Hawkins, one of the most beloved and esteemed of Kentucky preachers, has been put in the field as financial agent to increase the endowment of the institution and it is confidently expected that he will make this work a succes. On the evening of June 12 was the exhibition of the Cecropian Society and on the next day the Class Day exercises of the College of Arts and at night the annual meeting of the society of Alumni.

On Thursday, June 14, the commencement exercises of the College of Arts held the field. The exercises were presided over by Prof. A. R. Milligan who, since the resignation of President Cave, has been acting as president of the institution. It was an ideal commencement exercise. Prof. Milligan, while a man of modest and unassuming manner, is a most capable administrator and a cultured and scholarly speaker. He presided with grace, promptness and decision and his habits o f order and good taste had left their impress in every step of the performance. The graduating class of nineteen made a fine appearance on the stage, two of them young ladies. Six states of the Union were represented and two were from Canada, while New Zealand had one representative. Buckner Woodford, of Paris, Ky., was salutatorian, and O. L. Trahern, of Hopkinsville, Ky., valedictorian. The other addresses were five in number, and were all well delivered, clear in thought and compact in structure. There is a great improvement over the old college oration ideal in their addresses. They are less verbose and grandiloquent, less ornate and bombastic than in the good old days, and more timely, forceful and brief. Mention should especialy be made of the fine valedictory address of Mr. Trahern, which was a strong and telling treatment of the great evolution of individual liberty in humanity's history, very grateful and acceptable in place of the old sugar candy and flowers confection which we were wont to receive on such occasions in the past. Also, noticeable was the address of Miss Mary Allison, on "Beauty, Transient and Eternal," delivered with delightful clearness and full of fine thought, and the essay of Miss Mary H. Fairhurst, a daughter of Prof. A. Fairhurst of the university. If the ladies will all speak in public with such clear, distinct articulation and self-possession as did these young ladies, I think the last objection to woman speaking in public will vanish. Degrees were conferred on the nineteen graduates in these courses: Bachelor of Literature, 4; Bachelor of Arts, 10; Master of Arts, 4. A number of special course certificates were also given showing an unusual degree of persistence of scholarly ambition in the class of 1900. Honorary degrees were also conferred on J. B. Jones, Fulton, Mo.; W. S. Jones, Memphis, Tenn.; C. P. Williamson, Atlanta, Ga.; A. M. and J. O. McReynolds, Dallas, Tex.; M. S. Judge, J. Willis Bonner, Nashville, Tenn., LL. D.

Prof. Milligan in his address on presenting the diplomas spoke most hopefully of the condition and prospects of the university, stating that the year had been one of the most prosperous in the history of the university, more than 1,000 matriculates having been enrolled in the colleges and schools, of which there are five in the university: the College of Liberal Arts, College of the Bible, Medical Department, Normal College and Commercial College. The next session opens second Thursday in September, 1900. W. J. Loos.

Woodland College.

Woodland College is located at Independence, Mo. This makes the school convenient to all points of the compass, since Independence is a suburb of Kansas City, and this city is at the meeting of the ways both of tranportation and communication. Woodland was chartered in 1870 and has now about thirty years of encouraging history to commend it to the public. In this sense it is an old school, but it is new in the sense that it has modern methods, helps, appliances. In the matter of human development it believes intellectual education is good; moral education is better; that the union of the two is best—the moral including the spiritual; that the life of Christ is the best moral instruction.

Woodland College is well outfitted with apparatus, models, charts, library, and other helps that interest the young mind in making its way into new and unknown fields.

It has various departments of work: collegiate, preparatory, music, art, elocution, language, science, history, Bible, book keeping.

The collegiate course of study is four years.

The Alumni now numbers two hundred and eleven.

There have gone out into society with what of culture the college was able to give them, and with the general Christian learning which they received from this institution, have become active workers in the various avenues of life.

Woodland confers no degrees, but gives a certificate to those who have completed the course of study. Woodland does not aim to fit a student for any other school than the school of life.

Daughters' College.

The writer had the pleasure and honor of preaching the baccalaureate sermon to the graduating class of Daughters' College, Fulton, Mo., Sunday, May 27. A perfect day greeted the world and an inspiring audience greeted the speaker. There were fifteen graduates, and their grades in the various studies of the curriculum spoke volumes for the application and industry of the students and the care and earnest labors of the teachers. This was my first visit, strangely enough, to this excellent school, and I was surprised, indeed, to find so large and splendid a structure as is the building occupied by the school. A number of repairs is needed as well as much new furniture and increased facilities for school work. I would that a number of our brethren possessing means could visit this school and realize what we have in the way of a foundation for a splendid school, and could personally inspect the fine work being done by Bro. Jones and his able colaborers. I am sure the time would soon come when money sufficient to pay all debts, thoroughly equip the school, and furnish an adequate endowment would be forthcoming; at least the effect upon myself was to quicken my interest in this noble institution and awaken the determination to work for it more faithfully in the future. Bro. Jones who, in the face of great difficulties, has conducted the school, personally attending to every department and detail of the work, instead of being compelled to take the field to solicit pay patronage to meet the expenses of the school, should be permitted to take a much-needed vacation. No man works harder than he does, and no one is more entitled to well-earned rest.

Fulton is a beautiful little city, the capital of the county, reminding one of the bluegrass regions of Kentucky. The citizens are cultured, enterprising and deeply interested in educational matters. It is a city of schools, having Daughters' College, Westminster and synodical schools of the Presbyterian Church, also Deaf and Dumb and Lunatic Asylums, state institutions. At the request of Bro. Frank I preached at the latter institution in the afternoon and went thence to the Deaf and Dumb school to hear him deliver an excellent address to its graduates. I had the pleasure of meeting Dr. Wray, superintendent of the Lunatic Asylum. and Mr. MacKee and excellent wife of the Deaf and Dumb Asylum. At night Bro. Frank delivered an address at the Christian Church to the undergraduates of Daughters' College. He is doing a fine work at Fulton. I heard many kind words spoken of him and his most excellent wife. The church building has been repaired throughout and presents a neat and attractive appearance, and new life has been infused into every department of the work.

I was entertained at the college and shall long remember the generous hospitality and many kindnesses shown me by Bro. Jones and his estimable wife, and all the inmates of this school, reminding one more of a happy family than a boarding school. J. P. Pinkerton.

Butler College Commencement.

Just fifty years ago the state of Indiana granted a charter for an educational institution to be known as the Northwestern Christian University. Twenty-three years ago this name was changed to Butler University. Few institutions are as closely united with the people of Indiana or with the churches of the Disciples by their past associations as is this institution. Many of the leaders of the restoration movement were identified with its early history. The influence, the wealth and the business sagacity of Ovid Butler, the eloquence and zeal of John O'Kane in the first canvass for subscriptions, the work of Elijah Goodwin, the largeness of heart and breadth of view of O. A. Burgess gave it shape in its formative years. Others, less widely known, but deeply esteemed, have put into it much of their life—such men and women as Catherine Merrill, A. R. Benton and David Starr Jordan. To those who know of the record of Butler College the commencement season is full of suggestions from the lives of its founders. To many these associations of the past are a pleasant feature of the ceremonies incident to the closing of the college year.

The end of the forty-fifth session of Butler College finds her, as hitherto, standing on a firm financial basis, maintaining a high standard of scholarship and doing a quiet but solid work. Her endowment of over $250,000, though not as large as it ought to be, yet enables her to meet all her obligations, and to assure the student of first-class facilities. Her faculty is changed considerably since last year by the withdrawal of Hugh Miller to accept a position at Columbus, of W. E. Garrison to become one of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST'S editorial staff, of Dr. Jink, of W. M. Thrasher and Miss Kies, the two last of whom were compelled by ill health to give up their work. The places vacant have been filled by the appointment of Professors E. W. Abbott, C. B. Coleman, John McKee, S. A. Harker, W. F. Kelly and W. D. Howe. The total number of students enrolled in all departments of work during the year was 340, a considerable increase over the preceding year.

The exercises of commencement week were unusually successful. A long season of rainy weather gave place to bright, sunshiny days just in time to make Irvington, always pretty, appear at its best. The attendance at the numerous meetings was, almost without exception, very large. Many alumni were present, some from quite a distance. A large number of Christian ministers manifested by their presence the interest of the brotherhood throughout the state in the work of the college. The freshness, joyfulness and vigor which are seldom absent from such an occasion were pleasant to feel and delightful to live in for the few short days of the week.

The first announcement of the end of the year came, as usual, from outbreaks of class rivalry, serenades and escapades such as reveal a healthy college spirit. These were succeeded by the more formal exercises of commencement week proper, from June 14 to June 21. Among these latter were a very pleasant concert on Thursday evening by the Music Department, the Sophomore contest in oratory, the Senior Class exhibition, the exhibition of the Philokurian Literary Society, the president's reception, and interspersed at convenient intervals the final examinations. The winner of the Sophomore contest was Mr. H. L. Herod who, while engaged in college work, also ministers to the Second Christian Church (colored) of Indianapolis. The Senior exhibition consisted of music and a play translated from the German and entitled "The Secretary." The president's reception on Wednesday evening, June 19, was attended by many out-of-town guests and was altogether a delightful affair. Aside from commencement itself, perhaps the most important gatherings were the baccalaureate service in the chapel Sunday afternoon, the 17th, and the annual dinner of the Alumni Association at the Bates House Wednesday evening, the 20th. The former was rendered impressive by the loftiness and beauty of the sentiment of President Butler's sermon, the latter by the renewal of the old associations of college life; both were rich in friendliness, sympathy and tenderness peculiar to college life.

The commencement exercises were held Thursday morning, June 21st, in the college chapel. President Andrew S. Draper, of the University of Illinois, delivered the address to the graduating class. It was a forcible, masterly presentation of "The Scientific Advance." A full account of it, published in the commencement number of the University Brief at Irvington, will richly repay a careful reading. After the address President Jenkins of the University of Indiana conferred the degree of Bachelor of Arts upon the graduating class.

The honors of the Senior class were carried off by Miss May Griggs who, having attained the highest average grade throughout the course, was granted the diploma of the University of Chicago in accordance with the articles of affiliation between the University and Butler. By the affiliation, which in no way compromises the independence of Butler College, but simply guarantees that it will maintain the present standard of its work, three fellowships yielding free tuition at Chicago for three terms (the tuition fee ordinarily being $40 per term) were also awarded to members of the Senior class. The recipients were Mary C. Graham, Grace Frederick Gookin and Emsley W. Johnson.

The last event of commencement week was the triennial meeting of the stockholders of the college for the election of the board of directors. Four vacancies, caused by the death of A. M. Atkinson, and by the removal from the state of Addison Harris, J. E. Pounds and Burris A. Jenkins, who takes up his work in Buffalo July 1st, were filled by the election of William Mullendore, Franklin; W. D. Starr, Noblesville; A. B. Philputt, Indianapolis; Lewis Morgan, Indianapolis. With this meeting the college doors were closed, to be opened again for the summer schools on June 27.

C. B. COLEMAN.

Commencement at Drake University.

Drake University had a commencement that gladdens the heart of lovers of our educational work.

There was a new auditorium to dedicate, the largest college assembly room in the state. Including the stage it will seat 1,500. Ex-Gov. F. M. Drake was on hand to present the keys and turn his generous gift over to the university. Mr. R. C. Stevenson, of Iowa City, the donor of $2,500 to put in the gallery was also present to share in the joy.

The speakers were all able and satisfactory. Geo. H. Combs captured all hearts in his baccalaureate address. Col. C. G. Saunders, of the class of '86, the well-known lawyer of Council Bluffs, delivered the dedicatory oration, and it came from a full heart, rejoicing in the progress of his Alma Mater. Dr. B. A. Hinsdale, of Michigan University, gave a profound and scholarly address on Commencement Day.

The senior class in the College of Letters and Science, in the College of the Bible, in the Normal Department, in the College of Oratory and in Music had each a night and a fine program to delight the large audience that filled the auditorium on every occasion

More than a hundred of the Alumni were back and their banquet at the Savery was the climax and closing ceremony of the work.

It was a commencement calculated to confirm the faith of Drake's friends in the great future possible to the institution.

Ex-Gov. Drake announced the gift of $25,000 by Edwin J. and Mary Toof, to endow a chair in the Bible College. This makes $150,000 of good endowment. It is hoped that $100,000 will be added to this the coming year. Gov. Drake offers to give $25,000 of this. He will be glad to be called on for it before next June, and that would make $75,000 paid over by him within eighteen months.

Clinton Lockhart, Ph. D., and O. B. Fallis, Ph. D., will be valuable accessions for the coming year. Some changes will probably take place in the music department, but all plans look to enlargement and progress.

As usual in such cases the $65,000 was not raised in time to stop interest quick enough to make the amount sufficient to clear off all indebtness. It is the purpose to add $15,000 this year to the emergency fund. W. B. CRAIG.

Eugene Divinity School.

FIFTH ANNUAL COMMENCEMENT.

June 3, 1900, is a notable day in the history of the Eugene Divinity School. On that day was graduated the first class. One student, G. S. O. Humbert, completed the B. D. course, and the Misses Mary and Margaret Daisley, Mrs. Clara Essen, Leon D. Green and Harry Benton completed the English Bible course. Bro. Humbert will move to Corvallis in August to take charge of the work in that important center. Corvallis is the seat of the State Agricultural College. Brethren Green and Benton, and Sister Essen, will likely pursue graduate studies next year. The Misses Daisley will return their homes in Washington.

After Dean Saunderson preached the baccalaureate sermon six young men, all students, were ordained to the ministry. Messrs. John Handsaker, Harry Benton, W. T. Matlock, E. F. Beaudreau, F. E. Billington and E. M. Patterson. The policy adopted by the school is to recommend no one for ordination who has not had at least two years' work in the school and has the approval of at least three churches.

The diplomas were conferred on June 4 by Dean Sanderson. The address before the school was given by President P. L. Campbell, son of the late F. F. Campbell, of the Oregon State Normal School at Monmouth, Ore. Before President Campbell's address Dr. Frank Strong, President of the State University, which is also located at Eugene, spoke hearty words of appreciation of the work done by the school. President Strong is a scholarly Christian man, a member of the Baptist Church. He said that the policy of the University of Oregon was to keep out all teaching of science or philosophy, so called, which would cause any one to lose faith in the Word of God. This sentiment was roundly cheered. Dr. Strong has a firm hold on the Christian people of Oregon.

On June 7 Dean Sanderson left for a tour of the Holy Land. He expects to sail from Montreal on the 16th, and visit England, Scotland, France, Switzerland, Italy, Egypt and Palestine. He goes that he may be better fitted for work in the school. He will return in time for the opening of school.

The enrollment of the school for the present year was 28, four being nonresident. This is the largest yet reported. The library is growing and contains now nearly 1,000 volumes. The outlook for next year is brighter than ever. A number of new students are expected.

The school is proving a factor in the evangelization of Oregon. Already about 25 points are being supplied by the students.

JOHN J. HANDSAKER.

Eureka's Record.

Eureka College is located in the midst of one of the most prosperous sections of that imperial state, Illinois. A current writer has written its record briefly as follows:

"Eureka College is now half a century old. The aim of its founders was to establish a college where rich and poor alike might enjoy all the privileges of a higher Christian education. There have been nearly 500 graduates. Forty-six of this number have died and the remainder are scattered over twenty-eight states of the Union. Of the whole number 13 have been or now are editors, 20, physicians; 31, lawyers; 33, business men; 79, teachers, and 108, ministers. There are thousands of others who are not graduates, but have received a training here that has enabled them to take useful and honorable part in the work of the world. The usefulness of any institution is determined in large measure by the kind of work done by the men and women trained there. It is gratifying to know that such a large per cent. of the representatives of Eureka College have been successful in the highest sense of the word. The life of the most of these has been on the side of truth and righteousness. The interest in missions in the college the past few years has been strong. Four graduates are now in Cuba, one in Honolulu, two are soon to sail for Japan. E. E. Faris, in Africa, represnts Eureka. Two teachers in the Southern Christian Institute, Edwards, Miss., were recently selected from the present student body."

The following language quoted from Eureka's current catalogue is in point:

"The atmosphere of an institution is of supreme moment. Men go to distant lands to find congenial atmospheres in which to cultivate their artistic, philosophic or ethical faculties. Eureka College has been exceedingly careful, during her whole existence, to provide the best environment for her students—the best soil and atmosphere for the growth and maturity of the seeds of right-thinking and right-living. That she has been successful in this the character and work of the great body of her Alumni and other students abundantly attest. She aims at high scholarship, but does not neglect the weightier matter of high character."

A FRIEND.

Cotner University.

Cotner University is located five miles east of Lincoln, the capital city of Nebraska, upon a beautiful rise of ground. The commodious buildings and twenty-acre campus make the most attractive educational property in the entire state. The university opened in 1889 and has operated continually ever since. The graduates are numbered among the foremost workers in our great brotherhood, both at home and abroad. At the present writing President W. P. Aylsworth is on his way to Europe, where he goes for rest and to study the universities of that continent with the view of better equipping himself for his responsible work, both as an educational leader and teacher of Hebrew and general literature.

The recent commencement, which was a jubilee gathering, was participated in by B. J. Radford, of Eureka, Ill., Sumner T. Martin, of Omaha, Neb., and Andrew D. Harmon, of St. Paul, Minn.

The university has passed the whirlpool of debt and now, being entirely free, enters upon a future that is bright with promise. The two colleges, three schools and four departments are ably presided over by William P. Aylsworth, one of our most competent and consecrated college men. He has maintained such a high grade of work, through the assistance of an able faculty, that graduates go with full credit to our state university and other institutions for graduate work.

It is the purpose of the board of trustees and president to maintain all the present development, and make the work first-class in every particular, and at the same time conduct the work on a cash basis.

As our brotherhood has accomplished the splendid work of clearing the property, they are taking new interest, as is witnessed by the summer school now in session and the promise of a decided increase in attendance next year.

Cotner University offers good and valuable opportunities for those who come to make the best possible preparation for life's work.

Christian College.

This college, located at Columbia, Mo., has just closed the most successful year of its history. It is now entering upon its Jubilee Year, and as the issue of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST for July 12th will be a Christian College jubilee number, we need say little more at present than call the attention of its readers to the advertisement of this college, to be found in another column. A college that has lived fifty years, and been a decided success all the time, has certainly won the right to the highest consideration of the public, without any special commendation from its friends. Christian College speaks for itself in a long and eminently successful history. Those who have daughters or wards to educate will certainly not fail to consider the claims of the most promising and best equipped female college in the Southwest. The new dormitory buildings make it a most desirable home, while its splendid faculty and wise management assure the most efficient work in its academic training as well as in its special departments of Music, Art and Elocution.

MRS. W. T. MOORE.

Columbia, Mo.

College of the Bible, Lexington, Kentucky.

Yesterday was the thirty-fifth annual commencement day of the College of the Bible. Twenty-four young men received diplomas showing that they had completed the four years' course of study prescribed by this institution in preparing one to preach the gospel of Christ. They have spent four years in studying the Bible historically, exegetically, critically. Also Christian doctrine, church history, the laws of exegesis, hermaneutics and homiletics, with other studies necessary to prepare the preanher of the gospel for his work. Two of this class were graduates in the classical course, which requires one to have the degree of Bachelor of Arts from some reputable college and to have taken two years in the study of the Hebrew language and literature. One who faithfully pursues this course of study is about as well equipped for the work of the ministry as a college can equip him. This class were all mature men, the average of their ages being twenty-six years. They have all had some experience in the active work of the ministry. Eight of them are from Kentucky, five from Missouri, two from Indiana, two from Illinois, two from Tennessee, two from Virginia and three from the Queen's Dominion.

The college is greatly in need of endowment. It is surprising what a wonderful work has been done with such meager endowment. This could only have been accomplished by the personal sacrifice of the professors; but the time has now come when we should adequately endow this institution and make of it a college for the education of men for the ministry such as is worthy of a great religious body; one where any one wishing to prepare for the ministry of the Word can be as fully equipped as he could by attending institutions where he will get as much error as truth. Why should not our people concentrate their efforts in establishing such a school? The College of the Bible at Lexington has shown herself worthy of the confidence and support of this brotherhood by her work in the past. Her graduates are filling many of the most responsible stations all over the earth, in college professorships, pulpit work, mission work in every phase. An effort is now making to sufficiently endow this college, and will not those who have been blessed with this world's goods, or to put it scripturally, who have been entrusted with their Lord's goods, use them in this work of the Lord? We are seeking to find a thousand persons who will give twenty dollars a year for five years. Will you be one?

J. T. HAWKINS.

Central Christian College.

This thriving institution is located at Albany, Mo., in what is perhaps the richest territory of the brotherhood. Northwest Missouri has more members of the Christian Church to the square mile than any other country in the world. Albany is a beautiful and healthful city of 3,000 inhabitants. It has no saloons and is far above the average town in morals and religion.

President J. W. Ellis brings to the college the ripe fruits of many years spent in study and in teaching. His specialty will be Old Testament literature, and in this department he is well known as a most thorough scholar. Associated with him are a faculty of consecrated and capable professors, each of them a specialist in his department.

The distinctive feature of Central Christian College is its strong course in the Bible and in sacred literature. For two years the Bible is made a daily class book, and throughout the entire course it is given a prominent place. The instructors are members of the Christian Church, and if students are not such when they enroll, most of them are when they leave. Great care is exercised in order to keep the moral environments pure. There is no hazing, no football, no dancing, and yet it would be difficult to find a happier body of students.

The college courses include the ministerial, philosophical, classical, English Bible, English, commercial, art, shorthand and music, vocal and instrument. Expenses are very low. First-class table board with furnished rooms, fuel and light from $2.50 to $3.00 per week. Special arrangements may be made for boarding in first-class families if application is made early.

President Ellis will cheerfully furnish any desired information about matters pertaining to the college.

D. R. DUNGAN, A. M., LL. D., President.

Northern Indiana Normal College.

The following paragraph from the pen of G. A. Hoffmann in a recent number of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST is worthy of a place in our educational number.

"The one great interest of the town is the Northern Indiana Normal College. This institution was founded by its president, H C. Brown, twenty-seven years ago. The president is an active elder in the church here. Twenty years ago Prof. O. P. Kinsey became associated with Pres. Brown and the two men have built up the most wonderful school of its kind in America. It matriculates from 3,000 to 3,500 students per annum, has an average attendance of over 2,000 the year round, never closes its doors for vacation and has students from every state in the union. The Normal College has a faculty of sixty to seventy professors and teachers, seven or eight splendid buildings, has in construction now an additional $50,000 scientific building and does all this without endowment, state aid or income from any other source except tuition from its students. Students expenses, too, are at a minimum. This is the largest normal college in the world, and it has been built up, sustained and is being supported by the funds of its own production. Here are departments of art, music, science, commerce, pedagody, law, pharmacy, classics, and everything necessary to fit a young man or lady for the activities of life."

Daughters College.

The cut of this enterprising institution, which appears elsewhere in this educational issue, in no way aggregates the beauty and attractiveness of the comparatively new buildings. For ten years this imposing structure has met the just requirements of an appreciative patronage. The comfort, health and convenience of a hundred young ladies, superintended and directed by an ample corps of teachers, have been secured within this spacious building. Gratuitous physical culture brings robust health within the reach of all who will seek it as the pearl of great price.

In the future, as in the past, the school will articulate with truth, righteousness, self-helpfulness, and the great university of common sense. False, unreal and extravagant ideals of life will be eschewed. The supreme end for which the school exists will continue to dominate the teaching and discipline of the pupils. The formation of character will be the goal towards which all efforts will tend.

Daughters College, like its predecessor, exists to do good. With no adequate endowment it must rely upon the benevolence of the generous-hearted, but it will seek the patronage of those who, like our Lord, are here, not to be ministered unto, but to minister and to do good. Our experience amply demonstrates the fact that rich and poor can each secure the best results by being educated side by side.

The curriculum will prepare graduates to enter life competent to meet the obstacles that beset its pathway. They will be self-supporting. In thoroughness, efficiency and completeness the school will fall not one whit behind sister institutions.

It points with laudible pride to the fact that its enrollment during the past ten years has reached more than one thousand. It thanks God that it has been able to give gratuitous instruction to one hundred and eighty boarding pupils, aided to some extent three hundred and twenty-six and enrolled as paying pupils six hundred and twenty-three.

Daughters College rejoices in the overruling providence of God. Whatever be the trials hereafter in store, it looks to him as the chief protector. Under his direction it can never fail. With his rich blessings it will live to bless the centuries.

Female Orphan School.

The Female Orphan School at Camden Point is about to enter upon the 29th year of its existence.

Under the management of President A. O. Riall the year just passed was most encouraging, the enrollment being 109, with the attendance well up to the enrollment. The number of graduates was eighteen, the largest number in the twenty eight years.

This school grew out of a need for an institution which would afford the orphaned daughters of the church opportunity for thorough education. In providing for these, however, it was not necessary to exclude others who stood in need of such instruction as was here provided, hence conditions were named providing for the admission of four classes of young women as may be seen by reference to the advertisement in another column.

The location of the school is in every way desirable. Twelve acres are embraced in the campus. The building is a commodious brick structure, comparatively new, having been erected in 1890, on the site of the original building which was destroyed by fire. Accommodations are ample for one hundred boarding pupils.

The school's prospects are bright. The accommodations, the equipment, the environment and the instruction are such as to insure a large measure of success for the oncoming year.

Book Notes.

"How to Understand and Use the Bible" is the title of a new book by J. H. Bryan, just issued by the Christian Publishing Company. It is a book that can hardly be too highly commended. It will be found valuable by the yound Disciple and the veteran Christian, by the Christian Endeavorer and the Sunday-school teacher, by the preacher and the lay member. It contains 116 pages, is neatly bound in cloth and the price is fifty cents.

"Christian Science Dissected" is having a very large sale. This is small wonder, for the book is forcible, direct, practical and instructive, and is at the same time breezy and entertaining. It is receiving very flattering press notices and is highly commended by prominent physicians and preachers. Price, twenty-five cents.

We have sold thousands of copies of Alexander Campbell's works during the past few months, and the demand continues. Our wholesale reduction of the prices of these books we believe the most noteworthy incident in the history of the literature of the Disciples of Christ. Elsewhere in the issue will be found a detailed list of these volumes, with price list and our special offer for the entire Campbell library.

One hundred thousand copies of Silver and Gold have already been sold, and it now looks as though we would be able to announce by the end of the present year, that two hundred thousand copies of this splendid song book has been sold. If your church or Sunday school is contemplating the purchase of new books we ask that you examine "Silver and Gold." If you will do that we will have no fears about receiving your order. "Silver and Gold" sells itself whenever carefully examined.

We still have left a faw copies of the "Map of the Travels of Jesus," by A. P. Stout. This map is an essential aid in properly teaching the Sunday-school lessons for twelve months yet to come. The map has sold for $5.00, but we are closing out our present stock for $3.00. The map is six feet long, three feet wide, cloth mounted, varnished, placed on rollers, all ready to hang up in your Sunday-school room. We prepay charges, mail or express.

"Wheeling Through Europe," by W. E. Garrison, is just the book you want to take with you on a vacation trip, or to buy for summer reading. There is a smile on every page, a hearty laugh on a great many pages and much interesting and valuable information in every chapter. The book is illustrated with half-tone plates made from photographs taken by the author. It is handsomely bound in cloth and gilt, and sells for one dollar. Address

NOTE.—An important book will be shortly isssued by the Abbey Press, 114 Fifth Avenue, New York. It is entitled "What is the Matter With the Church?" and is by the Rev. Frederick Stanley Root. Dr. Root deals with pessimistic facts in an optimistic spirit, and whilst strongly indicting the traditional church, he shows that faithful are the wounds of a friend. There is promise of very considerable discussion arising from the contents of this book, the facts of which have been marshaled together with considerable skill and cleverness.

Fifth District Convention of Illinois.

The seventh annual convention of the fifth district met at Virden, June 5-7. One hundred delegates were in attendance.

Reports showed progress all along the line.

The convention began with the C. W. B. M. session on Tuesday afternoon, which was enthusiastic from the moment the convention was called to order until the session closed in the evening.

Miss Adelaide Gail Frost, of India, was heartily greeted and her afternoon talk and evening addresses were enjoyed by all. May God bless her in her great work.

Miss Anna M. Hale, the state secretary, was with us and as usual gave an impressive address.

Pres. W. W. Weedon, of Williamsville, opened the convention on Wednesday morning. One very pleasant feature of the program was that nearly every one was present to take his part. Bro. J. E. Lynn, of Springfield, with maps and charts made a strong presentation of his theme: "Care for the Church in Illinois." Bro. Lynn's church has given $160 for state missions this year and his county (Sangamon) has raised over half the amount contributed in this district. The brethren are alive in that county and intend to have a contribution from every church before the state convention at Bloomington, October 2-5.

The secretary's report showed a total of $444.42 raised in the district for state work, an increase $37.72 over last year. There are $113.50 to the credit of the district with which to begin the work of the next year. The claims of Eureka College were ably presented by N. S. Haynes, of Eureka.

The Wednesday evening service was made much more interesting by the splendid singing of the male quartette of the Springfield Church.

Bro. E. O. Sharpe, of Girard, gave an able address on "Missions as Related to Our Plea" and was followed by an address on labor: "Public and Private Rights," by W. W. Hopkins, of St. Louis, which was capable of provoking thought and leading all into many new lines of investigation.

We believe that a great and enterprising body like the Disciples of Christ should be abreast of the times on the latest developments of the labor question, and such addresses as Bro. Hopkins' at our conventions will keep us at the front.

Before the close of the convention on Thursday morning talks were made by J. M. Francis, of Palmyra, and W. W. Weedon concerning the life and works of that noble man of God, H. W. Everest, who has recently gone to his reward, and a touching prayer was made by Bro. Francis in thanksgiving to God who had sent us such a great man and who might help us to be useful like him.

The convention closed Thursday noon with a few parting words and impressive benediction by J. A. Boulton, the venerable elder of the Virden Church. All went home feeling renewed in their spiritual minds and more ready to do the Masters' work.

Bro. Guy B. Williamson, of St. Louis, rendered valuable assistance throughout the convention by leading the song service.

All who would like to have a full report of the convention may get it by sending five cents to the Virden Reporter for a copy of the paper containing the report. PAUL H CASTLE, Dist. Sec.

Gainesville, June 19.—We have been in the big tabernacle two weeks and two days with 93 added to date. The number added will pass 100 to-night. Lack 39 only of having 1,000 converts since Jan. 1, 1900. The Methodists have hustled in their state evangelist and built a tabernacle in four days, two blocks from ours, and all the churches but one have united in a union meeting. The union meeting was undreamed of on their part when I came here. But the loyal band of Christians, headed by J. B. Sweeney, are all at it and always at it, and we have great audiences of the thinking people largely, of the place, and for four days our converts have all been heads of families and most all of the additions before were also.—CHAS. REIGN SCOVILLE.

Mystical Babylon.

GRACE PEARL BRONAUGH.

The prophets looked forth from the valley of vision,
Looked forth to the uttermost parts of the earth;
They saw from a distance the pastures of elysian,
Of Canaan the promised, they saw the Lord's birth;
The fall of the Cities of Sin, the desertion
Of Tyre and of Sidon, and Nineveh's fate,
Dark Egypt's decadence, the Jewish dispersion,
The old desolation of Babylon the Great.
They saw our Lord's death on the cross and foretold it,
They saw the destruction that heaven would send;
The scroll of the future they took, they unrolled it,
The prophets looked forth to the end.
O, Mystical Babylon, couldst thou but waken!
O, couldst thou but know what is waiting for thee!
For thou shalt be utterly lost and forsaken,
Be lost like the stone that is cast in the sea.
O, Babylon, Babylon, seven-hilled city!
The tale of thy trouble the prophets have told.
The eyes of the faithful shall view thee in pity
When thou shalt have fallen like Babylon of old!

Romance and Romanticism—III.

MARY E. WARE.

These legends are all beautiful in themselves, but they were told and retold so often that the people tired of them and were ready to laugh or to cry, while reading Cervantes' masterpiece, Don Quiote, the greatest satire ever written about these legends.

In the meanwhile, the Renaissance did away with these ideal and established healthier motives for action. Through its influence literature became less symbolic, and more realistic.

The Renaissance took a peculiar turn in Germany. It was handicapped by theology and humanism. The influence of theology was to confine all litearary productions to biblical subjects. The humanists valued only knowledge that was based upon the classics, or humanities; this separated the cultured from the uncultured. They forsook their native tongue; this separated the upper classes from the lower classes.

To these causes may be added the horrors of religious wars. Germany was almost bled to death to give Europe religious freedom. One historian says: "At the close of the Thirty Years' War, 1648, Germany might be compared to a graveyard. Financially, socially, intellectually, and in a sense morally the country was ruined."

Amid such conditions literary originality passed out of the land. French and Italian ideals crept in and possessed themselves of what remained. The liberty-loving Germans soon asserted themselves. A reaction took place. Lessing, Herder and Weiland introduced the classical period.

Still, there were many restless spirits in Germany not ready for this high standard of form in art and literature. These led a revolt known in the literary world as the "Storm and Stress" period. It was a protest against pedantry, but it was crude, erratic, and Bohemian in the extreme. Its watchword, liberty, degenerated into license. So widespread was its influence that even Goethe and Schiller were affected by it in their youth, but as they grew older and wiser they returned to their classical serenity.

There was no united Germany; Bismarck was not yet. The days were full of political trouble. Scholars naturally became retrospective. They looked back to the Middle Ages, to the time of Otto and Charlemagne, and the brilliant period of the Hohenstauffen emperors, when the grand old Gothic cathedrals were building, and when Germany was a nation among nations. The effort to revive the thought expressed in the art and literture of this period gave birth to the German Romanticism.

It was the prevailing thought, to put it in round numbers, from 1770 to 1830. Jena was its first abiding-place. The brothers Schlegel and their friends Tiech, Novalis and Wachenroder were its early guardians.

They used the term romantic to refer particularly to the 12th and 13th centuries when the Provencal troubadours were charming all Europe with exquisite lyrics. Their leading principles may be summed up in these words: They believed in uniting practical life with art and literature; in the restoration of the catholicism of the Middle Ages, and in the study of the romance as opposed to the classic.

Underlying these principles there was an element of mysticism, an excessive use of symbolism, a tendency to melancholy and a love for the foreign, the extraordinary, and even supernatural.

"Nature and mind are one," they said. "Every phenomenon of nature is the incorporation of an idea." Sentiment and thought were given to landscapes. The outer world was made to take on the color of a man's moods.

These are simply the characteristics of the romantic school in its early days. As time passed by they were modified and broadened in many respects. The school soon passed the borders of Germany and numbered its disciples in every country in Europe. It almost threatened death to the native literature of Russia. "Jouhovsky," says a Russian critic, "did not translate one or another German poet. He translated the German Romanticism into Russian." It was not until the time of Pushkin and Gogol that Russia turned to her own national thought and experience for the material for her literary productions.

In Sweden there were the "Old Romantic school" and the "New Romantic school" until the more patriotic scholars calling themselves "Goths" organized to put both down and to encourage and uphold the Swedish models and ideals.

Denmark, who for a century before had not only used the German language at her court, but had even printed her newspapers in it, was simply delighted to accept and carry out the principles of Romanticism.

When Sir Walter Scott had not yet reached his majority he attended a lecture in which this German school of thought was described. He datermined there and then that he would master the German language that he might fully understand Romanticism. The result of this study was the productions, "Lay of the Last Minstrel," "Marmion," the "Lady of the Lake," "Rob Roy," "The Talisman," "Ivanhoe" and all of those dramatic novels which present such stately, vivid pictures of medieval times.

The same movement influenced Bulwer to write "Harold" and the "Last of the Barons:" it took hold of the poets' minds and gave tone and color to many of Wordsworth's and Burns' poems.

Romanticism had almost as great an influence in France the first three decades of the past century. This bringing out of the ordinary individual in literature caused Rousseau to write "New Heloise," Chateaubriand, "Atala," and Madam De Stael, "Corinne." The elder Dumas' works are full of this thought, and even Victor Hugo's early writings are colored by it. It even invaded the stately domains of history and affected the writings of Thierry and Michelet. Its far-off waves reached the American shore and touched Cooper's "Spy."

A faint suggestion of Romanticism runs through the pages of "When Knighthood was in Flower," and "Richard Carvel."

The work of the German Romanticism is o'er. If we have read their books aright it was a protest making form the end of literary production; a plea for the natural, the human, yea, the divine in art and literature. In their work they swing as far to one extreme as the devotees of the Renaissance did to the other. For form in the highest sense of the word is just as essential to literature as it is to statuary. A piece of statuary is valued just in the proportion that the form is subordinated to the thought to be expressed; so it is in literature.

It has been my happy privilege to watch our magnificent city fountain by moonlight. As that great volume of water struggles upward with all of that grace and beauty of motion it seems no longer a fountain, but some great spirit struggling upward to its Creator. That beauty could not be were it not for the solid stone masonry without and perfect mechanical appliance within. So it is in literature; we must have the solid stone masonry of fact and experience, and the perfect mechanical appliance of structure and idiom of language. Then the great spirits are free to rise in all of their strength and beauty to read the thoughts of their Creator, to utter them, to write them—

"That they may touch the hearts of men
And lead them back to heaven again."

Light and Dark.

BY NELIA M'GAVACK.

God in his goodness and mercy
Opens the gates of light,
Sends the morn's glittering sunbeams
Into the silent night;
Types of His love never-ending,
Light shining bright and clear,
Let thy Light shine to my soul-depths;
Chase out each doubt and fear.

God in his goodness and mercy
Curtains the skies with night,
Fold upon fold of thick darkness,
Shutting away the light;
Type of His love like a mantle
Folding me close to His side,
Shutting out all save His presence;
Thus would I ever abide.

Rare and Costly Bibles.

We are taught at our mother's knee that the Bible is the most precious of books, and that principle holds good in commercial as well as in spiritual affairs, in the auction room as well as in the nursery or the sanctuary. The highest price ever paid for a printed book was $24.750 for a Latin Psalter, printed by Faust & Schoeffer in 1457. The first use to which printing was put after the invention of movable type was to circulate as a public document a bull of Pope Nicholas V. offering indulgence to everybody who would aid the Christian king of Cyprus against the Turks. This handbill was dated Nov. 15, 1454, and several copies still exist. There is one in the British Museum.

The first book printed from movable type was what is known as the Mazarine Bible, by Gutenberg and Faust (or Fust, as it is sometimes spelled), which was issued Aug. 14, 1456. Only two or three copies of this, the greatest treasure of bibliography, are preserved, and one of them was sold at auction last year by the Earl of Ashburnham to Bernhart Quaritch, of London, for $19,360, the second highest price ever paid for a book. Lord Ashburnham paid $16,000 for it in 1892. James W. Ellsworth, formerly of Chicago, paid $14,000 for a copy some years ago, which formerly belonged to the Earl of Crawford. The copy in the British Museum was bought in 1825 for $2,520. The Earl of Gosford paid $19,250 his copy.

The first Bible with a date was printed in August, 1492, by Faust & Schoeffer, at Mayence, Germany, and but two copies are known. One in the British Museum was bought from the Duke of Sutherland in 1881 for $8,000. The other belongs to the Earl of Crawford, who paid $5,125 for it.

The first edition of the Bible printed in English was translated by Miles Coverdale, and copies have sold as high as $4,100. John Eliot's translation of the Bible into the Indian language, first published in 1632, has sold as high as $2,775. What is known as the Biblia Pauperum, so called because it was chained to a post in a public place, for the use of the poor, was printed from blocks in 1430. The latest copy sold brought $5,250. The first Latin Bible, printed in 1475, has sold at different times for $5,000, $7,125, $7,500 and $8,000. A Bible that belonged to Bishop Crammer, printed in 1559, sold as high as $5,550. A Bible that belonged to Martin Luther and afterwards became the property of the Earl of Essex, sold for $4,100.

A manuscript copy of the Bible that belonged to the Emperor Charlemagne, and was presented to him at the time of his coronation in the year 800, was offered some years ago for $60,000. The price was then reduced to 40,000, then to $32,500, and it was finally sold at auction for $7,500. It is now in the British Museum. St. Cuthbert's copy of the Gospels in manuscript, dating from the seventh century, is also in the British Museum, and was bought for $3,750. A manuscript copy of Homer's "Iliad" on vellum, the earliest known, cost $8,000.

A manuscript Bible of the ninth century was bought for $3,900 by Sir John Thorall, and Lord Crawford paid $2,860 for a similar copy of later date.

The most interesting collection of Bibles in the world is in the British and Foreign Bible Society, in Queen Victoria Street, London, although there are more ancient and valuable specimens in the British Museum. The best collection in the United States is in the Lenox Library, New York. The Bible Society in New York has a large variety of Bibles in all languages, which I understand are ultimately to be added to the Lenox collection. The finest private collection in the country belongs to Mr. S. Brainerd Pratt, of Boston.

There is a good collection of Bibles in the National Museum at Washington, and among others one of Cromwell's pocket Bibles, which he gave to every soldier in his army, with instructions to carry it in a pocket made especially for that purpose, in the waistcoat over the heart. It is not a complete Bible, but contains extracts from the Scriptures, which are especially applicable to war and to a soldier's life.

Thomas Jefferson's Bible, which is in the museum, is a scrapbook of texts from the evangelists cut out of an ordinary printed Bible and pasted in a book according to their historical sequences. On the margin are a number of annotations in Jefferson's handwriting. Two maps—one of Palestine and the other of the ancient world—are pasted in the front. The section of the Roman law under the authority of which Christ was crucified is quoted, also in his handwriting. It was Jefferson's purpose to have this arrangement of the Bible published for common use, after cutting out all contradictory and ambiguous passages.

In a letter to John Adams, dated Oct. 13, 1813, he says that he has cut up for his own use, "verse by verse, out of the printed book, all of the matter which is evidently Christ's, and describes it as "the most sublime and benevolent code of morals which has ever been offered to man."—William E. Curtis, in Chicago Record.

"They Say."

Have you heard of the terrible family "They,"
And the dreadful, venomous things they say?
Why, half the gossip under the sun,
If you trace it back, you will find begun
In that wretched House of "They."

A numerous family, so I am told,
And its genealogical tree is old;
For ever since Adam and Eve began
To build up the curious race of man,
Has existed the House of "They."

Gossip mongers and spreaders of lies,
Horrid people whom all despise,
And yet the best of us now and then
Repeat queer tales about women and men,
And quote the House of "They."

They live like lords and never labor,
A "They's" one task is to watch his neighbor,
And tell his business and private affairs;
To the world at large they are sowers of tares—
These folks in the House of "They."

It is wholly useless to follow a "They"
With a whip or a gun, for he slips away
And into his house, where you cannot go,
It is locked and bolted and guarded so—
This horrible House of "They."

Though you cannot get in, yet they get out,
And spread their villainous tales about;
Of all the rascals under the sun,
Who have come to punishment, never one
Belonged to the House of "They."

—Ella Wheeler Wilcox.

"Judge Not"—II.

T. H. BLENUS.

In our article of Jan. 18, we suggested that our Savior condemned precipitancy and malignity in judging our fellowmen. We also believe he condemned rigor of judgment. If after we are clearly convinced of the failings of our neighbor or brother; if after a thorough examination we are reluctantly compelled to believe that he is criminal, we should be careful to do nothing but what sound reason and the principles of our religion approve. This we are sorry to write is not always the case. Those who judge with precipitancy and malignity condemn without pity and without sympathy and charity. Too often new rigors are added to the divine law. The crime committed is exaggerated. No excuse is sought or tolerated for the fallen one. Everything calculated to aggravate his guilt is displayed, and from perhaps this single failing darkest consequences are deduced with reference to the entire character and conduct. The most rigorous severity is called "love of virtue," "zeal for religion," or the "good of the cause," etc. We fail to find any article of our faith and hope authorizizg him who has such need of mercy, to withhold mercy from another. What precept of the gospel of Christ justifies such unhallowed, such inhuman severity? What part of the revelation of God teaches us not to pity the unhappy wanderer from the paths of duty or of virtue? What divine instruction tells us to execrate, dishonor and blame him? We certainly do not learn it from that infinite mercy of God which prompted him to give his only begotten Son to die for sinners. Do we learn it from the life and character of the Master, who suffered the scoffs, the insults and buffetings of men without retaliation? Do we learn it from the exhortations to brotherly love which he so often inculcated by precept and example when addressing his disciples? We most certainly do not. "Brethren, if a man be overtaken in a fault ye which are spiritual restore such an one in the spirit of meekness, considering thyself lest thou also be tempted," is the exhortation of an inspired instructor.

We have considered these condemned judgments chiefly in relation to the heart. But they do not remain where they originate. "From the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh," and cruel conjectures, odious suspicions and slanderous thoughts are communicated to others. This second crime, a sin of the deepest dye, is, if possible, more directly coudemned than the first, as the evils resulting from it are incomparably greater. When we inwardly judge those around us we are very far from being as innocent, as many persons imagine, yet when these judgments are pronounced to the world we become doubly guilty. What was before a mere opinion becomes a slander. The injury is intensified and multiplied in direct ratio to the number of persons to whom we communicate our unfavorable opinions. Who can stay an injury of this kind? Who can correct the evil done when the discovery is made that the judgment was not only rash but incorrect and unjust? This evil is a common one. Rank, dignity, virtue or age do not prevent persons from being called before this tribunal. The certain and the uncertain, the supposed and the known, the intentions and the actions all are judged. Few, indeed, have not violated this command and judged their neighbor in opposition to duty and truth. It becomes necessary to impress the injunction and to remember the statements of the Savior, that as we judge so shall we be judged.

Adams St. Christian Church Jacksonville, Florida.

Who Is Responsible?

The saloon exists; who is responsible? I am, if (1st) I keep a saloon. The saloon cannot run without some one to run it. I am, if (2nd) I patronize it. For the saloon would not run a day without customers. I am, if (3rd) I petition for it. If the people do not ask for it, those in authority do not grant the license. I am, if (4th) I vote for it. The saloonkeeper is but carrying out my will as expressed by my vote. I am, if (5th) I apologize for it. The business would soon run its course if respectable people did not make excuses for it. I am, if (6th) I do not oppose it. The man who knows of a contemplated robbery and does not use his best efforts to prevent it is accessory before the act. The man who knows of the evils of the saloon and does not oppose it is a party to the evil done. The measure of our responsibility for the saloon is the extent of our ability to prevent its existence.

A GOOD COMPLEXION

Depends upon Good Digestion.

This is almost an axiom, although usually we are apt to think that cosmetics, face powders, lotions, fancy soaps, etc., are the secrets for securing a clear complexion. But all these are simply superficial assistants.

It is impossible to have a good complexion unless the digestive organs perform their work properly. Unless the stomach by properly digesting the food taken into it furnishes an abundance of pure blood, a good complexion is impossible.

This is the reason so many ladies are using Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, because they promptly cure any stomach trouble, and they have found out that perfect digestion means a perfect complexion and one that does not require cosmetics and powders to enhance its beauty.

Many ladies diet themselves or deny themselves many articles of food soly in order to keep their complexion clear. When Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets are used no such dieting is necessary; take these tablets and eat all the good, wholesome food you want and you need have no fear of indigestion nor the sallow, dull complexion which nine women out of ten have, solely because they are suffering from some form of indigestion

Bear in mind that beauty proceeds from good health, good health results from perfect indigestion and we have advanced the best argument to induce every man and woman to give this splendid remedy a trial.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets can be found in drug stores and costs but 50 cents per package.

If there is any derangement of the stomach or bowels they will remove it and the resultant effects are, good digestion, good health and a clear, bright complexion.

J. BRECKENRIDGE ELLIS.

I have this question from Myrtle Dysart, Appleton City, Mo.: "Please state particulars of the Advance Society. What program is carried out at meeting, etc." The Advance Society is for all those who, not willing to spend their reading time upon novels and just stories, have made five resolutions which, if kept, will teach them good habits and train their minds. The resolutions: To read five pages of history each week; to read thirty lines of poetry each week; to memorize a quotation from a good author each week; to read at least one Bible verse every day; to keep a record of what and how much is read. Those who keep these resolutions 12 weeks (a quarter) are entitled to our Honor Roll, and will be printed on the roll as often as they keep a quarter." But in sending me their names they MUST state name of history and of poem read; it is not necessary to copy out the quotations, but give authors. You don't have to state what part of the Bible you are reading. Bible is Bible, all over. Where more than one member lives in a place there a branch society may be formed. The members meet at certain times, read part of a good book (fiction, if they like), give their quotations or vary the program to suit themselves. Next week I will give a sample program. Here is a little piece by Mr. Chas. Dickens, arranged for our members:

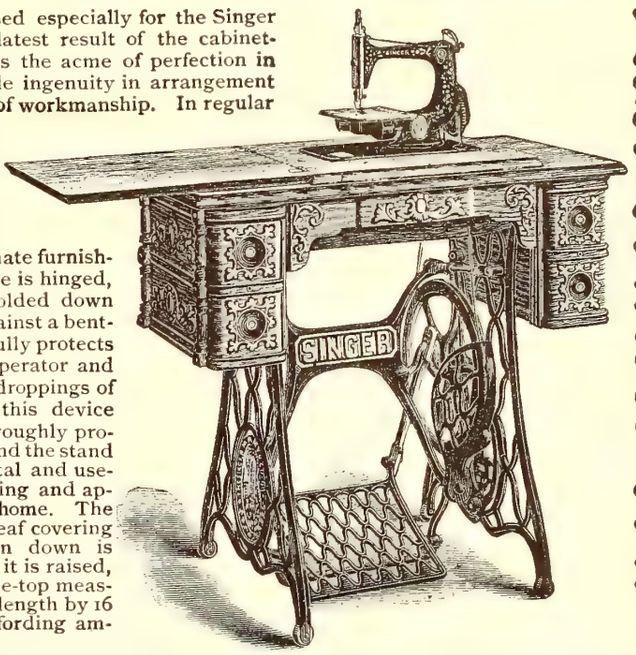
We talk of men keeping dogs, but we might often talk more expressively of dogs keeping men. I know a shaggy black-and-white dog who keeps a drover. He is a dog of an easy disposition, and too frequently allows this sheep driver to get drunk. On such occasions it is the dog's custom to sit outside the saloon, keeping his eye on the sheep, and thinking. I have seen him with six sheep, plainly casting up in his mind how many he had when he left market, and at what places he has left the rest. I have have seen the light gradually break on him, when he remembered, and in a burst of grave satisfaction he has caught a fly off his nose, and shown himself much relieved. When the drover comes out besmeared with beer and gives a wrong direction, the dog calmly disregards him. He takes a sheep entirely into his own hands, remarking with respectful firmness, "If I took these sheep as you direct, it would put them under the wheels of the omnibus. You had better confine your attention to yourself; you will want it all." Then the dog drives the sheep away, with an intelligence of ears and tail, and a knowledge of business that leaves his out of a man very far behind.

The cats of back alleys exhibit a strong tendency to relapse into barbarism. Their linen is not clean and is wretchedly got up. They wear very indifferent fur, and take to the shabbiest cotton velvet instead of silk velvet. I am on terms of recognition with several streets of cats near Drury Lane. In appearance they are very much like the women among whom they live. They seem to turn out of their unwholesome beds into the streets without making any toilet. They leave their young families to stagger about the gutters, unattended, while they frozily quarrel and swear and scratch and spit, at street corners. They show a certain down-at-heel neglect, an air of general giving up of things. I can honestly report that I have never seen a feline matron of this locality washing her face.

Not to prolong these notes by dwelling at length upon the exasperated moodiness of tomcats, and their resemblance in many respects to a man and a brother, I will come to a close with a word on the chickens of back alleys. That anything born of an egg and invested with wings should have got to the pass that it hops contentedly down a ladder into a cellar and calls that going home is a circumstance so amazing as to leave one nothing more to wonder at. Otherwise, I might wonder at the way these fowls grovel in bricks and mortar and mud, and at their forgetting all about live trees, making roosting-places of wheelbarrows, oyster tubs and door scrapers. I wonder at nothing concerning them; I take them as they are. There is a reduced Bantam family of my acquaintance, who are incessently at the pawnbroker's. I cannot say that they enjoy themselves, for they are of a melancholy temperament; but what enjoyment they are capable of they derive from crowding in the side alley. Here they are to be found in a feeble flutter, as if they were newly come down in the world, and were afraid of being identified. I know a low fellow, originally of a good Shanghai family, who takes his whole establishment of wives in single file in at the door of a disorderly tavern, manœuvers them among the company's legs, emerges with them at the side entrance, and so passes his life, seldom going to bed before two in the morning. Over Waterloo Bridge there is a shabby, old, speckled couple always trying to get in at the door of a church. Whether the old lady has an idea of entrusting an egg to that peculiar denomination, or merely understands that she has no business in the building and is consequently frantic to enter, I cannot determine; but she is constantly endeavoring to undermine the front door, while her partner, who is infirm upon his legs, walks up and down, encouraging her and defying the universe. When a transfer wagon, that would crush an elephant, comes round the corner, tearing over these fowls they emerge unharmed from under the horses, perfectly satisfied that the whole rush was a passing property in the air which may have left something to eat behind it. They look upon old shoes, kettles and fragment, of bonnets as a kind of meteoric discharge for fowls to peck at. Peg tops and hoops they account, I think, as a kind of dew. Gaslight comes as natural to them as any other light; and I have more than a suspicion that in their minds the early public house at the corner has superseded the sun.

The Singer Automatic

This table, devised especially for the Singer Automatic, is the latest result of the cabinet-maker's art, and is the acme of perfection in convenience, simple ingenuity in arrangement and thoroughness of workmanship. In regular course, it is supplied either in oak or walnut, but can be made to order in any kind of wood desired, finished to match the most ornate furnishings. The machine is hinged, so that it can be folded down below the table against a bent-wood shield that fully protects the dress of the operator and the floor from all droppings of oil, lint, etc. By this device the machine is thoroughly protected from dust, and the stand forms an ornamental and useful table that is fitting and appropriate to any home. The hinged extension leaf covering the machine when down is folded back when it is raised, thus making a table-top measuring 40 inches in length by 16 inches in width, affording ample room for work.



Sold on Instalments. You can try one FREE. Old Machines taken in Exchange.

JESUS THE BREAD OF LIFE.*

The night that had proven so eventful for the disciples in bringing to them another revelation of the power of their Lord over nature, whereby he had walked upon the waters, was spent by the multitude, whom Jesus had fed, in sleep. When the morning dawned they eagerly inquired for the great prophet, but could find neither him nor his disciples. They had seen the twelve depart from the shore at nightfall and knew that Jesus was not with them. Thinking that he had probably returned in some way unknown to them to his own city of Capernaum, they decided to go there in search of him. The strong wind from the west that had made the journey so difficult and slow for the disciples had driven certain little boats in other directions from Tiberias to the eastern shore; and these the crowd used to recross the lake. Coming to Caperraum they found him calmly teaching in the synagogue and in great surprise asked him: "Rabbi, when camest thou hither?"

The answer of the Master was a rebuke to the carnal spirit that could not see the true purpose of the divine ministry. "Ye seek me, not because ye saw signs, but because ye ate of the loaves and were filled." Notwithstanding the constant craving for miracle, that found expression in the demand that Jesus should work signs, the Jewish people were strangely blind to the meaning of the wonderful works he constantly wrought. They saw no higher purpose in the multiplication of the loaves and fishes than to feed the hungry crowd. They knew not that a marvelous act of creation was being performed before their eyes, and that as when he made the water wine at Cana the Christ was manifesting forth his glory. Their ideals of the Messiah were those which the rabbis had taught them. He was to come as king, restore the throne of David, subdue the Gentiles and rule again in Jerusalem. At his presence the mountains were to drop honey and the rivers run with oil. Grain and fruit would grow without planting or cultivation and every physical want be supplied without labor or care on the part of man. Such were the dreams with which the chosen people beguiled themselves. The wonderful miracle of feeding the multitude was taken by them as a token of the speedy fulfillment of these visionary hopes, and they at once cried out that their king had come. When Jesus refused to permit this proclamation they sought to take him by force, John tells us, and make him king. Thwarted in their desire they turned against him and caviled at his words and deeds. The tide of enthusiasm on which Jesus might have ridden into political leadership being checked, it flowed back upon him and buried him beneath its waves. Henceforth he becomes an object for the growing suspicion and hate of his own people until those who now sought to elevate him to the throne will lift him up on the cross. It has ever been thus with the great souls who sought to lead the world to the hilitops of thought and life. Followed at first by a multitude who think to find personal ease and profit by their ministry, at the first hint of disappoint they are deserted, then persecuted, often to death. But gen rations following garnish their tombs and hallow their memory.

The time has now come for a separation between those who seek the kingdom for the loaves and fishes and those who hunger and thirst after righteousness. Whosoever would follow the Master must be given to understand that his kingdom is not meat and drink, but righteousness and peace and joy in the Holy Spirit. To make the food for the body life's chief end was to neglect the soul's supreme concern. There was food supplied from God that could nourish the immortal spirit, and the mission of the Son of God was to minister this bread to man. All his wonderful works were but the seal of God that Israel might recognize his authority. To work for this heavenly bread was surely the supreme necessity. "What must we do that we may work the works of God?" is the question on the lips of the people. The answer startles them: "This is the work of God, that ye believe on him whom he hath sent." Not mumbling of ritual, not multiplying of sacrifices, not doing of penance, but believing on the Christ—this is the way of life. By faith we walk, by faith we live and without faith it is impossible to please God. This is the faith that works by love, purifies the heart, sanctifies the life and glorifies the nature. How hard it has been for man to learn that religion is to be taken into the very citadel of iife and given supreme authority over heart and head and hands.

True to the course of contradiction they have determined upon, his antagonists demand of Jesus that he shall give added signs of his right to their faith. He had fed him once in the desert place, but Moses had fed them in the wilderness for forty years. Let him continue bringing them bread daily and let him call it down from heaven as the great lawgiver did. The rabbis had come to pay Moses almost divine honors. The miracle of the manna was attributed to Moses' wisdom and power rather than to the grace of God. It was said that God counted him of as much value as all Israel. Some said that the lower part of his body was human, the upper part divine. On his entrance into paradise God left the upper heavens and came to him and the angels came and sang songs before him. The sun, moon and stars craved from him the privilege of shining on the world, and had he refused they would have been blotted out in darkness. To all these fantastic notions Jesus replied simply that Moses was not the source of blessing, but merely God's servant. It was the Father who gave them the manna, who also was now giving them the true, the living bread, which came not merely from the skies, like the manna, but from heaven itself. They had wrongly read the lesson of the manna. Did not Moses himself say that God sent it to teach Israel that man doth not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God? (Deut. 8:3.)

Still blind to the Master's true meaning, and thinking that he meant some additional miracle that should supply their physical needs, they cried out: "Lord, evermore give us this bread!" Jesus answered in words whose truth countless souls have proven in the ages since: "I am the bread of life: he that cometh to me shall not hunger, and he that believeth on me shall never thirst." These words furnish the key to all the mysterious discourse that follows, in which Jesus declares that we must eat his flesh and drink his blood to have eternal life. This figure of eating and drinking to express the reception of one's teaching and spirit by others was familiar to the Jewish thought of that day; and there was no excuse for the literal application that was made by Jesus' enemies. But, as Jesus goes on to indicate, there are many who will not receive God's messenger, whatever the manner of his coming, because they do not honor God in their hearts. But all whom the Father hath given him, the Son shall have to follow him, and they shall believe in him and find eternal life through his gracious power. Those whom the Father hath given him are not certain ones, chosen by arbitrary will without regard to fitness or choice of their own, as the modern doctrine of election would have us believe. As Jesus himself explains in verse 45: "It is written in the prophets, And they shall all be taught of God. Every one that hath heard from the Father and hath learned cometh unto me." It is through hearing of the truth, learning of the divine Teacher, that men are drawn to Christ. He who will not hear cannot live. "Incline thine ear and come unto me; hear, and thy soul shall live," is the message ever sounding in the ears of a lost race, and all who will heed the message shall have eternal life. This is the promise of God.

Blessed gospel of love! The flesh and blood of God's dear Son become a visible sacrifice for sinners, and his beautiful and loving life is offered to us that we may by faith merge our own poor lives into it that its clear stream may purify our foul currents and make them reflect again the face of our loving Father. Christ is to us the bread of life to feed, the water of life to cleanse, the way of life to travel, the crown of life to reward. Lord, evermore give us this bread!

Christian Endeavor.

BY BURRIS A. JENKINS.

TOPIC FOR JULY 8.

THE POWER OF SMALL THINGS.

(Mark 4:30-32.)

Behold how great a matter a litle fire kindleth. Small things destroy, hinder, or create and help. We all remember hearing of the hitch in the machinery of the great Philadelphia Centennial Exposition, how everything was ready, the tremendous Corliss engine, burnished and powerful, was complete, the President was to press the button and set the whole in motion. But when the breathless moment came the mighty wheels refused to stir, there was no response to tho President's touch. The engineers looked the machinery all over and could find no flaw, they readjusted certain fittings, and the trial was made again. In vain—the ponderous pistons would not budge. Again the whole force of experts went carefully over the structure. Then they sent for the builder, who looked it over, too, but all uselessly. At last, with a cry of delight, the chief engineer drew out of a little niche a piece of flat steel no bigger than a knife blade, which had lodged where it did not belong, and immediately the engines seemed to feel a thrill of life, and all the machinery in the halls started to work. In many a life there is a misplaced bit of steel that checks all worthy enterprise.

We often feel an unaccountable sadness or an inexplicable content—so delicate is this instrument, the human soul. Some thought, some remembrance, has floated an instant in our minds and is gone before we are aware, and yet its track is left behind for joy or sorrow, to brighten or darken a whole day through. Just a thought, just a word, may check or develop a whole day's activity; and if a day's, why not a year's?

How small a thing often determines a momentous choice in our lives. Some little consideration out of all proportion to the largeness of the issue decides us in a certain line of conduct, or leads us to choose a year's work or a life's purpose. Whether this should be so or not, it is so. Whether we should override all such small things and bend them to our ends deliberately chosen or should not, it nevertheless is true that we do not. We are turned out of our course by a pebble in the road; a misunderstood word, a moment's pique, or a small untoward occurrence may upset a large undertaking; or a single utterance, a word of encouragement, a casually dropped remark, or perhaps a convenient occasion, a sunny day, a state of momentary good health, may settle the issue of a life.

How needful, then, it is to throw ourselves in the way of favoring circumstances. Let the day begin with bright thoughts, that may tune the whole day's harmony. Let those things be guarded that may inspire, let those dark or sad thoughts be shunned that may deflect us from the better ways of working. And first of all must be the choice of the kingdom of God, so small as a grain of mustard seed, yet so momentous in its accompanying results, all these other things; first of all must be placed the communion with God in Christ, the complete surrender of all thoughts and purposes to Him, and the little things shall lead our lives aright.

A paragraph from Robert Louis Stevenson may fitly close this article: "To be honest, to be kind, to earn a little and to spend a little less, to make upon the whole a family happier for his presence, to renounce when that shall be necessary and not be embittered, to keep a few friends, but these without capitulation, above all, on the same grim conditions, to keep friends with himself—here is a task for all that a man has of fortitude and delicacy."

Bethany Reading Courses.

QUESTIONS FOR THE QUARTERLY EXAMINATION.

BY J. Z. TYLER, General Manager.

The purpose of t ese quarterly examinations is twofold: to secure definite results from the readings and to record proper credit for the readers. The simple reading of the designated sections each week is not sufficient. The examinations are very simple. Answers to the questions below should be written in ink, on one side of the paper only, and sent to the director of that course. Consult no book on the day you prepare the examination paper, so that the paper may represent only what your mind retains. This will tend, not only to strengthen memory, but to cultivate definiteness of attention in reading.

If you are a member of a reading circle having a literary leader let him forward all papers to the directors; but if not a member, send the papers yourself. Do not fail to sign them with your address. Those taking the Bible course should send papers to Herbert L. Willett, University of Chicago, Chicago, Ill. Those taking the course concerning the Disciples should send papers to Frederick D. Power, Vermont Avenue Christian Church, Washington, D. C. Those taking the course in missions should send papers to William J. Lhamon, 2210 Perrysville Avenue, Allegheny, Pa. If possible, all papers should be sent in before Aug. 1. They will not be returned.

Oil and Gold Mines

VISITORS SPEAK OF THE FOOD USED.

Major Desborough, writing from Fresno, Calif., says: "I found Grape-Nuts food 45 miles in the mountains in an old oil camp, where the whole crowd, 10 men, eat it for breakfast every day and every Sunday have it in a pudding for dinner."

General E. C. Machen, an old Confederate soldier, has just returned from an extended trip through the Southwest and along the Mexican border, investigating mining properties. He says: "No matter where I traveled, I always found it possible to get Grape-Nuts and Postum Food Coffee, of which I am very fond."

The Grape-Nuts breakfast food is especially valued by campers and frontier people, as it is already cooked and ready for instant service, and being concentrated, furnishes unusual strength and nourishment, in a small quantity. It is believed that a man can travel farther and exercise more continuously, on a few teaspoons of Grape-Nuts than on like quantity of any other food known.

The reason for this is that there are selected elements in Grape-Nuts that furnish direct to the brain and nerve centers, the necessary particles to rebuild the delicate gray matter contained in these parts, therefore a man continuously fed on Grape-Nuts is absolutely certain of a good condition of the nervous system, which is really the controller of the entire body.
